Second. In order to enable the people to have knowledge of the claims of the candidates or the public measures upon which they vote there should be a public pamphlet issued at Government expense and delivered by Government Postal Service to the hands of each citizen, giving proper space to each candidate and to each measure voted on. In like manner, I have had prepared and submitted a bill, Senate bill 5865, covering this subject. This bill would permit a man without wealth to make the race for the Senate, and also for Congress, and would place his claims before every voter. The bill proposes a partial contribution, so as to prevent irresponsible candidates entering the field.

PREFERENTIAL BALLOT.

Third. I propose a preferential ballot in order to prevent minority or plurality nominations, which is the most important instrument in the hands of the machine politicians, who have always a highly organized, militant minority under their control, led by captains and lieutenants. They divide the unorganized but more honest majority into three or four or more groups by bringing out a number of unsophisticated candidates, each of whom can command a popular following because of individual merit, and with an organized minority of 20 to 30 per cent of the voters, aided by selfish interests and by fraud, the machine can put over its plurality nomination and win the party nomination and then demand party allegiance and party loyalty in support of their unfairly minority-nominated candidate.

The preferential ballot automatically coheres a majority of electors in favor of the candidate most acceptable to the majority and destroys the plurality nomination, which, as I have stated, is the chief agency of the political machine. The Democratic Party can not make effective its platform pledge unless it disarms the political machine. I have had prepared a suitable statute, as above, on this point, Senate bill 5809, which I urgently commend to the attention of the Senate, not only the Democrats but the Republicans as well, because it is equally important to honest Republicans as to honest Democrats that a majority of the Republicans should be permitted to nominate candidates acceptable to a majority of their party members, as it is to the Democrats to have the right to nominate candidates acceptable to a majority of their members.

I remind the Senate that the preferential ballot was adopted by both branches of Congress in the Federal reserve act, section 4, for the selection of the directors of the 12 Federal reserve banks, and this system is perfectly well understood by the country.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Fourth. I have also had drawn in like manner Senate bill 5864, to define corrupt practices in connection with campaigns for the nomination or election of United States Senators and Congressmen, and to provide punishment therefor. I believe that every Senator will agree, whether he be Democrat or Republican or Progressive, in the importance of having the nominations and elections of the Congressmen and Senators free from corrupt practices.

These and other steps are obviously necessary to carry out the pledge of the Democratic national platform at Baltimore, in which the Democratic Party offered itself to the country as "an agency through which the complete overthrow and extirpation of corruption, fraud, and machine rule in American politics can be effected."

PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY.

I think we should provide for the nomination of candidates for the Presidency and the Vice Presidency by the preferential primary ballot, and that proper statutes should be drawn and enacted covering this point along the line recommended by the President in his annual message last December.

The Democratic platform upon this point declared:

The movement toward more popular government should be promoted through legislation in each State which will permit the expression of the electors for national candidates at presidential primaries.

In order to have uniformity in the 48 States, Congress should lay down a few fundamental rules, which would be a minimum condition imposed upon the States in this legislation. At present Congress requires the States to conform to certain rules in selecting Senators, and the constitutionality of the imposition upon the States of a reasonable requirement in regard to this matter will not be denied, since it is the practice of a hundred years.

The State primaries on presidential, senatorial, and congressional candidates could be ordered to take place the second Tuesday in June, beginning in 1916, and the national convention authorized and required to meet within 30 days thereafter for the sole purpose of ratifying the primaries and writing the platforms.

The conventions should consist of nominees for Congress, for the Senate, and of hold-over Senators not defeated in the primaries.

The Federal Government within its sphere is as sovereign as are the States within their sphere, and the Federal Government can and should by statute indicate the minimum requirements that should be provided by the laws of the several States in perfecting the right of the Federal Government to have its officers nominated and elected by a majority of the people, safeguarded against fraud and corruption. If the minimum requirements are not provided by the State law, then the Federal requirement should apply, as in the case of the recent statute for the election of Senators.

If the Democratic Party now in power leaves the country under the machine-rule system, with the door wide open to fraudulent practices in nominating and electing Senators and Members of Congress, after its solemn promise to the American people and after it has been trusted with power by the American people, for the chief purpose of controlling the special interests and the vicious alliance between corrupt business and corrupt politics, it will undoubtedly receive severe condemnation for violating these vital promises so intimately affecting integrity of government.

I submit, therefore, the following resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Senate resolution 399.

Whereas the party now in power appealed to the American people in 1912 upon the following statement:

"The Democratic Party offers itself to the country as an agency through which the complete overthrow and extirpation of corruption, fraud, and machine rule in American politics can be effected"; and

Whereas it is the sincere desire of all patriotic men of every party to terminate corruption in government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections prepare the bills necessary to more strictly control corruption, fraud, and machine politics in the nomination and election of the officers of the United States, and to enable the people to have authoritative knowledge with regard to the claims of candidates.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand the Senator has offered that resolution and has asked that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. OWEN. I ask its reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 22, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 20, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou great Father soul, above all, through all, in us all; make dominant Thy spirit within us, that we may climb the mount of transfiguration for the moment and behold with wondering eyes the glorified Christ, the finished product, the paragon of human perfection, that we may descend into the valley with renewed faith and confidence, working the works of righteousness with eager hearts and willing hands, looking forward to that perfection for which we all long, which, in the dispensation of Thy providence, waits on the faithful; in Christ the Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CLERK PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 20, 1914.

Mr. SPEAKER: Desiring to be temporarily absent from my office for a short time, I hereby designate Mr. D. K. Hempstead, an official in my office, to act for me and in my stead in any and all official matters that may require the official action of the Clerk of the House of Representatives during my temporary absence.

Very respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, had still further insisted upon its amendments Nos. 28, 29, 33, 40, and 71, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. PERKINS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 661) for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE AT SUNDAY SESSION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates the gentleman from New York [Mr. RIORDAN] to preside to-morrow at the memorial services for the late Representative SULLIVAN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the special order which I ask the Clerk to report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on Tuesday, June 23, 1914, the House stand in recess from 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock p. m.; that the House shall continue in session from 8 p. m. until not later than 11 p. m. During such session it shall be in order to consider in the House, as in Committee of the Whole, bills on the Private Calendar to which there is no objection. The consideration of said calendar shall begin with No. 244 thereon, continuing to the end, after which other bills on said calendar may likewise be considered by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this order?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I expect to ask the House to sit nights until the sundry civil bill is disposed of. Next week is the last week of the fiscal year, and I shall object to any request for any other order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the gentleman from New York gives notice that he wishes the House to sit at night until the sundry civil bill is finished.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12045) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. MANN. I desire to reserve a point of order, and to ask the gentleman if there is a statement.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no statement. It has not been customary——

Mr. MANN. Then I make the point of order that it is not in order to call it up.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order based on?

Mr. MANN. There is no statement with the conference report. The rule requires that a conference report and statement of the House conferees shall be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. There is no question in the world about that.

Mr. RUSSELL. It has not been customary for a long time to file statements with the conference report on these pension bills. The clerk of the committee has been making up these reports, and he has not made up any statements to go with them.

The SPEAKER. Nevertheless, it is the rule that a statement must be printed.

Mr. MANN. I have several times called attention to the fact that there were no statements with these conference reports.

Mr. RUSSELL. I withdraw the report.

BRIG. GEN. CLINTON D. M'DOUGALL.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes to pay a brief tribute to a former Member of this House, a distinguished soldier of the Republic, who was buried this morning in Arlington, the late Clinton D. MacDougall.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, to-day in beautiful Arlington Cemetery was laid to rest the body of a brave and heroic soldier of the Republic, an able lawmaker, a loyal citizen, Brig. Gen. Clinton D. MacDougall, of Auburn, N. Y. He served gallantly from 1861 to 1865, and as colonel of the One hundred and eleventh New York Volunteers was wounded at Gettysburg and in several other battles of the Civil War.

Though born and reared in Scotland, he was an ardent, loyal citizen of the country of his adoption. He served with distinction in the Forty-third and Forty-fourth Congresses from the thirty-sixth New York district, represented by the Hon. Sereno E. Payne, the oldest Member of the House in point of service.

For many years Gen. MacDougall had been the president of the board of trustees of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Bath, in that State. He served his adopted country well and faithfully in many positions, and his memory will ever live in the hearts of a grateful people.

It is a special privilege and honor, as a comrade, to pay this brief tribute to one of the Nation's brave defenders and distinguished patriots. [Applause.]

WIDOW OF THOMAS B. M'CLINTIC.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 661) for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up a conference report on the bill indicated by him and asks that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 845).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 661) for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments to the said bill.

EDWD. W. POU,
LUTHER W. MOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

N. P. BRYAN,
THOMAS S. MARTIN,
COE I. CRAWFORD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The House of Representatives receded from its amendments to pay this widow $2,880 for salary and allowances for one year, and agreed to the bill as passed by the Senate allowing the claimant salary and allowances for two years, or $5,760.

EDWD. W. POU.
LUTHER W. MOTT.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 58, noes 11.

So the conference report was agreed to.

REVENUE CUTTERS.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 4377, the revenue-cutter bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the conference report on the bill S. 4377, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 839).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill S. 4377, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to amendment No. 3 made by the House to the bill and agree to House amendment No. 3; and that the Senate recede from its disagreement to House amendments Nos. 1 and 2 and agree to the same.

W. C. ADAMSON,
T. W. SIMS,
F. C. STEVENS,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. BANKHEAD,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The Senate passed the bill providing four revenue cutters, the House amended the bill, striking out two of them, inserting amendment No. 3, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to supply one revenue cutter with medicines and a physician. The Senate concurred in the first two amendments and concurred in the third amendment with an amendment substantially providing for the same two vessels which the House had stricken out in amendments Nos. 1 and 2. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment to House amendment No. 3 and asked for a conference, to which the Senate agreed, but in doing so used language which might be construed as disagreeing to all three of the House amendments. Therefore the conferees have deemed it proper to use language in their report which expressly agrees to all three of the House amendments, while the Senate expressly recedes from its amendment to the House amendment No. 3 and agrees to the same, so as to leave the bill as it was returned by the House to the Senate, striking out two of the cutters, leaving two authorized, and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to supply medicines and a doctor for one revenue cutter.

W. C. ADAMSON,
T. W. SIMS,
F. C. STEVENS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. POU in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, when the House adjourned on Saturday last it was with the understanding that the first matter to be taken up this morning would be the item in relation to the Frankford Arsenal, which was passed over.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That question can not come up this morning. There is a point of order pending, and the chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee, is absent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had the right to offer an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We want to dispose of the whole matter at once. I think it ought to go over until the gentleman from Tennessee comes back.

Mr. MOORE. A number of us have waited over until the gentleman from New York returned to his bill in order that this matter might be taken up, the point of order pending, as the gentleman recalls.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The matter has been passed over, and I will call it up as soon as the gentleman from Tennessee returns.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Illinois made a suggestion that an amendment was to be offered and the gentleman from New York incorporated that in his motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We did make an arrangement to accommodate the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not think we ought to take the matter up until the point of order is decided.

Mr. MANN. The point of order only relates to one amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That amendment is to provide a certain amount of money for the Frankford Arsenal, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania wishes to offer an amendment providing additional money, and we ought to settle them all at one time.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman understands that we do not want to lose the right to offer an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; we made the agreement that would protect the right of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to offer an amendment.

Mr. MOORE. What is the proposition of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Tennessee is temporarily absent——

Mr. MOORE. And therefore can not decide the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And when he returns and gentlemen who are interested are all here we can call the matter up.

Mr. MOORE. And we will not lose the right to offer such amendments as we desire?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the understanding is that you have the right to offer further amendments.

Mr. MOORE. Do I understand that the whole matter will go over until Tuesday next?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Until the next day we take the bill up, some day next week.

Mr. MOORE. I am prepared to go on with the Frankford matter now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I prefer to have the matter all settled at one time.

Mr. MOORE. I will ask the gentleman this as a matter of general convenience. We have waited patiently here according to the agreement of last Saturday. Can we have an understanding that it will be taken up on Monday or Tuesday morning? If the gentleman says it will come up on Tuesday morning, that will relieve the situation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will take it up when the gentleman from Tennessee returns.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman intend to press the further consideration of the bill on Monday?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall move for consideration of the bill whenever it is in order.

Mr. MOORE. Notwithstanding Monday is District day, according to the calendar?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a matter for the House. I shall make the motion, and the House can decide for itself. I intend to move the consideration of this bill at every opportunity. This fiscal year ends in about 10 days. If the House does not want to progress rapidly, the responsibility is upon the House.

Mr. MOORE. Then, we are given notice to be prepared on Monday, Tuesday, or Wednesday?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I give no notice of any kind except that I want to proceed with the bill as rapidly as possible.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York knows that, as a matter of right, we should return to this matter this morning.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the gentleman has a right to return to it at this time.

Mr. MANN. It was only passed over for the day, but of course it does not make any difference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from North Carolina now in the chair would hardly care to dispose of the pending amendment until the point of order is disposed of, and no further amendment is in order at that place.

Mr. MANN. I think it is in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not, with the point of order pending.

Mr. MANN. It was a matter passed over for the convenience of the chairman, and the agreement was that we should return to it the first day thereafter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The belief was that this bill would be under consideration last Tuesday, but it was shut out because of the conference report on the naval bill.

Mr. DONOHOE. Might we not have an understanding that in case the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is in the chair on Tuesday next we can go back to this item?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the House to return to it as soon as the gentleman from Tennessee returns, whether it be Tuesday or not.

Mr. MOORE. We have been here three or four days, waiting patiently, while the chairman of the committee has been away.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, my absences are so infrequent that when I am absent it is conspicuous, which can not be said of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. Can we have a definite arrangement that this will be taken up on Tuesday morning?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Tennessee is in the chair, and the House considers the bill on Monday, I may call it up on Monday.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman having been absent for three or four days for his own convenience is not inclined to consult the convenience of others.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's statement is so unfounded and unjust that I wish to say that this arrangement was made for his accommodation and not for mine.

Mr. MOORE. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. He did not make the arrangement for me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because he desired to leave the city last Saturday, while I remained here to perform my public duties.

Mr. MOORE. Oh, that is not the fact. The RECORD will disclose the request did not come from me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday last this item was passed over until Tuesday, or the first day that the House resumed consideration of this bill. That was the order and agreement by unanimous consent. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole now being temporarily absent, and there being a point of order reserved, of course the present occupant of the chair will not care to pass upon the point of order; but under the circumstances the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] ought also to consult the convenience of other Members. I notified the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] yesterday that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Frankford Arsenal matter would come up to-day, and that I supposed the point of order and the amendment would be passed over because of the temporary absence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I think the gentleman from New York ought to be reasonable about it. What is the objection to saying it will be taken up next Tuesday?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the House will determine to proceed on this bill on Monday or not, but if it does, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is in the chair, I shall ask that the matter be disposed of at that time. If it has to go over until Tuesday, I will ask that it go over until Tuesday.

Mr. MANN. What is the objection to agreeing now that it will come on Tuesday?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentlemen desire it to go over until Tuesday, I have no objection.

Mr. MOORE. That is all we ask.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps the bill may be disposed of before Tuesday. That will be my hope.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is indulging in a vain hope.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that it go over until Tuesday, if that will accommodate these gentlemen who are anxious to leave.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS.

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For continuing the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park; compensation and expenses of three civilian commissioners, maps, surveys, clerical and other assistance, including $300 for necessary clerical labor under direction of the chairman of the commission, office expenses, and all other necessary expenses; foundations for State monuments; mowing; historical tablets, iron and bronze; iron gun carriages; roads and their maintenance; purchase of small tracts of lands heretofore authorized by law; in all, $57,060.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I have here a matter referring to this entire bill, which will only take one or two minutes' time of the committee. I refer to an article published in the Plate Printer, the official organ of the International Steel and Copper Plate Printers' Union of North America, a subordinate body of the American Federation of Labor, which I desire to read, as follows:

"JAMES C. COURTS—A PUBLIC SERVANT THE VALUE OF WHOSE SERVICES ARE KNOWN OF ALL MEN—HE IS MODEST, PATIENT, KIND, AND COURTEOUS—THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE, SINCE IT WAS SET UP, IN 1865, HAS HAD BUT TWO CLERKS—SERVED UNDER RANDALL, HOLMAN, SAYRES, CANNON, HEMENWAY, TAWNEY, AND FITZGERALD.

"If we were asked the question, What man, among the hundreds of thousands in the Government service, is indispensable in his position? our first thought would be of James C. Courts, clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. Many men, including hundreds of Representatives, have had the same thought regarding Mr. Courts. Time has well demonstrated that no man's services are indispensable; but it is a truth which no man will dispute, that there is not in the Government service to-day a more valuable public servant than the subject of this sketch. And if his compensation were gauged relatively to his value to the Government his salary would be the topnotcher of all those on its pay rolls.

"Mr. Courts was born in the Trinity River country of Texas. When but a boy he moved to Tennessee. He studied law, and the supreme court of that State gave him a certificate admitting him to the bar.

"In 1877 John D. C. Atkins, of Tennessee, was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Knowing young Courts's ability, he made him assistant clerk of that committee. The clerk at the time was Robert J. Stevens, of California. He was appointed to that position by Thaddeus Stevens in 1865. Although he bore the same name as the first chairman of the committee, the two were not relatives. Mr. Stevens resigned in 1883, and Mr. Courts succeeded to the clerkship. He has held the position for 31 years. Mr. Stevens and himself are the only clerks the committee has had since its foundation.

"The committee was first constituted in 1865, and Thaddeus Stevens was named as chairman. Prior to that year the appropriations, with some few exceptions, were made by the Committee on Ways and Means. In the same year another new committee, that on Banking and Currency, was constituted. To this committee was given jurisdiction over all questions of banking and currency. Such questions had hitherto belonged to the Ways and Means Committee. At the same time, all the great appropriation bills were given to the new Appropriations Committee. In 1880 the Committee on Agriculture was given jurisdiction over the appropriations for that department. In 1886 the Committees on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Post Offices and Post Roads, Foreign Affairs, and Indian Affairs were given charge of their respective appropriation bills.

"Prior to 1865 the Government did not have a fiscal year, and there was great looseness in appropriations, so much so that it was always a difficult matter to determine just what were the Government's responsibilities regarding them.

"A notable case in point was an act passed during the war granting bounty to Volunteer soldiers who reenlisted. That was a continuing, indefinite appropriation, and the Treasury honored all claims under it until 1874. In that year Chairman Garfield put through Congress what was called the "covering-in act," and ever since all appropriations have been made for the fiscal years named.

"Prior to 1874 when Congress authorized the construction of a public building the Treasury honored all demands on that account over a series of years until the building was completed.

"Samuel J. Randall was chairman of the committee when Mr. Courts succeeded to the clerkship. He has therefore served under Chairmen Randall, Holman, Cannon (twice), Sayres, Hemenway, Tawney, and Fitzgerald.

"Mr. Courts is modest, patient, courteous, and faithful to duty. These are characteristics of his nature. His fund of knowledge regarding the details of legislation is seemingly inexhaustible. Thousands of Representatives and persons having business with the Appropriations Committee during the past 30 years would attest that they never went in vain to Mr. Courts for information. They would also with one voice declare that his patience, his courtesy, his kindness were never failing.

"Observe him from the gallery as he sits beside a chairman of the committee during the long hours, days, and weeks when the House is considering appropriation bills. A chairman is asked some question regarding some item in the bill. Oftentimes the chairman has not the information at hand. He inclines his head to the clerk beside him, and Mr. Courts in a low voice, not audible in the galleries, gives the desired and correct information. The chairman apparently, to one not a close observer, gives the information without a hitch, as though he had possessed it all the while. This happens scores of times during the consideration of any appropriation bill.

"And so it has been for more than 30 years. Congresses may come and Congresses may go, but James C. Courts stays on forever. The political complexion of the House affects not his tenure. There is not enough political influence in the United States to oust him from his office. That truth tells the story of the value of his services to the Government."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to join with the gentleman from Washington in the tribute that he has paid to a faithful servant of this House whom I have known personally during all of my service here. I can testify to the truth of every word that is stated in his praise in the newspaper article which the gentleman has just read.

But I rose also to pay another tribute this morning. My esteemed and honored colleague, Mr. GOULDEN, has paid a tribute to a resident and citizen of my own town, Clinton Dougall MacDougall. When the gentleman from New York was paying that tribute I was absent from the House attending the last rites to Gen. MacDougall at Arlington. I knew Gen. MacDougall as a young man, as a soldier, and I have known his career since, both in the political and in the business world. I want to indorse everything that his comrade, Mr. GOULDEN, has said. He was an honored citizen of my own town, a faithful soldier—nay, more than that, a brilliant soldier, who never knew fear, who maintained strict discipline, although a volunteer soldier without experience when he went into the Army, a man who rose high on the rolls of the Army during the War of the Rebellion. He was one of the best soldiers that the Republic has produced. He was in many battles and was wounded severely at times, but his unfaltering courage never wavered. He was always true to duty on the field of battle. He had a successful career in Congress prior to my coming here, and I rise to pay this tribute to one of my old friends. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Shiloh National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing a national military park on the battle field of Shiloh, Tenn.; compensation of three civilian commissioners; secretary; clerical and other services; labor; historical tablets; maps and surveys; roads; purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; office and other necessary expenses, $25,800.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 61, line 12, strike out the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York the reason for that amendment, which is similar to the one agreed to in the paragraph preceding?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, a year or two ago it was provided that as vacancies in the office of civilian commissioners in these parks occurred they should not be thereafter filled. When the commissions go out of existence the duties devolve upon the War Department. Vacancies have occurred in some of the commissions and there are not three commissioners, and it is thought advisable to strike out the provision for three commissioners.

Mr. BARTON. The gentleman leaves in the words "civilian commissioners"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and propose to strike out the word "three."

Mr. BARTON. Will that increase or decrease the number?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The number can not be increased, but in some instances where the vacancies occur there will be less than three.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gettysburg National Park: For continuing the work of establishing the national park at Gettysburg, Pa.; acquisition of lands, surveys, and maps; constructing, improving, and maintaining avenues, roads, and bridges thereon; making fences and gates; marking the lines of battle with tablets and guns, each tablet bearing a brief legend giving historic facts, and compiled without censure and without praise; preserving the features of the battle field and the monuments thereon; providing for a suitable office for the commissioners in Gettysburg; compensation of three civilian commissioners, clerical and other services, expenses, and labor; purchase and preparation of tablets and gun carriages and placing them in position; and all other expenses incidental to the foregoing, $50,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vicksburg National Military Park: For continuing the work of establishing the Vicksburg National Military Park; compensation of three civilian commissioners; engineer and clerk, labor, iron gun carriages, mounting of siege guns, memorials, monuments, markers, and historical tablets giving historical facts, compiled without praise and without censure; maps, surveys; roads, bridges, restoration of earthworks, purchase of lands, purchase and transportation of supplies and materials; and other necessary expenses, $42,200.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 62, in line 8, strike out the word "three."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from New York what his purpose is in striking out the number of civilian commissioners? He has already done so in the case of Gettysburg, and now he applies it to the Vicksburg National Park.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As I have already stated, a provision was enacted last year or the year before providing that vacancies in civilian commissioners should not be filled, and as the commissions go out of existence their duties are devolved upon the War Department. Some vacancies have occurred in some of the commissions, so there are no longer three commissioners, and it was deemed advisable to strike out the word "three" and just provide for civilian commissioners.

Mr. MOORE. This would not affect those now in office?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not affect those in office and does not in any way affect the number except as by operation of the law the number is reduced.

Mr. MOORE. I think it is due to say as to the Gettysburg Commission, about which I know something, that perhaps it is unexcelled in the matter of competency and patriotism, and that it has done wonderfully efficient work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not affect anybody who is a member of the commission at all.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman why does he provide an engineer at Vicksburg and not at the other parks? That seems to be a new proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As I recall, at Vicksburg the grounds are much less advanced than at the other parks, and this man has charge of this work, and the two places are combined, and he acts as both clerk and engineer.

Mr. MANN. Have we had this man there before under the appropriations heretofore made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They had an engineer and a clerk and they dispensed with one position, and this man acts in both capacities.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For widening to not exceeding 18 feet and improving surface of roads and for building bridges and culverts, from the belt-line road to the western border; from the Thumb Station to the southern border; and from the Lake Hotel Station to the eastern border, all within Yellowstone National Park, to make such roads suitable and safe for animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles, $75,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I notice in this paragraph just read that there is a new provision, saying that these roads shall be built not exceeding 18 feet wide, suitable and safe for automobiles and other vehicles. I want to know what is the reason this item was put in that provision, "not exceeding 18 feet"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It developed that the roads were being built about 30 feet wide, and the committee believed that roads 18 feet wide were sufficient, and that we should not go to the expense of building roads as wide as 30 feet.

Mr. FOSTER. It is simply a matter of economy?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For instance, the standard road in the State of New York is 16 feet wide. There are reasons why the roads in the Yellowstone Park should be somewhat wider, but to build 25, 50, 70, or 75 miles of road 30 feet in width seemed to the committee to be unnecessary, and we desired to put that limitation.

Mr. FOSTER. All right.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The committee deemed it wise in connection with this item to limit the width of the road to 18 feet. I am not altogether certain but what it will be found that that is rather narrow in some places on these roads, but it came out in the hearings or developed in the hearings that the road leading to the west entrance was being widened to a width of 30 feet, and the committee believed that was an unnecessary and excessive width, and that if these roads were generally widened to a width of 30 feet the cost would be so great that Congress would not be inclined to continue the work. If it shall develop that there are places on these roads where they should be widened to a greater width than 18 feet, that can be provided for hereafter; therefore I did not insist on my objection to this limitation in width, because, as a matter of fact, most of the roads are not being constructed to a width in excess of 18 feet and a large portion of the construction is 16 feet.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to the width of the roads already established where they are around curves and the like? My recollection is that more than 18 feet is absolutely necessary. We all recognize that 18 feet is adequate for a straight course, but where there are sudden turns, as there are many instances in the Yellowstone National Park, it would be necessary to have a much wider road to insure safety.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman is correct, and that was the thought I had in mind. However, the committee was of the opinion that there was a disposition on the part of the engineers to widen all the roads to an unnecessary width, and that 18 feet was as wide a road as would be necessary—at least in the straight stretches. Even under this limitation I suppose the engineer would be entirely justified in widening the roads on the turns.

Mr. STAFFORD. But does not this provision, as the gentleman reads it, absolutely limit the construction to 18 feet, whether on turns or whether it is on straight stretches? There is no exception at all made under this provision.

Mr. MONDELL. There are places where the roads come together, junctures, turns, and curves, where, I think, the engineer could very properly assume that that was an exceptional case; but in any event the road foundation can be made wider than 18 feet. We are not completing this work absolutely, and if after working under this appropriation for a year it shall develop that we have unwisely limited the width of the road we can remedy that. In the meantime this provision, as I say, does not prevent the engineer from making such foundations wider than this.

Mr. STAFFORD. The engineer would be guilty of direct violation of the provision if he attempted to evade it in the manner suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Nothing of the kind. On the contrary, there are roads, so far as the grading is concerned, and so far as the foundation of the roads is concerned, that are, I presume, 40, or even 50, feet wide in the park. Under this limitation the engineer would not be expected to put the finish to the road beyond 18 feet.

Mr. STAFFORD. If he laid the foundation, I believe the gentleman will agree——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say frankly to the gentleman that, personally having a very considerable interest in Yellowstone Park, I was not anxious to have this language inserted in the bill. The committee was inclined to insist on it, and as far as the major portion of the roads is concerned it is wide enough.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am surprised that he is approving it.

Mr. MONDELL. I only agreed to it because it seemed to the committee that there was a disposition on the part of the engineers to widen the roads at some points unnecessarily.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. To what extent have motor vehicles been introduced in the park, and what difference will such introduction make as to the width of these roadways?

Mr. MONDELL. Motor vehicles have not been introduced into the park at all except as regards a country road in the northwest corner of the park in Idaho that is no part of the park system. This widening of the roads is for the purpose of putting them in condition so that they can be utilized for motor vehicles, it being the opinion of the officers in charge that it would be unsafe to allow motor vehicles on the present roads without widening. This is the second appropriation, I believe, for widening the roads. I think last year's appropriation was the first under a plan for the widening of the present roads sufficient to make them safe for both motor and horse-drawn vehicles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, the authorization to widen and improve these roads for motor-propelled vehicles only applies to those roads which lead from the outside of the park, the boundaries of the park, to certain points on the belt line.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Then, may I ask, before motor vehicles can be allowed in the park the whole system of roadways must be widened?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. It is estimated it will cost something over $2,000,000. We have restricted the work that is being done so that persons can go from the place from which they start and into the park by automobiles and reach certain stations. Then, if they wish to go around the park, they can go around in horse-drawn vehicles.

Mr. MONDELL. It is true that while up to this time no provision has been made for the widening of the main circuit, these appropriations for the widening of the approaches, when they shall have been used and the roads shall have been so widened, will make it possible to reach the belt line with automobiles over any of the roads from the outside. Now, there will be no difficulty after that is done in having regulations established under which motor vehicles could go from point to point on the belt line at a time when carriages are not going over the roads. In other words, motor vehicles could very properly be allowed to go from point to point on the belt line at night or early in the morning, at a time when the horse-drawn vehicles are not on the roads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. This appropriation when used is expected to put the roads leading into the park in such condition that motor vehicles can reach the belt-line system from any direction over which there is a road. Thereafter we can either continue widening the roads, or if that is not done, or until it is done—it will be entirely practicable, and I hope it will be done—provide by regulation to allow motor vehicles to pass over the roads at a time when horse-drawn vehicles are not using them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For widening to not exceeding 18 feet and improving the surface of roads and for building bridges and culverts, in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the east boundary, to make such roads suitable and safe for animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles, $20,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that the paragraph is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that. We have not had a decision from the Chair yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I will get a little information first. This is a provision for widening the roads in a forest reserve?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to make a brief statement in regard to the matter?

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman answer the question? Is that a fact?

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. FOSTER. That by this bill you are taking away from the Agricultural Department the right to control roads and build roads and are putting it in this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. We are not taking anything. We are just continuing our jurisdiction.

Mr. FOSTER. Continuing your jurisdiction? You mean extending it.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not mean extending it. I mean just what I say. This road, the East Road, or Cody Road, as it is known, was built out of appropriations carried in the sundry civil bill. It has always been maintained out of appropriations carried in that bill. The item which precedes this has a provision for ordinary repairs for the road. This is simply an item for the widening of that approach as we have widened other approaches. This road was built as a part of the park system out of appropriations carried in this bill, and has always been a part of the park system.

Mr. FOSTER. This provides for widening the roads and building bridges in the forest reserve, which is not a part of the parking system.

Mr. MONDELL. It is true that this road is in the forest reserve; but it is also true that this road was built as a part of the park system, and a part of that was done before this land was in the forest reserve. It is a road started years ago, built from appropriations carried in this bill, and no other appropriations have ever been made for it; no other funds have ever been used either for its construction or repair other than the funds carried in connection with the park item in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. FOSTER. This, though, is a new item in the bill here?

Mr. MONDELL. It is only a new item in the sense that it is for the widening of this road as distinguished from the ordinary repair of the road; it is a new item just as the preceding item was a new item last year.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman speaks of this road being within the park system. Does he mean it is within the area of the park?

Mr. MONDELL. No; it is not.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then it is outside of the park proper?

Mr. MONDELL. It is.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. And it is within the forest reserve?

Mr. MONDELL. It is. But there are two roads leading into the park which are partly within the forest reserve and which have always been carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill in connection with park items. One of them is the road leading from the south, from the Thumb to Jackson Lake. The other is the road leading from the east boundary down the North Fork of the Shoshone. It happens to be in a forest reserve; but that does not change or alter the fact that it is a road built out of park appropriations and maintained always from those appropriations.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. These roads are exclusively in the forest reserve?

Mr. MONDELL. A part of this particular road is in the forest reserve and a part of it is in the park.

Mr. GOULDEN. And it is intended as an outlet from Yellowstone Park to where?

Mr. MONDELL. It is an outlet from Yellowstone Park in the direction of Cody. It is the outlet to the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is a connection between the railroad at Cody or some other station and the Yellowstone Park?

Mr. MONDELL. This road does not extend to within 30 miles of the railroad. It extends only to the boundary of the forest reserve. There are about 30 miles of road that is outside of the forest reserve maintained by the local people.

Mr. GOULDEN. There is a road leading from the railroad station to the terminal of this road, as I understand it?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; a good one.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I believe that while it is true that when this road was built this land was not in the forest reserve, still it is now a part of the forest reserve and under the control of the Agricultural Department, and is not a part of the parking system.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me make a suggestion to my friend before he proposes his point of order. I do not think the point of order is good. But, assuming that it is, the Forest Service has no money to repair this road. It is a road that, so far as the Forest Service is concerned, is of little value to them. It is not the kind of road that they build. They build roads leading across the reserves, having value in connection with forest matters. They would not repair this road if you gave them the opportunity to do so. They have not any desire to repair it. They need their money for expenditure elsewhere. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois has no desire to allow this road to get into a condition where it can not be used, because it is one of the very important entrances to the park. So far as the people of Wyoming are concerned, we would be perfectly willing to have the Forest Service take care of the road, if they had the money to do it or were disposed to. They are not disposed to spend any money on the road, and they have no money available to spend on the road. They need whatever small sums they have elsewhere, for roads leading across the forest reserves or leading from ranger station to ranger station.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I think that this is not a matter that comes within the jurisdiction of the national parks, and I do not believe that that item has any place in the bill providing appropriations for parks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit me, I think the Agricultural appropriation bill carries about half a million dollars for roads in the forest reserves. The roads that are built by the Forest Service, however, are roads that are essential for the proper maintenance of the forest reserves.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, not entirely so. I think the gentleman will recall that many of these roads are built through the forest reserves for the convenience of the people who go through them when it is necessary for them to do so, and also for the purpose of enabling the officials of the Forest Service to go through them. The Government built these roads so that the people may go over them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The appropriations are to enable the Forest Service to build such roads and trails as are necessary for the proper maintenance of the forest reserves. But this road from Cody to the eastern entrance to the park is the road that goes from one of the railroad stations through a forest reserve into the park. If it were put in such condition that automobiles could be used on it, persons can go from Cody to the eastern entrance of the park to the belt line in one day. The road now is not in very satisfactory shape. There has been a dispute for some time as to whether the Forest Service should improve and maintain it or whether it should be maintained as part of the expenses of the Yellowstone National Park.

In the item on page 62 there is included $7,500 for the maintenance of the road in the forest reserve leading out of the park at the east boundary, which is this road, and not to exceed $2,500 for maintenance of the road in the forest reserve leading out from the south boundary. These roads are to be considered as a part of the roads of the park system, and the cost should be charged to the expense of maintaining the park. It is contended—and I think correctly—that the Forest Service is not justified in spending the money that would be necessary to put them in proper shape out of this appropriation.

This is a question of making available roads in the park. After some discussion it was thought advisable to include this item in order to put the road in proper shape. Perhaps it will not cost so much to maintain it hereafter.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Forest Service have control of this reserve, or does the parking system have control?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The War Department, under the language of the other appropriation, maintains it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] make a point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I make a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Before discussing the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the point of order is.

Mr. FOSTER. The point of order is that this road through the forest reserve is not a part of the parking system, and that the roads of the Forest Service are under the control of the Agricultural Department. This attempts to build roads through the forest reserve, which is not a part of the parking system.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, that is not a very clear point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether the Committee on Appropriations has any jurisdiction over the forest reserves?

Mr. MONDELL. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over this road, and I want to lay down two propositions in regard to it.

Mr. FOSTER. They have no jurisdiction over the forest reserves.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I would like to quote a few facts as against the gentleman's fancy.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman may have some fancies himself.

Mr. MONDELL. This is a work in progress; it is an item to finish a work in progress, undertaken and carried on wholly by and under the War Department, now under the supervision of the War Department, always under the supervision of the War Department, never undertaken by the Agricultural Department, and never at any moment under the supervision of the Agricultural Department.

This East, or Cody, Road was first provided for in an appropriation carried in the sundry civil bill in connection with park appropriations, providing for its construction by the War Department by the same officers as constructed the roads within the park. My recollection is that that first appropriation was made some eight or nine years ago. It was carried continuously until the road was completed. It was carried in the same item as the park appropriation, the construction item. In other words, the item was for roads within the Yellowstone Park so much, a certain portion of which was to be used for the construction of the East, or Cody, Road. The road was constructed in that way.

Every one of the park appropriations since the road was completed has carried, as the present appropriation carries, in the item preceding this, a provision in connection with the park appropriation for maintaining this road. The current appropriation bill is as follows:

> Yellowstone National Park: For maintenance, repair, and improvements, $125,000, of which sum $75,000 shall be immediately available, including not to exceed $15,000 for the maintenance of the road in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the east boundary.

That is the existing, current law. That is the way that item has been carried for years.

Now, we have inaugurated some extensive work of improvement in connection with the park roads. That is the work of widening them so as to make them available for motor-drawn vehicles.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. As soon as I get through with this statement.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. And in connection with that enlarging work we have this item that relates to this park road, the part of it that is in the forest reserve and outside of the park.

Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Simply for my own information I want to ask the gentleman if there has grown up a system by which the Federal Government undertakes to construct roads for the State of Wyoming running to the park, calling it a park system, and the Government standing the expense? If so, how long has the Government been doing that?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; there has not any such system as that grown up. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Yellowstone National Park——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I know about the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. MONDELL. Every acre of it that amounts to anything is within the State of Wyoming.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Exactly. We all know that.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a part of the State of Wyoming.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes; but it is a Government reservation, within the jurisdiction of the Government. As I understand, you have an extension of the highways out into the State of Wyoming, which would properly be under the control and supervision of the State of Wyoming, but a system has grown up there by which the Federal Government has maintained these roads for the State of Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course the gentleman is mistaken; that is all.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I should like to know about it.

Mr. MONDELL. This East Road, so called, is about half in the forest reserve and half in the park. It leaves the main park system at the outlet of the Yellowstone Lake, passes over the divide via Sylvan Lake, down Jones Creek, to the boundary of the park, and continues down the north fork of the Shoshone through the forest reserve. The only part that the Government has built is the part in the park and in the forest reserve. There is no part of it outside of the forest reserve. I will say for the information of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] that no States in the West build roads within forest reserves if they can help it. They get no taxes from forest reserves. They receive no income from forest reserves. As far as they are concerned, forest reserves are absolutely unremunerative.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Are all these roads across forest reserves?

Mr. MONDELL. The road that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has made his point of order on, some 29 miles of it, is on a forest reserve.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I was only thinking how convenient it would be for a State, if it has within its borders a Federal park or reservation, simply to have the reservation roads extended out into the State.

Mr. MONDELL. If they will open that forest reserve and give it to the State of Wyoming, we will not ask anybody to build any roads; but it strikes me that the gentleman from Michigan is rather straining a point when he insists first that our lands shall be kept in perpetual reservation, so that we receive no income from them, and then that we shall build roads over them.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I was just thinking of the other States.

Mr. MONDELL. That is far from the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether this appropriation is to be spent wholly within the forest reserve?

Mr. MONDELL. This particular item is to be spent wholly in the forest reserve, as the item which preceded it is to be spent also on a particular section of road. In other words, in this widening of the roads of the park system we have indicated the particular part of the roads which we wanted widened. But the important matter is this: That this is a work in progress; that this road was built by the military officers. It was built by the War Department, and has always been repaired by the War Department under appropriations carried in this bill, and the repairs for this particular road are in the item which precedes this, which is an item that embraces the park roads, all of them, so that it is and has been recognized as a part of the park system.

Now, it happens that this particular section of this particular approach is in a forest reserve, the upper end of the road being in the park; but the fact that the land over which the road is built happens to have been included in a forest reserve, a part of it, since the road was built, does not alter the fact that it is a road built with appropriations carried in this bill, built by the War Department, built by the same officers who have built the park roads, built with the same organization, built with the same tools, built at the same time, and always continued under the jurisdiction of the park officers. It has never been under the jurisdiction of any other department of the Government.

It does not seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that there could be any sort of question in regard to it. If this goes out on a point of order, there are items in this bill for areas or parks entirely surrounded by a forest reserve that must go out. That does not change the situation in regard to this road. If the theory of the gentleman from Illinois were correct, then all it is necessary to do to abolish an approach to a national park which has been built by the War Department and is maintained by the War Department as a part of the park system, is to establish a forest reserve. We know that the forest-reserve officials will not care to take charge of a road of that kind if authorized to do it. The only way they could take charge of this road would be by specific authorization, which would require a change of law to put it under their jurisdiction. Assuming that they wanted it, they have no funds to widen this road.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I understand this appropriation is for the improvement of a road entirely within the boundaries of the forest reserve outside of the national park.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. And it is solely under the Government supervision and control?

Mr. MONDELL. Absolutely.

Mr. RAKER. Then it seems to me that the Government ought to improve those roads, in order to have the approach into the national park.

Mr. MONDELL. The point of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], so far as he has made any point at all, I assume to be that inasmuch as the road is within the forest reserve, therefore we can not appropriate for it on this bill. If that were true, there are other appropriations carried in this bill that would go out on a point of order. Without regard to the location of the road, it was built in connection with the park system by the officials of the War Department, by the same organization that built the other park roads, and it is being maintained by the park appropriation. The only reason why this particular item was segregated is that we are segregating all these items for widening these roads.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to say to the gentleman that when you expend the money for maintaining the park, and the county and State expend money building good roads outside, the Government ought to build good roads on the intervening territory over the forest reserves. The Government has absolute jurisdiction of the forest reserves, and they ought to put those roads in shape, so that the people can have the use of it and get into the park. It is absolutely necessary, so that the people can have the benefit of it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that the people of Wyoming do not use the road to any considerable extent. It is a tourists' road.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I had the pleasure of going over the road, and also the roads in Oregon, and the Government ought to put the roads in shape so that the people can get into the park.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; but the Government ought to do it in the right way.

Mr. MONDELL. As far as the people's interest is concerned, it would be immaterial to them whether the money was spent by the Forestry Bureau or spent out of the appropriation made in this bill. It would make a great deal of difference to the forestry officers, because they have no funds with which to build and repair roads like this.

I appealed to the Forestry Service two years ago when a bridge on this road got into such a condition of disrepair that it was dangerous. I appealed to the local forestry officers, and they said, in the first place, they had not any funds; and, in the second place, it was not the sort of a road that they built and repaired; and, in the third place, they had no jurisdiction over the road; that the War Department had a crew up there at work, and it was for them to make the repairs.

Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BARTON. The suggestion was made by the gentleman from Michigan that the appropriation was more for the benefit of the people of Wyoming. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: I find an item of $211,000 for the improvement of the harbor at Marquette, Mich. Does not the gentleman think that the people would profit more by the building and widening of this road than they would by this harbor improvement?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the hearings disclosed the fact that when the chairman of the committee asked Capt. Knight in reference to this item he answered that this was a new item; that it had never been in any of the bills before. Then he described the road running from the eastern boundary of the park through the forest reserve toward Cody. The length of the road is 28 miles and the estimated cost $56,000. So the $20,000 now being appropriated, according to the testimony, was a part of the beginning of the widening of this road and never had been in the bill before. Therefore it is only the beginning of a new project, this widening of the road, so as to make it possible to travel from Cody to the park with automobiles. That is the history of the transaction, as outlined before the Committee on Appropriations. It will cost $2,000 a mile. This was the beginning, so that it seems to me clearly that it is not a continuing project. It is a different proposition entirely in the forest reserve, and the Committee on Appropriations does not control the appropriations for building roads in forest reserves, and I think it is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman insists that because we are beginning the widening of the road that therefore it is a new project.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAY). Assuming that it is a work in progress, does that give jurisdiction to the Committee on Appropriations necessarily?

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that the committee retains jurisdiction of the works that it builds, unless there is some legislation which deprives them of that jurisdiction. This committee has provided every dollar that has been used for building and the repair of the road. The item that we just passed provides $7,500 for the repair of the road.

The CHAIRMAN. But the point of order was not made against that item.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no other department of the Government that has jurisdiction. The fact that the road is within the forest reserve does not necessarily give the Agricultural Department jurisdiction by any manner of means. We have many public works in forest reserves not under the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a moment on the point of order. While my colleague refers to this as a new project, and in one sense that is true, no one questions, I believe, that this is for the repair and improvement of a road in existence. The item is in order on some bills so far as its being a work in progress is concerned, and the question, I take it, that is bothering the Chair is whether this item is in order on this bill or on the Agricultural appropriation bill. If this were an item for the construction of the new road in the forest reserves, the item would be in order, if at all, on the Agricultural appropriation bill, which carries appropriations for improvements in the forest reserves. The Chair will remember, first, that this road was in existence before the forest reserve was created, under the jurisdiction of the War Department, as an approach to the park. Not only that, but it is now under the jurisdiction of the War Department, not under the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department or the Forest Service.

The CHAIRMAN. How is it under the jurisdiction of the War Department when all the forest reserves are under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. MANN. It is under the jurisdiction of the War Department, as a matter of fact, first, because we make an appropriation, and have for years, for the maintenance of this particular road. Not only is that appropriation carried in this bill, but it is carried in the current law. It has been carried in the law for years, an appropriation for the maintenance of a road in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the east boundary. That is in the current bill, it is in the current law, and it has been carried for years. That maintenance is under the jurisdiction of the War Department. The Chair asks how that could be. This road was constructed before the forest reserve was created, when the land was a part of the public domain, and under the jurisdiction of the War Department, and was retained under the jurisdiction of the War Department when the forest reserve was created. The creation of the forest reserve by a proclamation of the President did not change the jurisdiction of the War Department over this road as an adjunct to the Yellowstone National Park.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the proclamation of the President creating this forest reserve except this road?

Mr. MANN. Probably not.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. No. I do not want to be diverted from the point of order. That is all I want to argue. Whatever may be the theory of it, the War Department retained jurisdiction of that road. The jurisdiction was not taken away, as a matter of fact, nor as a matter of law, in my opinion, by the order of the President creating a forest reserve with certain exterior boundary limits. Congress, then, has repeatedly asserted that the jurisdiction over this road remained in the War Department by making an appropriation for the maintenance of the road by the War Department.

The Chair will readily see that you could not in the Agricultural appropriation bill make any appropriation for this road to be expended by the War Department; that is, it would be subject to a point of order. The agricultural appropriation bill can not carry an item for the War Department to expend, and we would be placed in this attitude if the Chair should sustain the point of order: First, we make an appropriation for the repair and maintenance of the road to be expended by the War Department. That is not only in the law, but that is in the bill, and that would be the effect. The War Department maintains the road, and when it comes to widening the road, which is a form of repair of the road, if this should be carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill, that would be done by the Forest Service, and there would be two jurisdictions over this road. The Forest Service has never exercised jurisdiction over this road. I think it would require a positive statute to change the jurisdiction of the road from the War Department to the Agricultural Department. The road, to begin with, was an adjunct of the Yellowstone National Park. That authority has not been changed, and for years Congress has recognized the jurisdiction of the War Department over this road by making an appropriation for its maintenance, and it has never recognized the jurisdiction of the Forest Service over the road.

Mr. MONDELL. They have declined to accept the jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they would have authority to accept the jurisdiction. There are many pieces of property in forest reserves that do not belong to the Government. The Government does not undertake to determine when it creates a forest reserve by order of the President that all the land included within the exterior limits of the forest reserve belong to the Government. There are many pieces of property in all these forest reserves which belong to private individuals, and even hamlets, villages, perhaps, are within the exterior limits of the forest reserves. The jurisdiction of this road was not changed from the War Department to the Agricultural Department by the order creating the forest reserves; and since Congress has repeatedly recognized the jurisdiction of the War Department and the War Department is now engaged in maintaining jurisdiction over this road by order of Congress, that is where the jurisdiction rests, as it seems to me.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] endeavored to recognize the fact that this did belong to the forest reserve, because he attempted to get an item in the appropriation bill for the Agricultural Department to build a certain bridge, as stated by him awhile ago.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman entirely misunderstood me. I said nothing of the kind. I said I traveled over a part of this road a couple of years ago, and that we came to a bad bridge, and that we asked the forest officer there present——

Mr. FOSTER. Was not that the bridge the gentleman tried to get an appropriation for when the Agricultural bill was up for consideration?

Mr. MONDELL. It was not. I have not tried to get an appropriation for a bridge that I have not gotten. This was a bridge over a small stream. The forest officer was there, and we asked him if he could not use some of the forest funds and put that bridge in repair so that we could get across it, and he said he had no jurisdiction.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the statement. When this forest reserve was created by proclamation of the President, it is very likely that these roads and trails all went along with the forest reserve, and if it is necessary to build this road through the forest reserve from Cody to the eastern boundary of the Yellowstone Park, it is an easy thing for the Agricultural Committee to make this appropriation to build it, and an attempt to put it on this bill and change the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Committee over the appropriation for forest reserves, it seems to me, is out of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a couple of words on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAY). The Chair is ready to rule. It is very clear to the Chair that the forest reserves of the United States are under the jurisdiction of the Agricultural Department, and therefore that any appropriation, speaking generally, made for the purpose of improving forest reserves should be made by the Committee on Agriculture, and that the Committee on Appropriations has not jurisdiction over such appropriations; but in this case it is stated, and not contradicted, that for many years the War Department has had control of this road, that the control has not been disputed by anyone, that the Department of Agriculture has not undertaken to exercise any control over it, and that the road itself has been kept up by the War Department by appropriations made in this bill. Under the circumstances, and applying it to this case alone, the Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken and therefore overrules it.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 49 and to offer the following amendment as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Pou). The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to page 49. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For what purpose?

Mr. LEVY. To offer a substitute for that section.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us hear it read first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 16 to 24, inclusive, on page 49, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Valuation of property of carriers: The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to advertise for bids from financial experts for the purpose of carrying out the objects of the act providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce and amendments thereto, and to secure information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, and to award the contract to the lowest bidder. Said valuation shall be completed within four years and shall not exceed $5,197,000; and to enable said commission to carry out the provisions of this section there is hereby appropriated $1,000,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve the right to object for five minutes.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, the reason I offer this is that the appropriation in the item contained in this bill is some $1,900,000. I have here an estimate made by a very distinguished expert in railroad values, and he asked me to submit the following estimates to you. That estimate is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 24, 1914.

Hon. JEFFERSON M. LEVY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LEVY: I respectfully request you to submit to Congress the following proposition on my behalf:

That upon a duly authorized and executed contract I will value the United States railroads and carry out the provisions therefor of the Federal valuation act, which passed the House of Representatives December 5, 1912, the Senate, with amendments, February 24, 1913, and was approved March 1, 1913, entitled "Enabling Interstate Commerce Commission to value property of common carriers and prescribing certain methods of procedure; in the physical valuation and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors, amending an act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, by adding thereto a section known as section 19a."

The valuation of each property to show, as required by act March 1, 1913

Original cost to date.

Cost of reproduction new.

Cost of reproduction less depreciation, with analysis of methods with reasons for differences.

Other values and elements, if any, with analysis of methods with reasons for differences.

Original cost, lands, rights of way, terminals, owned or used at time of dedication, and present value.

Original and present cost condemnation damages or purchase in excess of original cost or present value.

And show in addition to requirements of act—

Potentialities.

Going value, whether decreasing or increasing.

Possibilities.

Probabilities.

Strategetic value, if any, of location.

Strategetic relationship to competitors.

Strategetic relationship to general and specific commodities carried.

Show as required by act March 1, 1913—

Properties held for purposes other than those of common carrier, original cost and present value, with analysis of each and reasons for differences.

History and organization of present and previous or subsidiary corporations.

(In the matter of histories of railroads, I now have the most complete data extant; in many instances more complete records of their individual acts than the companies themselves.)

Increases and decreases of stocks, bonds, and other securities, and moneys received upon syndicating, banking, and financial arrangements.

Net earnings.

Gross earnings.

Expenditures of all moneys and purposes for which same were expended.

In regard to stocks and bonds, will show exactly properties upon which they were a lien and the precedence of such lien, that is, first, second, third, or other lien.

In regard to expenditures in operation, will separate actual expense of operation from expenditures for betterments, additions, replacements, and specify expenditures for repairs and expenditures chargeable to depreciation. (Much of the data for this work I now have on hand.)

Further, in regard to the active stocks and bonds, I can show in detail those which have become obsolete or worthless through acts of corporations, and which, through corporate acts, such stocks or bonds should not enter into the cost or value of a specific company.

Show as required by act March 1, 1913:

Amount and value of any aid, gift, grant, or right of way or donation to any carrier or previous corporation, by the Government of the United States, or any State, county, municipality, individuals, associations, or corporations.

Any grant of land to any carrier or previous corporation by the Government of the United States, or any State, county, or municipality, and the amount of money derived from the sale of any portion of such grants, and the value of any unsold portion thereof at time acquired and present time.

Also value of any concession and allowance made by such common carrier to the Government of the United States, or to any State, county, or municipality, in consideration of such aid, gift, grant, or donation.

All facts, data, and records used to be in the form of legal evidence, adapted to each valuation in an orderly and classified manner, so that they can be availed of at any time in the future upon any required date or upon the hearings upon tentative values subject to review.

From the facts deduced, reconstruct the present method of accounting promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission and formulate a modern, up-to-date, and comprehensive system of accounting under the provisions of section 20 of the act to regulate commerce, so that the books and records of a railroad will show from the trial balances, as reports rendered to the Interstate Commerce Commission, the actual and real status of each company, and from which the tangible and intangible values may at all times and at any time in the future be deduced.

All of this work and valuation to be begun within 60 days from date of signing and execution of contract and finished within from 3 to 4 years from date of beginning, for the sum of $5,197,000, to be paid $100,000 upon execution of contract and balance in monthly installments, as work progresses, with 10 per cent reserve until last payment is due, such sums when so paid to be in full for the work above referred to.

I further agree to give a reasonable and fair bond as security for the faithful and full completion of the work.

I will also further agree that in all matters of assistants—adaptation being equal—to give preference to the available skill, first, in the Army and Navy; second, in the civil-service lists; third, to the general American public, reserving the right of choice and determination of the most efficient skill required in the different departments, and also reserving the right of instant removal for want of skill or efficiency or the discovery of lack of high moral character, so that when the work is finished the Government will have a corps of assistants of the highest skill and qualifications in matters of railroad valuation and knowledge.

Very respectfully,

E. C. M. RAND.

BRIEF OF FEDERAL VALUATION ACT—H. R. 22593.

Passed House of Representatives December 5, 1912.

Passed Senate with amendments February 24, 1913.

Approved March 1, 1913.

Enabling Interstate Commerce Commission to value property of common carriers and prescribing certain methods of procedure.

Physical valuation and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors.

Amending an act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, by adding thereto a new section, known as section 19a.

First. Each piece of property: Original cost to date; cost of reproduction new; cost of reproduction, less depreciation, with analysis of methods, with reasons for differences. Other values and elements, if any, with analysis of methods, with reasons for differences.

Second. Original cost of lands, rights of way, and terminals owned or used at time of dedication and present value. Original and present cost of condemnation damages or purchase in excess of original cost or present value.

(Can give, in addition—going value, potentialities, possibilities, probabilities, strategetic relationship to competitors, strategetic relationship to general and specific commodities carried.)

Third. Property held for purposes other than those of common carrier. Original cost and present value, with analysis of each and reasons for differences.

Fourth. History and organization present and previous corporations. Increases and decreases stocks, bonds, and other securities and moneys received. Upon syndicating, banking, and financial arrangements. Net earnings. Gross earnings. Expenditures of all moneys and purposes; same expended.

(Can give in detail properties upon which stocks and bonds are or have been liens upon; stocks and bonds which have been forfeited by foreclosure or otherwise.)

Fifth. Amount and value of any aid, gift, grant, or right of way or donation to any carrier or previous corporation by the United States Government or any State, county, municipality, individuals, associations, or corporations.

Any grants of land to any carrier or previous corporation by the United States Government or any State, county, municipality, and the amount of money derived from the sale of any portion of such grants and the value of any unsold portion thereof at time (acquired) and at present time.

Also the value of any concession and allowance made by such common carrier to the United States Government or to any State, county, or municipality in consideration of such aid, gift, grant, or donation.

Paragraph 9. Commission from or proscribed. Method of procedure, Form in which result shall be submitted. Classification of elements that constitute ascertained value.

Investigation shall show value in whole and separately, value each State, Territory, and District of Columbia classified in detail.

Paragraph 10. Commence 60 days after approval and reported as progressed to Congress, beginning each session thereafter, until completed.

Paragraph 11. Coiner pursuant to commission or its agents from time to time as required maps, profiles, contracts, reports of engineers, other documents, records, papers, or copies of any or all.

Free access to agents; cooperate and aid.

Paragraph 12. Commission keep informed as to extensions and improvements or other changes in condition. From time to time revise and correct and revise and correct valuations.

Paragraph 13. Carriers' report as commission requires.

Paragraph 14. Thirty days' notice when tentative valuation is completed and before such valuation shall become final by registered letter to carrier, Attorney General of the United States, governor of the State, and such additional parties as the commission may prescribe, and allow 30 days in which to file protest. If no protest, valuation becomes final.

Paragraph 15. If protest, then hearing. Final determination, prima facie evidence in Interstate Commerce Commission proceedings.

Paragraph 16. If in trial—Interstate Commerce Commission—court refer to Interstate Commerce Commission to hear and determine question value and report back to court Paragraph 17. Applies to receivers and operating trustees; forfeit $500 each offense.

Paragraph 18. Attorney General at request of Interstate Commerce Commission to prosecute and secure writs of mandamus.

Paragraph 19. Amending title as at beginning.

MEMORANDUM OF PARAGRAPHS IN RE ANSWERING FEDERAL-VALUATION ARGUMENTS.

Is the appreciation of commodities the depreciation of money?

Changes in rates of wages for substantially all kinds of labor and in prices of most commodities has materially altered the purchasing power of money.

Railway rates have not been adjusted to this diminished value of money.

The involuntary and unsolicited reduction in railway rates has gone so far as seriously to threaten the stability of railway wages and railway income. Eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, 15-ton car, New York to Chicago, 10,500 gross. No change in class rates. Produces same to-day.

Chicago to New York—basis rates east Mississippi River and north James, Potomac, and Ohio Rivers.

More than 40 per cent of gross receipts of railways is expended in payment of employees.

Employees—now about $1,100,000,000 per year; 10 years ago were $700,000,000.

The dollar of 1897 will purchase 20 per cent less labor to-day.

An increase in rates for to-day of over 30 per cent would barely give the roads the same earning power they had 15 years ago, and then not make up the unprovided-for depreciation alone, saying nothing of supercession and obsolescence or reasonable advance in facilities.

Fuel represented about 11 per cent of cost of operation 15 years ago, which was about $1 for fuel for each $17.25 of gross earnings, while to-day it takes $1 for fuel for each $12 of gross receipts.

Taxes have increased during past 15 years over 15 per cent.

Increased cost of regulation owing to increased expenses; costs roads $100,000,000 per year, as follows:

1. Preparation and publication of rate schedules.
2. Compilation of statistics.
3. Litigation under regulatory statutes and expenses.
4. Special appliances.
5. Additional employees and wages, and regulation of hours.

Revenue has been reduced by—

1. Regulatory orders.
2. Suggestions with force of orders.
3. Statutory reductions.

New capital costs more to-day than 15 years ago in interest and discounts owing to lack of security, property being mortgaged to limit money found only upon basis of surplus from earning, reached through additional preferred stock, additional common stock, company notes.

Interstate Commerce Commission shows rates declined 1897 to 1907 0.798 to 0.759 mills per ton, 4.89 per cent.

The indirect loss from withdrawal of confidence in American railroad investments would be immeasurable. Such a readjustment would become archaic almost from the outset, because the adjustment of securities based upon the values of to-day might be totally erroneous to-morrow unless the values were made on modern requirements and theories and systematically corrected when the elements of value changed through operation.

Present value depends on the highest practicable use to which a thing may be put.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say under the system we have now in vogue the cost of making the valuation by the Interstate Commerce Commission will cost approximately $25,000,000, and if continued, as proposed, it will take many years. Not alone that, but it will cost equally as large a sum to the railroads of this country, and this eventually will be paid for by the people. It is a great and grave mistake to keep on continuing the system of allowing the Interstate Commerce Commission to hold up the whole country, as it is being held up at the present time, by withholding decisions.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. LEVY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I did not understand how much this gentleman says this valuation can be made for by private contract.

Mr. LEVY. My amendment states that it must not exceed $5,197,000. Here is Mr. Rand's estimate. He offers to give a fully protected contract in his statement, which I have placed in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But who would take his estimate?

Mr. LEVY. He offers to give security.

Mr. MANN. But who will accept his opinion?

Mr. LEVY. It will be done under contract through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. MANN. How can they agree to the contract?

Mr. LEVY. They make up the specifications, and the lowest bidder gives security for faithful performance of his contract.

Mr. MANN. But who will take this man's opinion as to the values?

Mr. LEVY. The values they would get by this means are better than the Interstate Commerce Commission could secure by selecting——

Mr. MANN. But who would know whether they were or not?

Mr. LEVY. The lowest bidder would give ample security.

Mr. MANN. They could get somebody to do it for $1,000,000. I could do it in a few minutes for a good deal less than that; but when you get it, what good is it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I could do it for $200,000.

Mr. LEVY. It is my purpose to bring before the House the importance of this and see if, in some way or other, we can not avoid this enormous, extravagant expense which will be entailed upon the country for 25 years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. LEVY. Under the system proposed, at least 20 years.

Mr. MANN. But what people will accept the valuation? Does the gentleman himself believe he can give a valuation of the railroads in the United States?

Mr. LEVY. The purpose is to take the lowest bidder who is an expert in valuation——

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is this man's business?

Mr. LEVY. He is a financial expert; but I am not indorsing any particular individual. There are many expert accountants and appraisers in this country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That does not mean anything. I know those fellows.

Mr. LEVY. I am informed Mr. Rand has a great reputation as an expert.

Mr. MANN. How does a financial expert qualify to give the valuation of railroad property?

Mr. LEVY. Because of his ability along that line.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has he worked for the railroads?

Mr. LEVY. I understand by his references that Mr. Rand has worked for the stockholders, and railroads as well, in many cases. He has been selected by important interests all over the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Maybe the railroads are trying to put up a job on us.

Mr. LEVY. My sole object is to correct the evils of the present system, and one that would be more economical and bring the valuation to an early conclusion. The Interstate Commerce Commission is holding the whole country up for two or three years on a decision, whereas many of the courts of this country are not allowed to withhold a decision over 60 days; but the withholding of the present rate decision by the Interstate Commerce Commission has interfered with the prosperity of the whole country. The eastern rates decision should have been decided months ago.

You have given them more power and they are more extravagant than any other department of the Government.

Mr. MANN. We do not agree with that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can not let that statement go unchallenged.

Mr. MOORE. Suppose we spent $5,000,000 to obtain the physical valuation of the railroads of the country, does the gentleman think that, even after we obtained it, it would help us to secure a decrease in the cost of living?

Mr. LEVY. I do not. But I want to say that I am not converted to this proposition. I only wanted to bring it before the House and show the importance of it and in comparison with the extravagant system we have now.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman think we ought to spend $5,000,000 at all?

Mr. LEVY. No.

Mr. MOORE. How would it decrease the cost of living?

Mr. LEVY. I only want to say here that the system we are going on at the present time, of holding the whole country up and hitting at the business interests of the country, is disastrous.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of very vital importance. If there be a doubt in the mind of any other Member of this House, except my colleague, that this work should be done by contract rather than under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I would like to know it. I shall not object to the amendment, if offered, in order that we can get a vote and find out just what the situation is.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I have collected some letters and statistics on the subject of the cotton trade, which I would like to extend in the RECORD. And I ask unanimous consent that I may do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

All public spaces resulting from the filling of canals in the original city of Washington not now under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, except such portions as are included in the navy yard or in actual use as roadways and sidewalks, and except the portions assigned by law to the District of Columbia for use as a property yard and the location of a sewage pumping station, respectively, are placed under the jurisdiction of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army and shall be laid out as reservations as a part of the park system of the District of Columbia: Provided, That in addition to the provision made by section 4 of the act approved July 1, 1898 (Stat. L., vol. 30, p. 570), the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army shall have authority to grant permission to the municipal authorities of the District of Columbia or to any of the executive departments to occupy temporarily spaces derived from original canal locations when required by public necessity or convenience: Provided further, That a statement of all permits granted from time to time hereunder shall be annually reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I do not have much knowledge concerning this matter. As to these public spaces resulting from the filling in of the canals in the original city of Washington, what are they? And if we turn them over to the War Department, why should we then let the War Department turn them over to somebody else?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are quite a number of these public spaces and they are not under the jurisdiction, apparently, of anyone. The District of Columbia has erected some buildings on some of them, and the Department of Agriculture, I believe, has erected some buildings on other portions. The Engineer Department believed that it was desirable to have control over them by some officials of the Government, and, since they had been utilized in this way, not to interfere with such use as was now being had of them, and if it was desirable to permit other use, to give them authority to grant that use. I think that that portion of the provision is not of importance. It might be wise to reserve the right to Congress to determine whether these spaces should be used or not. But there are a number of them, and they should be in the control of some officials of the Government.

Mr. MANN. As to the spaces which are now not occupied by any branch of the public service, either the District or otherwise, I do not see any objection to turning them over to the War Department. But I would not then give the War Department authority to turn them over to somebody else. If they are made a part of the parks, why should they not remain a part of the parks? The gentleman says that some of these spaces are now being occupied by the buildings of the Agricultural Department. There is no exception in here as to the Agricultural Department, I notice.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was mistaken about the Agricultural Department. The buildings I had in mind are in another place. These are the spaces specifically occupied now.

Mr. MANN. Where were the canals, if I may expose my ignorance and thereby get information?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would have difficulty in describing them unless I could point them out on a map to the gentleman. There is one here to the west of the Capitol, if I recall——

Mr. MANN. That was the old Tiber River that ran down there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it was the canal.

Mr. GOULDEN. I remember the canal very well. It ran through where the Botanic Garden is and down through the Mall, and then down to the river.

Mr. MANN. That was the old river.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What was known as the James Creek Canal ran down there.

Mr. MANN. According to that, if the gentleman is correct, it would turn over the Botanic Garden to the War Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MANN. That is what this would do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it would not, because the Botanic Garden does not occupy a portion of the spaces that have been filled in.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Botanic Garden is there. I do not think it occupies the space, but the gentlemen have testified that it did.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say that it ran through where the Botanic Garden is.

Mr. MANN. It is public property all the way across there. The old Tiber River ran through the Botanic Garden space. I do not think that is where the canal was, but I do not know.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will permit me, I had occasion to run across what was said to have been this filled-in canal, and it ran from just about the foot of Capitol Hill, at this southwest corner, down almost parallel with South Capitol Street, and there is an appropriation in the District bill of this year to pave across some broken spaces. How long it has been built in I do not know, and I was told by the engineer of the District that that was the location of this canal that is now being discussed here.

Mr. MANN. How could that canal down here west of the Capitol get down into the navy yard?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I can not explain to the gentleman how it got there unless it had a very circuitous route and went into the Anacostia River somewhere in the locality.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement was made that the purpose of these canals was originally to bring stone to the Capitol. And these spaces, wherever the canals were—these unoccupied spaces—do exist, and I think it is desirable to put them under the authority of some one. As to whether it is wise to permit the War Department to give these temporary permits, it may be a matter——

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is wise. I make the point of order on the proviso commencing in line 14 of the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the proviso.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman would move to strike it out there would be no opposition.

Mr. MANN. There is no question about its being subject to a point of order, commencing with the word "provided" in line 22 and running down to the end of line 25.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will withdraw the point of order, I will move to strike that language out.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all after the word "Columbia," in line 14, to the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves to strike out the proviso from line 14 to the end of the paragraph. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Potomac Park is made a part of the park system of the District of Columbia under the exclusive charge and control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, and subject to the provisions of section 6 of the act approved July 1, 1898 (Stat. L., vol. 30, p. 570).

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I did not get time to look it up, but will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us what are the provisions of the act of July 1, 1898?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It refers generally to the parking system of the District. It places all reservations over a certain area under the jurisdiction of the War Department, and the President, if I recall correctly, is authorized to make certain rules and regulations for the control of the parks, to which certain penalties attach, and it was desired to bring the Potomac Park within the purview of that act.

Mr. MANN. I supposed the Potomac Park was already under the authority of the President to make regulations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is; but this act defines the parking system and authorizes these regulations as to penalties, and this item is to prevent nuisances and abuses in connection with the parks.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Chief of Engineers is authorized to permit, at his discretion, boat clubs to erect, maintain, and occupy boat houses in the portion of Potomac Park east of the railroad embankment, and to provide and maintain landing and mooring facilities along the water front; all such permits to be revocable at will by the Chief of Engineers and to be conditioned upon the payment of such periodical rates of compensation as may be fixed by him; all sums collected hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the said structures and facilities shall be located, built, and altered only in accordance with such plans and specifications as may be approved by the Chief of Engineers, and that the Chief of Engineers may make and enforce such regulations for the maintenance, occupation, and use of said structures and facilities as he may deem proper: Provided further, That a statement of all permits granted from time to time hereunder shall be annually reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask whether it is the intention under this provision to permit buildings to be erected on the portion of Potomac Park lying east of the railroad, along the northern side of that park?

Mr. FITZGERALD. East of the railroad embankment?

Mr. MANN. East of the railroad on the northern side of the park, on the water front there, or the inlet, or whatever it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On the south side.

Mr. MANN. The south side is along the Potomac River.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the place.

Mr. MANN. The highway runs along there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. These boathouses, if I understand correctly, are not to be built on——

Mr. MANN. I think the intention would be to put the houses on the north side in the so-called Washington Channel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. These boathouses are built on floats.

Mr. MANN. And they would be in the way of a view to the river to anyone walking along there or driving on the Speedway.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The roadway along the river is considerably above the level of the river. This practice has been followed in other cities; in the city of New York, for instance, along where the Speedway is built, they have facilities where these boathouses are permitted, and they have a float connecting the boathouses with the land. They are usually small, two-storied buildings where the boats are housed and the upper parts of the buildings are used for the installation of lockers.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I may be mistaken, but my understanding is that they intended to put these boathouses, or make leases for these boathouses, on the Washington Channel side, not on the Potomac River side.

Mr. MANN. I think it is a bad thing to do, either way, in a public park. Why should we permit people, because they want to use the water—a very laudable desire—to ruin the looks of a park that is maintained there for all the people?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not ruin the looks of the park.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have seen them, and I know they do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It makes these parks available for purposes that they otherwise would not be available for. Nobody can go down east of the embankment on the Potomac Park unless he takes a vehicle or takes quite a long walk. If the facilities were there for the boathouses, the river could be utilized for boating, and they would add very much to the attractiveness of the place.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how they would add to the attractiveness of the place.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Would these boathouses be similar to those on the Schuylkill River, in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. They are quite commonly used in parks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. They add to the attractiveness of the parks.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have helped to resist this at home so long that resistance is a second nature with me. There are plenty of places for boathouses, without putting them in the park. If they have any place for boathouses, they ought to be owned by the Government as a part of the park system and not be under the control of a club.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This provision merely permits these boathouses to be placed along there. It gives access to the river to a great number of people who wish to utilize it, and it conduces to the health and development of the people. It is along the most highly progressive lines of legislation that may be suggested.

Mr. MANN. It is along the line of progressive legislation that the moment you get a park every personal and special interest wishes to grab it and put up a lot of little, cheap, unsightly buildings. They could not put up a permanent building that would be decent and appropriate and agreeable to look at, because the permits would be revocable at will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman ever seen a boathouse?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes. Like the gentleman from New York, I live upon a large body of water.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is fresh water.

Mr. MANN. Yes; it is fresh water, and good water, too. It it not the filthy liquid that you have around New York Bay. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has not been to New York lately.

Mr. MANN. No; not as lately as the gentleman has.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman were familiar with the character of the buildings referred to by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE], for instance, those in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, he would not interpose any objections to this provision. Coming from a fresh-water country, like myself, he thinks we have no need of those things, because the water there is too rough for rowing; but the denizens of cities like Philadelphia and New York and Boston have many oarsmen and canoeists who have need of such a combination. The character of the buildings that would be used would not be of the character suggested by the gentleman, but would be of the ornate character of those to be seen in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston. They are permanent and built of stone.

Mr. MANN. The permits are revocable at will, and nobody but a crazy man would build a permanent structure there under such conditions.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Chief of Engineers of the Army would be in control, and he would not permit the erection of an unsightly shanty or shack down there at the water front, but would require buildings in harmony with the location.

Mr. MANN. Ever since this park was established everybody has been trying to grab a slice of it. The Smithsonian Institution wants to get a piece of it for an aeronautical laboratory, or something of that kind, and other people want to get the center of it for their private use.

Now, here comes a proposition to take the exterior of it for a boathouse. When a new park is being built everybody wants to get it for their special interest. I think these parks ought to be preserved for the benefit of the people at large, and that exclusive privileges ought not to be given to anybody.

Mr. STAFFORD. This will be for the benefit of the public at large.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. The public can not utilize it without granting this permit to some one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been suggested that permission be given to lay out a tennis court, a baseball diamond, and a golf course.

Mr. MANN. And they wanted to lay out a race course.

Mr. GOULDEN. They have got a race course there now.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No one has yet suggested setting up a merry-go-round, but that might be suggested. The purpose is to provide facilities where people may go and obtain recreation and exercise under proper supervision. Now, rowing in shells is not such a form of recreation that the Government could easily supervise it. Persons must have some training and experience, and it must necessarily be conducted by private clubs. This merely gives them an opportunity to locate their house along the water front. I am in favor of what has been suggested, of making that part of the park a great recreation center for the people of Washington, and to permit no acquisition of exclusive special privileges by any person for selfish purposes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that there is not in Washington now a single large park where they cater to the man who does not ride, who does not own an automobile.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the very purpose of this provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I speak for those who, like myself, can not afford automobiles.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, he is aware that persons who wish to go rowing at their own expense must go away out here to Georgetown to obtain a canoe or boat. This provision will enable the persons whom he describes to be within easy access of the water.

Mr. MANN. I would have it so that the Government owned a boathouse there and rented boats to everybody alike.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. STAFFORD. This will permit the association of persons for rowing——

Mr. MANN. To grab up a part of the water front.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests is an entirely different matter. I have no doubt, in time, provision will be made for a boathouse where any person may be able to go and hire a boat in which it will be safe for a man who does not use a boat more than once in six months——

Mr. MANN. Like the gentleman from New York and myself. We both of us live in cities which have water fronts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In which it will be safe for such a man to navigate the waters in front of the city of Washington. This is for a different purpose. I would not suggest and would not wish anybody to induce the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to make an attempt to go out in a racing shell.

Mr. MANN. Like the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I am light-headed enough to float. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Illinois is large enough of girth so that he would float anyway.

Mr. MANN. I would not be weazened, like the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. FITZGERALD. With my knowledge of what has been done in this regard at other places, I think this is a very desirable provision to remain in the bill. However, I desire not to take up too much time on it.

Mr. MONDELL. I think if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would investigate these matters——

Mr. MANN. That remark is entirely unnecessary. I have been over to the park to investigate the matter, and I am sure that the gentleman from Wyoming has not, he not being familiar with bodies of water, anyhow.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman always knows more about what some one else has done than they know themselves.

Mr. MANN. That is what every fellow who wants to make an argument throws at me. In this particular case I do know more about it than the gentleman from Wyoming does.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says he knows more about the matter than I do; perhaps so. It so happens that I was at Potomac Park last evening, so that my last visit was quite recent. The gentleman has said that there are plenty of places where boathouses could be built and where boats could be moored, adjacent to Washington. Evidently the gentleman has not investigated that matter, and I have, because I enjoy boating; and I would be very glad to find some place where I could get a boat kept, so that I could have a small boat within easy reach. The fact is, you must either go to Georgetown or else you must go across the river to the vicinity of Alexandria. It is true there is a very limited space down near the old fish market where there is a boat club, but that space is very limited and it is entirely filled up and utilized.

Washington has a magnificent water front. There ought to be a great deal of boating here, very much more than there is. One reason why there is not more is because there never have been satisfactory facilities placed within easy reach where people could keep their boats. Now, this peninsula, reaching out into the river, is peculiarly adapted for that sort of use, and it will in no wise injure it or affect it for other purposes to so use it. It will encourage boating in the city. It will give the gentleman from Lake Michigan an opportunity to keep a boat or hire a boat or secure a boat without going a great distance, and to enjoy a boat on the water adjacent to the city best adapted to boating; and I hope he will not make a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order against the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the construction of necessary retaining walls in Meridian Hill Park, $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that item.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, this is an appropriation for a continuation of work necessary to the preservation and upkeep of this park, which was recently bought and paid for by the United States Government. The committee do not think the item is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chai. would like to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. The committee have not produced any authority for this item, and it is necessary to obtain authority. There is no authority that I know of anywhere for an appropriation for these retaining walls. It is the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to furnish the authority, because they propose the item.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not with the Appropriations Committee on this. I should like to see this go out, but I thought, there being a park there, that the improvement should be made.

Mr. MANN. Here is an item for a retaining wall. I make the point of order. It is not my duty to produce authority for it. I can not do that. I do not think there is any authority for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Telegraph to connect the Capitol with the departments and Government Printing Office. For care and repair of existing lines, $500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am curious to know what telegraph lines are owned by the Government connecting the Capitol with the various departments.

Mr. RAUCH. All the departments are connected with each other and with the Government Printing Office.

Mr. STAFFORD. With telegraph or telephone lines?

Mr. RAUCH. I think the Senate has a telegraph line.

Mr. MANN. I think they have abolished it as we have abolished it. This is an old item, and I think ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. RAUCH. I think it is still in operation on the Senate side.

Mr. MANN. It may be in operation from the Government Printing Office very likely. Does the gentleman happen to have a statement showing how much was expended last year? When we abolished the two telegraph clerks which we had on the House side of the Capitol at an expense of $1,000 or $1,200 each, there was a good deal of talk about how inconvenient it would be for Members of Congress. I wonder if anybody here has ever been inconvenienced. I think during my service in the House I never sent or received a telegram in that way, and I wonder if anybody else ever did.

Mr. RAUCH. I can not give the gentleman that information. I never have experienced any inconvenience.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commission of Fine Arts: To meet the expenses made necessary by the act approved May 17, 1910, entitled "An act establishing a Commission of Fine Arts," including the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference, to be disbursed, on vouchers approved by the commission, by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission, $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. This Fine Arts Commission has been in existence a good while. It has been contended that it has cost the Government a great deal of money. I do not know whether the people have realized the benefit from the amount of money that has been expended in the change of plans for the beautifying of Washington or not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that the Commission of Fine Arts is not the so-called Burnham Commission that proposed plans for beautifying Washington. This is not that commission.

Mr. FOSTER. No; this has to do with monuments, statues, and public buildings.

Mr. MANN. We passed a law a few years ago, to which reference is made in this paragraph, providing that monuments, statues, and everything of that kind, or plans, should be submitted to the Commission of Fine Arts before they were approved; and they have submitted a lot of things to that commission on the Panama Canal—some of them perhaps profitably and some of them an unnecessary expense to the Government. But if you abolish the appropriation, leaving the law the way it is, it would not be possible to carry into effect many acts of Congress, because the department can not proceed in a good many things until the matters have been submitted and approved by this Commission of Fine Arts; that is, where the approval is called for by specific acts of Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. The law provides that before any statues can be erected they must be submitted to the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. MANN. That is my recollection.

Mr. FOSTER. So if the appropriation should go out, they could not do the work.

Mr. MANN. They could not do the work. That was the McCall bill, that passed Congress several years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I do not want to interfere with it. Otherwise I would like to see it go out.

Mr. MANN. I was not enthusiastically in favor of the McCall bill when it passed the House three or four years ago, but still it passed Congress after considerable discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant: For unveiling and dedicating the memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including erecting and taking down viewing stands and putting the grounds in sightly condition, $5,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want some information for the benefit of the Members of the House as to who has charge of ceremonies attendant on the unveiling of various statues dedicated in the city from time to time. Like a good many Members of the House, about a month ago I attended the unveiling of the statue erected to Commodore John Barry. Personally I had no feeling because I was not given a seat in the reserved section where the Senators and their wives, the diplomats and their wives, and the President and members of the Cabinet were seated, but I did have a feeling of humiliation as a Member of this House to see our great Speaker, second in position in control of this Government, seated with Members away distant from the speaking stand and not given the privilege of a seat with the other dignitaries on the special platform. I think it was a humiliation to the House. I do not say that the Speaker was not thoroughly at home in his surroundings and did not like the seat given him, but I believe it was a slight on this Chamber. The Speaker should not have been assigned a seat remote from the others engaged in the ceremonies on that occasion.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he was present at the ceremonies?

Mr. STAFFORD. I was, with a great number of other Members of the House. The House adjourned at 2 o'clock in the afternoon for that purpose.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Did the gentleman have a seat?

Mr. STAFFORD. I did.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How did he obtain it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Through the courtesy of my colleague [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the committee sent every Member of Congress a statement telling when the ceremonies were to be had and asking whether the Member desired a seat; and if so, how many. I attend to such things, or Mrs. Mann does for me, and I received my seats.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I received the communication that the gentleman from Illinois refers to. There was a statement that a reply must be made by the 4th day of May, and I wrote to the official who it was stated would furnish me a ticket. I think his name was Col. Harts, and his street and number given. I requested that I be furnished with tickets, but I received no response to my communication and did not receive tickets.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not finding fault with the treatment accorded Members of the House, but I do say that the person who had charge of the exercises ought to have given greater consideration to the second officer in the control of this Government, the Speaker of this House, than to assign him a seat at a distance from the ceremonies in the broiling sun of a hot afternoon. I do not make any complaint at the instance of the Speaker. But from the dignity of the position he occupies, I felt humiliated that the second officer of the Government should be slighted in that manner.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the Speaker of this House attending ceremonies of that kind would prefer to have a seat where the other Members of the House were given seats rather than to be segregated and set off by himself in a place of small seating capacity?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the great commoner who presides over this House naturally felt more at home where he was, but we were scattered everywhere. Being the second officer in this Government, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the proper place for him was beside the President and the Secretary of State and the other dignitaries who attended the ceremony. I am asking for information as to who has charge of these ceremonies.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman that the unveiling ceremonies of this memorial to Gen. Grant will be in charge of the War Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Were the ceremonies in connection with the unveiling of the statue of Commodore Barry under the supervision of the War Department?

Mr. RAUCH. I understand they were.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think these ceremonies are all held under the jurisdiction of the engineer officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in the city of Washington, who is now Col. Harts, one of the best officers in the Army, and a very efficient officer in this capacity, who succeeded Col. Cosby.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman from Illinois believe that the Speaker of this House should have a seat beside the President of the United States and the other dignitaries rather than to be seated in a remote station?

Mr. MANN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I have noticed all of my life that when it comes to arranging for ceremonies of this kind a great many people who did not get the best seats thought that they or some one else who did not get the best seats—and no one can tell in advance where the best seat will be—was not treated with proper dignity; but, of course, these people endeavor to treat with dignity and great courtesy the Members of Congress. My observation is that on all of these occasions it is the people who are outside of Congress who have the best right to complain, because Members of Congress get the seats—usually the best—and then generally give the ticket to some one else to use.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that on that occasion, at least, anyone attending those ceremonies would have observed that not one Representative was in the select section which had a canopy over it, but that they were distributed throughout the other two sections in the blazing sun, and the members of the Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps, the orators of the occasion, and the Senators and their wives were all given, as they should be, special seats in the segregated section.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Oh, the sun did not blaze on that day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am inclined to think that that was done purposely, so that everybody could have an opportunity to see the Members of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, we are on display here so much that we do not care to be put in the spotlight.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was very grateful to receive a ticket, in order that I might by my presence attest the esteem in which I hold the memory of John Barry.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York knows that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], the House having adjourned early, attended these exercises instead of going to a much more exciting affair, and kicked himself all of the time that he was at the exercises because he was not at the ball game. His feeling in the matter is excusable and perfectly natural.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to my friend that, as I recall, there was no ball game on that afternoon; and if there was, I preferred the unveiling exercises. I had a very good seat; but I do protest against those who had charge of these exercises shunting off into an obscure corner the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and not giving him a preferential seat in the select stand.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Are we under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. We are.

Mr. DONOVAN. What has become of the watch? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do not search me—search the gentleman from Connecticut. [Renewed laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman understands that where sits McGregor there is the head of the table, and that wherever the honored Speaker of this House sat, that seat, by reason of that fact, was the seat of honor at those ceremonies. I think, therefore, there should be no complaint.

Mr. STAFFORD. We so consider it was the seat of honor when it was occupied by the Speaker, but there was a proper place for the Speaker of this House, and that was in the reserved section.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Page 73, line 1, strike out the words "memorial to Gen. Ulysses S. Grant."

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is an unnecessary repetition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman when these exercises are to take place, as far as is now known?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that the statement was made that they would probably be ready for them in September.

Mr. MANN. Of this year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I trust that Congress will not be in session at that time, although I had hoped these exercises might occur when Congress was in session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the statement was made that the contract calls for completion of everything by August 10 of this year, and it is expected that the memorial will be completed then. I therefore assume that the ceremonies will be held in September.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman think the fence around the Botanic Garden will have been removed by that time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it will not. We do not wish it removed by that time. They expect so very large an attendance upon this unveiling that it is believed to be a desirable thing to have that fence up there in order to facilitate policing arrangements and to control the crowd.

Mr. BRITTEN. However, it is the intention to remove that fence as quickly as possible thereafter?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. About two or three years ago we made four attempts to give it away.

Mr. MANN. Not two or three years ago; it was eight or ten years ago, I guess.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arlington Memorial Amphitheater: For beginning the construction, under the direction of a commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, Ivory G. Kimball, representing the Grand Army of the Republic, and Charles W. Newton, representing the United Spanish War Veterans, of a memorial amphitheater, including a chapel, at the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., and in accordance with the plans of Carrere & Hastings, architects, of New York City, adopted by the commission heretofore appointed, $250,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 73, after line 21, insert the following:

"Horseshoe Battle Ground, Ala.: For the erection of a memorial to the men who fought under Gen. Andrew Jackson in the battle at the Horseshoe on the Tallapoosa River, Ala., authorized by the act approved April 2, 1914, $5,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order until I can hear the gentleman from Alabama make a nonpartisan speech on this subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. I said the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. I want the gentleman from Alabama to explain this.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I always make a nonpartisan speech——

Mr. MANN. On this subject; not any other.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not think it was necessary to have any further legislation on this subject. A bill was passed through this House and my good nonpartisan friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] helped me to pass it through the House. It passed the Senate unanimously and was approved by the President, but when we were making ready to lay the cornerstone upon the battle ground at the Horseshoe Bend we discovered that the War Department had ruled that it would take a specific appropriation in one of these appropriation bills and held that the bill which we passed did not specifically appropriate $5,000 for that purpose, and informed me that it would be necessary to get this provision in this bill. They submitted an estimate to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations asking for this $5,000. It has been approved by the department, the bill has already passed both branches of the Congress and has been approved by the President, and I trust there will be——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, although I had hoped the gentleman might tell us the reason for doing this work. I remember his eloquent description before and I thought perhaps he would have added to it somewhat.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, I do not care to take up the time of the House to repeat things that I said heretofore.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman would not repeat.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have some remarks which I am going to submit on that battle ground on the Fourth of July, and I could deliver them here if I had the time, but it would take perhaps an hour and a half to do so, and I will not take up the time of the House now. I appreciate the expressed desire of my friend to hear me on the Battle of the Horseshoe Bend.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized, upon finding that the flood conditions which prevailed in the Ohio Valley in March, 1913, destroyed the property of any lessee from the United States of land or water power, or both, on the Muskingum River, or so damaged the same as to prevent the beneficial use of the premises so leased, upon application of the lessee, to terminate the lease as of the date of the destruction or damage of such property of the lessee, or to abate the rental for such time and in such amount as may represent the loss of the beneficial use of the premises so leased because of such flood conditions. Any lessee who shall have paid to the United States any such rental in respect of which relief is hereby authorized shall have the amount so paid refunded by the accounting officers of the Treasury upon a finding by the Secretary of War that he is entitled to the same. The amount necessary to make all such reimbursements, not exceeding $500, is appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I wish to inquire whether there can be any other claims of a like character to those covered by the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that those will probably not amount to more than $200, and that these are the only claims of this character.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman recognizes it is a purely private claim and has no place in an appropriation bill, and I was fearful that this might be used as a peg on which to hang a great number of other claims that might amount to a tremendous sum.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, it is not quite on all fours with an ordinary private claim. As I understand, the Government owns water power there and the water power was leased. When the flood came it destroyed the buildings of the lessee, and in some places probably destroyed the water power, I suppose, and this proposition is simply to remit the rental of these people whose buildings were destroyed, in connection with the use of the water power, by that flood. They are not making use of the water power now.

Mr. RAUCH. This refunds some rentals they were obliged to pay under the terms of the lease.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was fearful that perhaps it might be used in another body as a handle on which to hang a great many other claims arising through floods when the United States is in no way responsible. That is the purpose of my inquiry. However, I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, on the assurance of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For survey of northern and northwestern lakes, Lake Champlain, and the natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the New York canals, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending, printing, binding, and issuing charts and bulletins, and of investigating lake levels with a view to their regulation, $125,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this paragraph, and I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill at the present time what kind of a survey is this to be?

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the old surveys are obsolete, and this is for deep-draft vessels on the lakes. It is a hydrographic survey.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Well, if it is for the purpose of navigation, then there is nothing upon which to base this appropriation. I understand, of course, that there have been items carried in the sundry civil bill for many years, and perhaps in other bills, providing for surveys of the lakes up there, not for the purpose of navigation, however, but for other purposes. Now, I have not any of those old provisions before me, but this provision seems to go a little further than the others, as I recall them, and it seems to me the provision is too much in the nature of a survey in the interests of navigation to be carried in a bill of this kind.

Mr. RAUCH. The gentleman, of course, is aware that this provision has been carried in this way for a number of years?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understand similar provisions have been in the bill heretofore, but none just like this. I think this goes somewhat further than those heretofore appearing in these bills.

Mr. RAUCH. This is exactly the same as it has been carried heretofore—the same language.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Upon what authority do you base an appropriation of this kind, and what have you been basing them on heretofore?

Mr. MANN. That is precisely the item in the existing law.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; but there has to be some authorization for anything that goes into the sundry civil bill; otherwise, an appropriation is not permissible.

Mr. MANN. This has been under the jurisdiction of this committee for many years. The gentleman will recall that some years ago there was a hot fight in this House as to whether these people had jurisdiction or the Hydrographic Office of the Navy had jurisdiction of these matters, and it was held at that time by the chairman and by the House, after a hot fight, that that item was in order on this bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. What directed my attention particularly to the provision was the use of the words "Lake Champlain." I did not think they had been embraced in any of the provisions heretofore.

Mr. MANN. That is in the existing law.

Mr. RAUCH. I think this provision would be in order, anyway.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not think so, unless there is some existing law on which to base it. But still I take the statement of the gentleman for the fact.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understand these surveys are limited to the Great Lakes and tributaries, like the Niagara River and the St. Lawrence River?

Mr. RAUCH. That is right.

Mr. STAFFORD. And this does not provide for surveys of lakes exclusively within the State lines?

Mr. RAUCH. That is my information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and installation of a boiler on the patrol boat Scout, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, and to be immediately available, $9,000; in all, $94,260.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire whether in any other city of the country except New York City we make a similar provision for this character of supervision and control?

Mr. RAUCH. We do not. No other city is situated as this one.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why does the National Government undertake work of this character, which it declines to perform in other large maritime cities on the coast?

Mr. MANN. There is a special law on that subject in reference to New York Harbor, which I have been hoping we might get extended to Chicago Harbor and generally. I have introduced two bills on the subject—one for Chicago Harbor and one general in its provisions.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose of my inquiry was that there was a possibility of receiving these services, and I would like to have them extended to my own city and Chicago and other cities.

Mr. MANN. So far as that is concerned, there is a special law authorizing this work to be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

For support of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, as follows:

Central Branch, Dayton, Ohio: Current expenses: For pay of officers and noncommissioned officers of the home, with such exceptions as are hereinafter noted, and their clerks, weighmasters, and orderlies; also payments for chaplains, religious instruction, and entertainment for the members of the home, printers, bookbinders, librarians, musicians, telegraph and telephone operators, guards, janitors, watchmen, and fire company; for all property and materials purchased for their use, including repairs not done by the home; for necessary expenditures for articles of amusement, library books, magazines, papers, pictures, and musical instruments, and for repairs not done by the home; and for stationery, advertising, legal advice, for payments due heirs of deceased members: Provided, That all receipts on account of the effects of deceased members during the fiscal year shall also be available for such payments; and for such other expenditures as can not properly be included under other heads of expenditures, $61,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against all in line 17, page 79, after the word "Provided," and the balance of the paragraph. It is a change of existing law.

Mr. RAUCH. I will say that this is in accordance with existing law, and has been carried in this appropriation bill for a number of years in this exact language. It is not, in the opinion of the committee, subject to a point of order. I think in just a minute or two I can produce the law under which this appropriation is made.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to make a short statement. The existing law provides for what is called the "post fund"; that is, the amount that is realized from the proceeds from the effects left by deceased members of these homes. As the original law stipulates, that money is to be expended for the benefit of all the members of the home. Heretofore it has been expended largely for the amusement of members of the home, but an abuse has grown up in recent years under this language wherein this money is expended for other purposes than contemplated originally by the law. It has been expended for the purpose of making up shortages and deficiencies in other appropriations. That is the reason I made the point.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any acquaintance with the administration of this same fund in other branch homes besides the one referred to here—that at Dayton?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; I have.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman's criticism apply to all the homes?

Mr. ANTHONY. It applies to all the homes. I observe that, reading from the report of the board, they are expending this money for purposes that Congress ought to appropriate for, whereas Congress originally intended that the money realized from deceased members should be used for the amusement or common benefit of their surviving comrades. That was the purpose of the law; but instead of that, and in pursuance of the present policy, the money is used to make up a deficiency of fuel at one time and construct a building at another, and the money is expended without any responsibility to the Congress. I think there may be $150,000 or $200,000 in that post fund now, and the president of the board, under the present condition, is able to take that money and use it for anything he pleases, without consulting Congress or anybody else and without responsibility. I do not think the expenditure is proper.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that from this fund which is created under this proviso of the bill the governor of a soldiers' home can use money for any purpose he sees fit?

Mr. ANTHONY. The board of managers can do so, and that means that one man, the president of the board, does it.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, as to this money that goes into the fund, he expends that in his judgment for the benefit of the inmates of the home?

Mr. ANTHONY. That was the original idea of the law.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman give us any idea, or state whether it is true or not that this money is regularly spent for the benefit of these inmates?

Mr. ANTHONY. Very largely it is. For instance, the managers provide amusements, theatricals, baseball games, bands, and things like that for the amusement of the members. That was the original purpose of the expenditure of this money. Now, they have strayed from that so that they expend it for the construction of a building. For instance, the managers of the home can expend $10,000 for the erection of a building for some favored employee, if they want to give him a building.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman mean a residence?

Mr. ANTHONY. A residence for an official of the home.

Mr. FOSTER. And as high as $10,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will not say that exact amount; but he could expend $6,000 or $8,000 or $10,000—along there—perhaps.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me a strange thing that this should be permitted.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman give us some idea of about how much, for instance, for building a residence? Does the gentleman know what they do?

Mr. ANTHONY. There have been no expensive residences constructed at any of the homes in recent years. Those that have been constructed out of this fund are buildings that cost three or four or five thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSTER. Three or four thousand dollars?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. A building for the use of some official in the home?

Mr. ANTHONY. Some employees of the home.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, this fund is derived from the inmates who die without relatives and have some property, is it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; it is from the sale of the effects of deceased members who have no heirs.

Mr. FOSTER. Does it also take the accrued pensions?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; it takes the accumulated pension as well.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, they take from the soldier a certain amount of his pension, and this goes into the fund, and on his death, if there are no heirs, the money remains in this fund?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. What I supposed this was intended for was to afford some little extra pleasures, and so forth, for the inmates of the home.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that that was the original purpose in the creation of this fund, and it was the manner in which the money was originally expended. Now, it is not only expended for construction but the Government inspector, who inspected the Western Branch last year, found that about $8,000 out of the post fund at that branch was expended for the purchase of fuel oil in excess of what was appropriated for by Congress in this bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman give us some idea as to how late or up to what time they have been spending these funds for the building of residences on the grounds, and so forth?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have not the information at hand, but——

Mr. FOSTER. Has it been within the last few years?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. It has been within the last few years.

Mr. FOSTER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that they have bought fuel out of this fund?

Mr. ANTHONY. They have. The Government inspector, Maj. Jackson, detailed by the Secretary of War, in his report to Congress called specific attention to the fact that fuel oil to the amount of $8,000 was purchased at the Leavenworth Branch out of the post fund, notwithstanding the fact that the board of managers had already come to Congress for a deficiency of $6,000 in addition to the amount regularly appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. When was that done?

Mr. ANTHONY. That was done last winter.

Mr. FOSTER. That was done in order to keep from coming to Congress for a deficiency?

Mr. ANTHONY. For a second deficiency. In my opinion it is an actual violation of law, for which the officials who did that should be held responsible.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the same sort of precedent that has been followed for years in reference to this fund?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the abuse has been going on for a number of years. From the desire of the managers to avoid coming to Congress and asking an increase of certain appropriations they have been raiding this fund and depriving the soldiers of the amusements that that money would purchase.

Mr. FOSTER. So that it started in and has been gradually increasing the misuse of this fund aside from the original intention?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. My objection to that is that it is an expenditure of money without any authority of law. I think every dollar of expenditure at these homes should be authorized by Congress. When the money is taken out of the post fund—or the posthumous fund—in this manner Congress knows nothing whatever about it.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that this proviso proposes to add to these expenses provided above. Is that it?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. It authorizes them to make these expenditures.

Mr. FOSTER. But the gentleman's contention is that this fund was created as a fund for the personal benefit of the inmates?

Mr. ANTHONY. I contend that this fund should be used for the common benefit of the men for their amusement, for some extra things for their welfare.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] please indicate the line upon which he makes the point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. The entire proviso. It controverts the original statute creating the post fund.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman would not want to strike out the "$61,000"?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; not the amount of the appropriation, but simply the language of the proviso.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman make a point of order on it?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On what ground?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas makes a point of order on the proviso, beginning on line 17, page 79, and ending with the word "expenditures" on line 21.

Mr. ANTHONY. On the ground of its being contrary to existing legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Kansas has been talking about one fund and this refers to an entirely different fund. There is a post fund and a posthumous fund. He has been talking about the post fund. A few years ago the Committee on Appropriations conducted an investigation——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me make a statement, please.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is not the post fund an abbreviation of the posthumous fund?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is an entirely different thing. The Committee on Appropriations made an investigation, in which it brought out facts which it believed constituted an abuse of the so-called post fund. My recollection is, for instance, that a memorial arch was erected in honor of a governor of one of the homes at one particular branch.

The post fund originated, if I recall the facts correctly, directly from the canteen. Paragraph 472 of article 15 of the Rules and Regulations for the Organization of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers provides how the post fund shall be constituted. The ordinary sources of revenue are the store, the hotels, and the restaurants. The business of these separate establishments is conducted by the superintendent of the post fund under the direction and supervision of the council of administration of the post fund; the net profits of the fund, unless otherwise directed by the board of managers, to be used for the increase of the libraries, the maintenance of bands when appropriations for that object are insufficient, furnishing amusement halls, and such other purposes as will best conduce to the enjoyment of the members of the home. Additional sources of revenue to the post fund are provided for by the acts of July 1, 1902, and June 25, 1910.

Now the posthumous fund under paragraph 405 of article 12——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman kindly describe that fund again?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the posthumous fund. It comprises such money and effects of the deceased members who have not executed the agreement provided for in the act of June 25, 1910, as are found on their persons and in the custody of the surgeon, together with any sum received from the sale of property of such members in the hands of the quartermaster; but it does not include pension money standing to the credit of deceased members. There are two distinct funds—the post fund and the posthumous fund.

Now, the provision in the bill to which the gentleman makes a point of order refers to the proceeds of the sales of effects or receipts on account of the effects of deceased members. Now, in the sundry civil bill approved August 18, 1894, is the following provision:

That the balance of the posthumous fund, including the amount invested in bonds pertaining to that fund, that may be in the hands of the treasurer of any branch of the home on July 1, 1894, shall be transferred to the appropriation for "Current expenses, 1895," of that branch home—

If the Chair will now follow the language of the provision, I will read further—and thereafter all receipts on account of the effects of deceased members shall be credited to the appropriation for "current expenses" of the fiscal year during which such amounts were received, and all repayments of such amounts shall be made from and charged to the like appropriation for the fiscal year in which such repayments shall be made.

So that the language in the pending bill is strictly in conformity with the law crediting to the appropriation for "current expenses" for the current year the receipts from the sale of the effects of deceased members.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be a better business method for Congress to appropriate directly the money required for the expenses of the homes rather than to authorize in this manner the expenditure of money from funds of this kind? Would it not be better to have these special funds go into the General Treasury?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it would be a good deal better. It would require some changes in connection with the control of certain funds connected with the National Soldiers' Homes; but the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, which has jurisdiction over the legislation on these matters, and his inquiry might more properly be raised in that committee rather than addressed to me, because the Committee on Appropriations can only appropriate in accordance with the existing law.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that the board of managers have every year been making a report of conditions at the homes, and that report has come to Congress. The Speaker refers that report to the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member, and the report is duly buried there. Nobody ever sees it. This year is the first time in the history of that committee, as I understand it, that that report has ever been brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is due to the fact that there has been a change in the House. The report was duly buried in that committee during the 16 years that the gentleman's party was in control of the House; but now, since the Democratic Party has had control of the House, when this report went to the Committee on Military Affairs under the able direction of the distinguished chairman of that committee [Mr. HAY], instead of the report being pigeonholed, as it formerly was, according to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas, that committee has performed its duty of examining that report, and I assume will recommend——

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman right there——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; you will not say it right there.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assume that committee will recommend such legislation as will be appropriate under the circumstances.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have the floor, and yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not stop me in the middle of a sentence. I can not stop in that way.

Mr. ANTHONY. Go ahead and finish up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have said all I want to say.

Mr. ANTHONY. The whole trouble lies in the fact that the committee of which the gentleman from New York is the chairman is called upon to appropriate for these institutions, whereas the reports are referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which has no authority whatever in the premises, no right to make a single appropriation for these homes. The result of this divided authority is found in the business conditions which exist there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The truth of the matter is that during the years the gentleman from Kansas has been in the House he has never raised his voice in criticism of these matters. Whatever abuses were disclosed in the expenditure of the post funds were not discovered by the gentleman from Kansas, although he was a member of the majority for a number of years.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman has never claimed that they were.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and some things have aroused his activities in this matter. The Committee on Appropriations merely recommend appropriations in accordance with the law.

If that law should be changed, I should be glad to join with the gentleman in having proper legislation enacted; but I have all I can do to perform what work falls legitimately to this committee in connection with the mere appropriation of money, without attempting to suggest what legislation might be proper in many of these respects. In this instance, however, we are merely appropriating in accordance with the law. That is all we have a right to do, and that is what we should do.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Subsistence: For pay of commissary sergeants, commissary clerks, porters, laborers, bakers, cooks, dishwashers, waiters, and others employed in the subsistence department; the cost of all articles purchased for the regular ration and the subsistence of civilian employees regularly employed and residing at the branch, their freight, preparation, and serving; aprons, caps, and jackets for kitchen and dining-room employees; of tobacco; of all dining-room and kitchen furniture and utensils, bakers' and butchers' tools and appliances, and their repair not done by the home, $250,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Strike out, in line 6, page 80, the figures "$250,000" and substitute therefor "$303,990.32."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, of the amount of $250.000 appropriated in this paragraph, the sum of $215.961.30 is the amount actually expended for subsistence, or the feeding of the soldiers at the Dayton Home. Now I think right here is the point where Congress ought to step in and provide sufficient funds, so that these men can be properly subsisted.

The other day I called the attention of the House to the fact that at the Regular Army Soldiers' Home, here in Washington, the War Department is allowing 35 cents a day for the subsistence of its veteran soldiers. That means that they are provided with ample food of great variety, and the men are contented and happy.

At Dayton, Ohio, under the parsimonious management of the board of managers, in their extreme anxiety to cut down the cost of subsistence to the soldiers there to the lowest possible notch, they have screwed it down to 22 cents a day. Perhaps that provides sufficient rough food to maintain a soldier in active service, but it has been demonstrated time and again that it is not sufficient to maintain old men and the feeble and invalid soldiers in these homes. They need a greater and better variety of food. The increase I have provided is 25 per cent in the amount which is allowed, an increase of about $51.000 covering this branch. Instead of being excessive, it will only bring the cost of the ration up to 30 cents a day in the Ohio home, and the same increase should be made for subsistence at all the other branch homes. That is little enough, in comparison with what the Regular Army soldiers are getting in the Regular Army homes. I think the House ought to step in here and do away with the complaints that are coming from the Volunteer homes in regard to the insufficient food supply.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], as it probably would be desirable to increase the appropriation for subsistence at these homes, and thus improve the standard of living. I do want to comment, though, on his remarks criticizing generally the national soldiers' homes of the country. In a speech in the House on the 9th of the present month he criticized the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, an institution located in the western part of South Dakota. When that item is reached in the bill I intend to submit some further remarks and read some letters and newspaper articles refuting charges that have been made against this institution by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN]. Inasmuch as the gentleman has raised the question of insufficient subsistence at these institutions, and states that there is a complaint against the management generally of all the homes, and that they are not properly conducted and provided for, I am going at this point to read a letter from an old soldier, a veteran of the Civil War, a man who had a long military service, who has been a member of the Battle Mountain Sanitarium on two or three occasions. Before doing so, however, I wish to say that I am in sympathy with the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] that the appropriations for the subsistence of these homes might be materially increased, and ought to be increased, especially so when we consider that at some of them the amount expended, I believe, is as low as 24 cents a day for each member, which hardly seems sufficient to properly provide subsistence for men, especially many who may be invalids, who ought to be well cared for, not only with necessities but with some luxuries, that they are entitled to. With reference to the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, which has been assailed by the gentleman from Kansas, I want to read this letter the old soldier that I have referred to, who resides at Neligh, Nebr., wrote to his home paper:

HIGHLY PRAISED IN LETTER FROM OLD SOLDIER.

BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM,
Hot Springs, S. Dak.

The NELIGH REGISTER.

GENTLEMEN: I have just returned from the Battle Mountain Sanitarium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., and will pen a few lines for the benefit of the old soldiers who are afflicted and need to build up. I have nothing to sell, no contribution to ask, but I think it's the finest place I ever knew for a man to regain his former self. The fresh mountain air, the water, and the baths, the kind treatment received, ought to help any afflicted person. In the first place, the men who preside over the institution are as fine a lot as the greatest who preside over our Nation at Washington, and from the governor down to the smallest employee seem to exert themselves to their utmost capacity from the time they enter their duties until the close of day to provide and make the members of the institution comfortable. They have as good doctors as the Government provides and there are no pains spared to make you comfortable. Many go who are able to return to their homes when they have received treatments, while many who from wounds and the long nervous strain have not been able to battle with life. There they have got to remain, but, remember, the official authorities stand ready to receive you with outstretched hands. I think the governor is as fine a man as I ever met; not a word did I hear against the doctors or the men in authority while I was there. I was there 24 days, and my neighbors knew how feeble I was when I went away. They congratulate me on my appearance now, being hardly able to walk when leaving here August 15, returning yesterday. I have been there twice before and received similar results. But I am just a man born of woman and of the "earth earthy," and possess the weakness of clay, and have not the language to express my appreciation of the Battle Mountain Sanitarium under its present management.

Respectfully,

E. W. WRIGHT, Neligh (Nebr.) Register.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. However much information the gentleman from Kansas may have about the insufficiency of the subsistence, the officials of the Government charged with the responsibility disclose that the subsistence is sufficient and that these men can be subsisted for the amount which is allowed. It has been the custom of the Committee on Appropriations during my service upon it to appropriate the sum requested for subsistence in all of these homes. They have never made any reduction from the amount estimated unless the board of managers when before the committee indicated that for one reason or another the amount estimated was not necessary.

The current appropriation, according to my recollection, was $260,000 and the estimate for the next year was $255.000. When the estimates were before the committee Mr. Harris said that those estimates had been revised and they only asked for $250,000, and that is what the committee recommend.

Now, here is the per capita cost of subsistence at this branch. Maj. Harris said that the per capita cost of subsistence was $81.30 a year, which is 22.2 cents per day. That is the smallest of any of the branches.

Now, in the report of Maj. W. P. Jackson, inspector general of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers, made from September 8, 1913, to November 29, 1913, he gives the average cost of the raw materials per day, with and without the special diet. Last year these rations cost, on an average, 17.11 cents, 21.67 cents, and 22.54 cents. A ration of 20 cents a day, he says, exclusive of the cost of service, would be ample to supply the first-class feed service to the general mess.

This is the Inspector General of the War Department who makes that statement. I have now, Mr. Chairman, a copy of the report made by A. W. Smith, of Topeka, Kans., under the date of May 16, 1914. It is by Col. A. W. Smith, appointed by Mr. Washington Gardner, a Member of this House for a great many years, well known to many Members, at present commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic. Col. Smith made an inspection of the Western Branch, in connection with some statement that had been made as to bad conditions in that branch. He gives a menu of the National Soldiers' Home, Western Branch.

Besides the general mess there is a hospital mess, feeding about 450, and an old men's mess of about 300. These messes, in addition to members cared for, feed a large number of civilian employees.

Reports of investigations made, not by persons partial to the management of the homes but by the persons who are solely interested in the men who live in the homes, have been to the effect that the feed is ample and of the best quality.

These are not young men. They are men advanced in years, afflicted with many ills, suffering from different diseases, and at a stage of life and condition that makes it not an easy matter to manage a home in which there are large numbers of them. So special care is taken to ascertain whether they are treated properly. I believe we should treat them as any reasonable man would expect. No one expects the Government to have them live in unparalleled luxury, but they should be kept in decency and in comfort, and ample provision should be made for their comfort and happiness. That has been done.

I am not an advocate of the board of managers. I am in a position rather where it is my duty to be their critic, but I think we should not be unfair or unjust in our criticism of public officials in the management of the public business, whether we be in sympathy with them politically or for any other reason.

My investigation leads me to the conclusion that these men are as well cared for as they should be. This committee, on matters of this character of subsistence and other items necessary for the maintenance of the home, acquiesced in the recommendations of those in charge of the homes for money. I think we can not justify an increase by 25 per cent of the money requested for subsistence for one of these homes where no information other than a statement of a Member on the floor that in his opinion the amount appropriated is inadequate.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the committee has given all that was asked for by those in charge of the home?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. The estimate was $255.000, and the board of managers, when appearing on behalf of their appropriation, stated that $250.000 was sufficient. That reduction was due to the fact that there is a perceptible reduction in the number of men in the homes. The committee has always given the amounts requested, and I think that there is nothing more that the committee can be expected to do. Inasmuch as there is much criticism of the subsistence in these homes, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a report made by Col. Smith of his investigation of the Western Branch, as he was the representative of the Grand Army of the Republic, appointed by the commander in chief of that body.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report referred to is as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., May 16, 1914.

Col. CHARLES W. BLODGETT,
25 The Roanoke-Clifton, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: Having been appointed by Commander in Chief Gardner as one of the committee to inspect the national soldiers' homes, and in pursuance of instructions received from you as chairman of said committee, I have the honor to report that I visited the Western Branch, located near Leavenworth, Kans., on May 11 and 12. I went without previous announcement, in order that I might find the home in its everyday condition.

Having been a member of the board of managers of the Kansas State soldiers' home at Fort Dodge for several years, I had some practical knowledge of the needs and management of an institution of that character.

I was exceedingly fortunate upon arrival at the national home to find Col. Wadsworth, the Government's inspector, there, who had come to make his semiannual inspection. Like myself, he had come without announcement. He invited me to accompany him on a tour of inspection of the various barracks and buildings of the home. We made a most thorough and minute inspection of every department of the home, its equipment and management.

The site of this home comprises a tract of 640 acres near Leavenworth, Kans. The home consists of over 75 buildings, comprising 17 barracks, mess halls, hospital, library, theater, officers, and civilians' quarters, hotel, power house, ice plant, greenhouse, stables, office buildings, storehouses, chapel, morgue, two band stands, store, electric-car station, etc.

The present membership of this branch is nearly 2,800, of whom about 2,100 were present, the others being absent on passes or furloughs. During the last fiscal year this branch cared for 4,118 different individual soldiers.

About 90 per cent of the members of the home are Civil War veterans, the remainder being soldiers of the Spanish War, Indian campaigns, foreign service, etc.

The general mess hall of this home accommodates about 900 at a sitting, and, on account of the large number, two sittings are required in serving each meal.

It is the custom of the home to prepare the menu or bill of fare for a week in advance, and I here submit the menu for the week I was there:

[Print 12.]

H. CRAMPTON,
Commissary of subsistence.

The quality of the food purchased is the best in the market, and it is furnished in ample quantities and sufficient variety and is prepared with skill and care.

We made a thorough inspection of the dining room and the table after the meal had been put upon it and before the inmates were admitted and found that everything upon the table was in first-class shape and of good quality. After the meal another inspection was made, and it was discovered that there was ample upon the table of every kind of food contained upon the bill of fare.

Besides the general mess, there is a hospital mess, feeding about 450, and an old-men's mess, feeding about 300. These messes, in addition to the members cared for, feed a large number of civilian employees.

In order to supply vegetables in season and milk to the various messes a garden of 60 acres is cultivated and a dairy of over 60 cows maintained. In addition to the milk supplied by this dairy, 250 gallons are daily purchased by contract.

The water supply at the home is furnished by the city of Leavenworth and is the same as is furnished at Fort Leavenworth and is as good as the average city water.

AMUSEMENTS.

Amusements are furnished the members of the home free, consisting of motion pictures, baseball games, band concerts, a library containing 9,000 volumes, reading rooms, billiard hall, card room, quoit-pitching grounds, boating, fishing, etc.

The chapel is arranged for both Catholic and Protestant service, and regular religious services are held.

HOSPITAL.

There are 355 patients in the hospital, which is divided into 17 wards. A surgeon in chief and 4 assistant surgeons, with 12 trained nurses and several male nurses, all of whom are at the patients' call, both night and day, are in attendance.

A matron, who looks after the sanitation of the hospital has no superior in any like institution in this country. Everything is supremely clean, and everything is being done for the comfort and welfare of the members that medical science and human sympathy can command.

One ward in the hospital is set apart for tubercular patients, so they are not confined in the same room with patients with other ailments.

The hospital in its management and equipment, in my judgment, is equal to any in the land. The beds are the very best that can be made, and are faultlessly clean. The sanitation of the hospital is absolutely superb. The food supply is such as the doctors recommend for the patients.

We visited the cold-storage plant and found the meats as good as the market affords.

The storehouse is supplied with the best of everything. Evidently it is the policy of the board of managers of the Government to buy nothing that is not first class.

The 17 barracks where the men are quartered were inspected and found to be in first-class condition. Each barrack contains from 140 to 160 men. The barracks are divided into rooms, containing from 20 to 36 men. The inmates are required to keep everything in order in their rooms and themselves clean. One of the noticeable features, when I entered the home and came in contact with the membership, was the clean, healthy condition of the inmates.

I interviewed many as to their treatment and the food supplied and the necessary comforts which would naturally be expected in such a place, and I failed to hear a complaint from any man.

The home has a very extensive laundry and dry-cleaning plant, and no one is permitted to wear dirty clothes. When a uniform becomes soiled it is sent to the dry-cleaning plant where it is put in excellent condition.

The discipline of the home is as humane and lenient as possible to maintain dignity and good order. Gov. Cooke is a man with fine business qualifications, was a good soldier, and is peculiarly adapted for the position he occupies. He is very popular with the inmates.

Having made a thorough investigation, as I formerly stated, of every department of the institution, and having made many inquiries from the inmates as to their treatment and their comfort, etc., I can not see where there is anything lacking to make it an ideal place for an old man to spend his declining years.

The only one article of food that I could suggest any improvement in would be the coffee. It is not as strong as we used to get in the Army nor is it just such as I would like now, but the quantity is more than ample. It is served in bowls which hold 8 ounces, about equal to two ordinary cups of coffee. There is no limit to the quantity that a member may have.

The cemetery is beautifully located and neatly kept and contains about 5,000 of our departed comrades. Every six months the Government furnishes markers for the various graves. All the funeral services are military.

As an appendix to this report I am inclosing you a copy of the rules and regulations, which will give you exact knowledge of what the discipline requirements are, and also the fire protection, which you will readily observe is a very important matter.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. W. SMITH.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I have listened attentively to the speech of the chairman of the committee, and I am quite surprised that he would rise here with that statement and oppose increasing the estimate as submitted. The bill of fare for Sunday, I agree, would be acceptable to an old soldier, but when they furnish the old soldier with one good meal a week and then pare it down so that they do not give him any vegetables except potatoes at the noonday meal, and when the evening meal consists merely of bologna sausage, bread, butterine, and coffee, it stirs my sympathy, and I rise in protest. I think these old soldiers in their declining years should have something more for their evening meal than bologna sausage, bread, butterine, and coffee. You can not make any argument here that on 22 cents a day, with the high cost of living still prevailing, you can furnish any man or set of men a decent bill of fare. It would not be out of the way to increase this item by 50 per cent. Twenty-five per cent is reasonable, and shame upon any representative of the Grand Army of the Republic who is sent to inspect the conditions who will visé a bill of fare such as was stated by the chairman of the committee. I think it is high time that we should do something for these old soldiers. We vote millions of dollars indiscriminately in pensions, but when you come to provide for their bodily welfare by giving them something fit to eat in their declining years objection is raised upon the ground of economy. I think it is false economy, and that these old soldiers deserve better treatment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has been in this House for some years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And he represents a district which has a soldiers' home in it?

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I do not, and never have.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there not a branch of the soldiers' home in the gentleman's district?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, it is quite a distance away.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How far is it away?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is in the district represented by my colleague, Mr. CARY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How far away is it from the gentleman's district?

Mr. STAFFORD. The nearest point is 3 miles.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And there is a branch in Milwaukee?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the gentleman comes from Milwaukee?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And he has never before, in all the time he has been in this House, raised his voice in criticism of the character of food given these old soldiers in these homes.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; because this is the first time since I have been in the House that this outrageous condition has been called to my attention, and if it had been before I would have taken the floor many, many times and protested.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will state this, from what I know of this bill of fare, having read it many times, that it is better than the average constituent of the gentleman enjoys from day to day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, it may represent the condition of the bill of fare of the gentleman's constituents, but not the constituents that I represent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am speaking particularly of the people of Milwaukee.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is misrepresenting and knows nothing about the conditions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I may not; but when the gentleman from Wisconsin undertakes to set his judgment above the judgment of physicians and the judgment of men whose business it is to know how men should be fed scientifically and what is best for them and what is essential for them, he is merely indulging in cheap demagogy, because there is a branch of the National Soldiers' Home in the gentleman's own city.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have never indulged in demagogy near as much as the gentleman from New York has on behalf of appropriations for his navy yard. I have not got the reputation for indulging in demagogy, and it ill becomes the gentleman to make such a statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nevertheless, I make it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know the gentleman makes many rash statements that he can not back up, as he is accustomed to make on some occasions.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Each year these complaints come to Congress about the inefficiency of the food supply of the military homes, and each year the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations answers the criticisms by fulsome eulogies of the board of managers and by reading a faked-up report on the part of some individual sent to the soldiers' homes, whose expenses are paid for by the board of managers, and who is ribbed up to bring in that kind of a report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This gentleman to whom I refer——

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, I know all about how that report was secured, when it was secured, and why. It was secured in advance with the idea of discrediting what I am going to say about this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I think it has discredited the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. And I say it as a Member of this House and with personal knowledge of the truth, and I do not intend to have the gentleman come in and offer to the House a faked, trumped-up report of that kind to offset what I say in good faith to the House without telling the House how it was obtained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This report is made by a man appointed by the commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic. He was a colonel in the Civil War and he resides in the gentleman's own State. He was one of the committee appointed by the commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, and if this is a faked, trumped-up report to discredit the gentleman, it does not originate with me.

Washington Gardner was a Member of Congress, and served on that side of the House for many years with the gentleman from Kansas——

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the gentleman knows he would not be a party to any faked-up charge.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman permit me to finish my remarks? I want to admit that, as far as Washington Gardner is concerned, he is a fine man, a man who is respected highly, and who served in this House with his colleague, the president of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home, Mr. Wadsworth, who is also a fine, genial gentleman, and who has many friends on the floor of this House, and it is natural Washington Gardner should seek to help out his old colleague, and it is natural the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] seeks to help out his old colleague from New York State, Mr. Wadsworth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And your Republican colleague; the gentleman must not forget that.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not care whether he is a Republican or a Democrat. I am pleading for proper treatment of these old soldiers, and if a Republican is responsible for this maladministration I want to say I am horrified and ashamed of it, and I would be glad even to fill these places on the boards with Democrats if they will step in and treat these men as they ought to be treated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We tried to do it, and that side of the House stepped in and kept it from being done.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say further, Mr. Chairman, that there is real cause for the criticisms and complaints of the soldiers' home, and I want to call the attention of the House to a report made by the Senate committee last year when they investigated the California home. Now, what did they report as to the condition of these veterans and the way they were treated? We find that these poor old veterans, most of them survivors of the great War of the Rebellion, in their tottering old age were fed in this manner: A soup plate was put in front of them at noontime. A ration of soup was poured into that plate. The veteran drank it or ate it. In the same dirty plate a ration of meat or potatoes was afterwards placed without even giving them a new plate or washing the old one. They were fed like a drove of hogs; that is the way they were treated. What did the Senate committee find further? It was admitted by home officials that the milk was watered before it went on the table; that 50 per cent of water was placed in the milk that was given these poor old veterans. What did they find further? They found out that they put 19 pounds of coffee to make 125 gallons of coffee to serve to the veterans, and it was admitted that that was about one-half the amount that should go into the ration. Good coffee well made is the first essential of any ration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I believe the gentleman is honest in the statement he is making to the House in reference to the character of ration provided for these old soldiers and I would like to ask the gentleman this question: On what theory of management do the managers of these homes provide a ration of that character? What is the object in providing a cheap ration? Is it to reduce the expenses of management and secure for themselves a record of economy and judicious management?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman is right there. Maj. Wadsworth is unquestionably a good business man, who takes pride in keeping the cost of feeding the men as small as possible, even while wasting money in other directions.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Having experience as a public man, does not he realize the sentiment of the country would justify the most liberal appropriations for the sustenance of the old soldiers?

Mr. ANTHONY. I feel that it should.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Then, let me ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say if it were not for the political pull of the president of the board of managers on the floor of the House to-day these men would be better treated and fed, and the pull is on both sides of this Chamber.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Why is the effort, then, to increase the ration so highly resisted? I can not understand why there should be any opposition whatever to an increase in the amount of the ration.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is simply pride—defending themselves from just criticism. Now, let me call the attention of the committee to a condition at the Leavenworth home that immediately preceded the visit of this so-called official visitor which the chairman of the committee has read to you. Here was the condition that prevailed. That committee speaks of what a pleasant place it is and how ideal are the surroundings. Listen to this. Here is a communication in a local paper out there:

> Veterans report bedbugs thick; while nursing, he was often called upon by sick patients to kill them.

This is in the hospital, remember, and the local paper published the story.

> I take pleasure in thanking you for publishing the story which you did in your issue of September 9. I positively assure you of the truth of same, especially in reference to bedbugs. I will say that a few weeks ago, before the hospital wards and barrack building were fumigated, which has just recently been done, I myself, six weeks ago, was night nurse (male). One of my patients (paralyzed), when I would go to his bed at 12 o'clock to turn him over, I could scrape the bedbugs off his pillow. Many and many's the time he called me to kill them. He had to buy a skullcap to keep them off.
> I suppose that after the ladies you mentioned spoke of bedbugs they had to get to work.

And so forth.

Now, what preceded that? Two very estimable ladies in the town went to the hospital at the soldiers' home to see a dying veteran——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who signed the letter?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is signed, "One Who Knows," an old soldier. He was afraid to sign his own name; if he did, he would not last longer than 30 days at the institution which the gentleman praises so much.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He ought not to remain there at all if he knows of those conditions.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will tell the gentleman a little more. It happened that I was at my home about that time, and two very estimable ladies of the town came to see me, members of the Ladies' Circle of the Grand Army of the Republic. They had paid a visit to the hospital at the Leavenworth home to see a dying veteran there, a man who died shortly thereafter. They were horrified upon going to see this man to find his bed was literally alive with vermin—and remember, gentlemen, this is in one of these institutions so highly praised by the Committee on Appropriations. They came to me and demanded that I make a complaint about it. I took it up before the board and it was denied by the local officials that that condition existed. But it came about that on account of the publicity given the complaint that the hospital was infested with vermin the board was subsequently forced to discharge the chief surgeon and other officials who were responsible for that condition.

The trouble is that these estimable gentlemen on the board do not know how these institutions are being managed. They go there once a year. And I tell you that there are conditions, gentlemen, which prevail at some of the homes which are a shame and a disgrace, and this bedbug incident is just one of them.

Now, to get down to the question of the amendment which I have offered. There is one argument that I am sure the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can not answer, and that is why it is that the Regular Army home allows 35 cents a day to maintain the veteran soldiers in the home here in Washington, and the gentleman would compel the veteran Volunteer soldiers of these homes provided for by this bill to subsist on 22 cents a day. I am making the effort to give these veteran Volunteer soldiers as good rations as the soldiers of the Regular Army homes, and I think it is no more than just or right that that be done.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], and I think there is merit in his statement that there should be an increase, in view of the cost in the Soldiers' Home near Washington City. In other words, there should not be such a difference as 10 or 12 cents per day per man between maintaining the soldiers of the Regular Army as against those who served in the Volunteer Army.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does the gentleman include in the Washington home? Does it not include the service at these buildings?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say that Gen. Young, the commandant, informed me that they allowed about 35 cents for subsistence of the men in the home and 50 cents for the men in the hospital of the home per day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That might include all the service?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is subsistence.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has indefinite information.

Mr. ANTHONY. I can show the gentleman from the reports that I am correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is the gentleman's business to know when he is preparing these appropriations.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not believe the gentleman from Kansas could afford to make a misstatement to the House in reference to this matter. We all know he has given it a pretty thorough investigation, for we have constantly heard him deliver speeches on the floor of the House in reference to the alleged abuses in the home located in his own congressional district.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's criticism of that home commenced when the board of managers declined to burn coal in that home which was produced in the gentleman's district, at a very greatly increased cost, instead of burning oil. That is when it commenced.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is right; and I still contend that I am right and the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I will continue my remarks. [Laughter.]

Regardless of what was the original motive that prompted the gentleman from Kansas, I am led to believe it resulted in his investigation of this subject, and I have that confidence in him that I am loath to believe he could afford to misrepresent a condition affecting the soldiers' home located in the district he so ably represents. But in this connection I wish to state the home located near Johnson City, known as the Southern Branch, is ably administered by Gov. John T. Smith; and during my service in this House I have never received a complaint from a member or ex-Federal soldier in that home from the district I represent. I know the officers of that home personally, and I have had occasion to visit it and examine the various departments, the mess hall, the barracks, the administration buildings, the hospital, and so forth. There is no just cause for complaint of the efficient, faithful, and honest administration of this home, and I challenge any criticism as to the efficiency of it or the high character of the men who administer its affairs.

Now, I have had occasion also to visit the Southern Branch, located at Hampton, Va., two or three times every year during my service in this House. I know personally the governor of that home, Col. Knox, and the other officers who are associated with him in its administration, and I do not believe there can be truthfully laid a just complaint against the efficient, honest, and faithful management of that home. I think I owe it to the men who are connected with the soldiers' home in Tennessee and the soldiers' home in Virginia to make this statement, in view of the many criticisms that have been made on the floor of this House touching the various soldiers' homes in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know to what extent gentlemen who happen to represent districts in which there are soldiers' homes or districts which are adjacent to soldiers' homes may feel called upon to complain on behalf of the inmates of the homes as to the treatment they receive, but certain it is that the inmates themselves make very, very little complaint of their condition. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] has just made a most remarkable statement—that, with regard to the Mountain Branch, near his home, he has never heard a single complaint from an inmate. I imagine it would be very difficult, indeed, to match that condition in any public institution anywhere, particularly when you take into consideration the fact that these men are old, that they are infirm, and that they are at a period of life when trifling matters sometimes seem of great importance to them. There is not an item in this bill that so appeals to our patriotic impulses as these items providing for the care of the old Union soldiers. And I am surprised to hear gentlemen on this side use the language they have used in describing conditions in these homes as being outrageous. It is not true; it never was true; and, least of all, is it true now. These homes are beautiful, spacious, comfortable, well taken care of, and the inmates are well provided for, and in the overwhelming majority of cases they are perfectly content. The board of managers is composed of men of high character, men who served with these veterans, men who are in sympathy with them, and men who would not leave anything undone which would contribute to their comfort. To say that these men limit the fare of these soldiers, deny them proper food, in order that they may make a showing of economy, is to indict them in a way that any man knowing those gentlemen knows is not justified or justifiable. It is true that the sum per day paid for subsistence—simply the cost of food, not including any cost of preparation—does not seem high, but the supplies are bought in large quantities at wholesale, and therefore at a comparatively low price. Furthermore, practically every one of these homes has a large farm. At most of the homes milk and cream are produced from the farm, and they are not included in the cost of the ration.

Those farms produce a large portion of the vegetables used in most of the homes. Those vegetables are not charged up in the cost of the ration, so that as a matter of fact the ration costs very considerably more than is indicated by the price stated as its cost. Not only are these farms well stocked with high-grade cattle, with work horses and implements, but they are of considerable area, capable of producing a considerable portion of the farm products used in the home. We are expending quite a considerable sum for the maintenance of the farms, and not one product of the farms is charged to the cost of the ration. If you add to the cost of the ration the value of all the products produced on the farms and the cost of maintaining the farms, you would find that the cost of the ration would be quite high.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. The total cost is about $150,000, appropriated for these so-called farms. Does the gentleman know that about $75,000 of that amount is devoted to the maintenance of grounds as scenery and not to the production of vegetables?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I do not know it.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a fact.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know anything of the kind. I am not especially well acquainted with these soldiers' homes, but I take it for granted that the money that is spent on these farms is spent economically. I know that a large amount of vegetables are grown.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I take it also that the money is spent in the main for carrying on the work on the farms.

Now, there has been some criticism of the ration, some talk to the effect that there is not a sufficient variety. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] talked about bologna sausage for supper. Well, if on some one day in the year, or on two days or three days in the year, bologna sausage was on the ration, I assume that it was good bologna sausage, and I have no doubt it was palatable and acceptable. Certainly the gentleman does not want us to understand that that was the only article of food that was served.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is true that they had bread and butterine and coffee, but they had nothing else.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is looking for a certain thing which goes with bologna. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. They can get the other thing outside.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand it may be popular to make these criticisms. The gentleman may want to appeal to a few disgruntled persons, to the effect that these members of the home are not being well fed, but I prefer to take the word of the members of the homes themselves rather than that of those advocates and champions of them who criticize the bill of fare. I do not propose to stand here and hear the management of these homes for veterans, as maintained by Congress, challenged unfairly without answering.

Now, this is true with regard to the suppers at those homes—a matter that was discussed before our committee: These men are mostly old. It does not do to feed them heavily on meat for the evening meal. It has been clearly demonstrated that an increase of meat for the evening meal means an increase of a variety of troubles, an increase of the number of men in the hospitals; and, therefore, in order to keep the men healthy and in as good condition as possible, the meat ration is kept small for the evening meal. I suppose that these gentlemen would suggest that we load these veterans with the heaviest kind of meat for the evening meal in order that we may increase the number of those who go to the hospitals.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think they are entitled to some vegetables for the noonday meal besides potatoes?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt they are so furnished.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the only vegetable contained in the bill of fare that was read by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Perhaps that was a fast day.

Mr. MONDELL. Those bills of fare include a variety of vegetables. I have no doubt the bill of fare is satisfactory to the majority of the veterans. I have no objection, so far as I am personally concerned, to having the bill of fare improved if the veterans desire it—to have a greater variety, if they desire it. But I do protest against increasing the appropriation on the ground that these men have not been well cared for and well fed, and that they have not in the overwhelming majority of cases been perfectly content and well satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what conditions may exist in other national soldiers' homes, but I do know from personal examination of the home at Togus, Me., near the State capital, that the food served there and the conditions under which it is served are as good as in the best hotels in Washington.

And further than that, that Gen. Joseph Smith, who until recently has been the Maine member on the board of managers of these national homes, and whose reappointment to the board of managers certain interests have been trying to prevent, has taken an unusual personal interest in the soldiers' home at Togus, and has given a great amount of his time for years looking after that home and the interests of the veterans there, making frequent personal visits to them. I know him so well and his love of the work was so great that it would have been impossible in the soldiers' home near Augusta, Me., for any conditions to exist as to foods that were not entirely proper and right.

Gen. Smith made the Maine home his special charge, and he rendered most important and faithful service to the Government and the veterans during his service on the board. I can personally assure this House that the veterans at the Maine home are well cared for and well fed. I have talked with the veterans; I have visited them at the home; I know what they say, and I have never heard a single complaint. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, as stated a few minutes ago, I intended making some further remarks upon the conditions in the Battle Mountain Sanitarium and the management of that institution when the item making the appropriation is reached. The subject of the conditions in the homes generally, however, having been discussed as they have been, I will ask the indulgence of the House to bear with me while I say what I have to say right now, as it will perhaps be more appropriate at this point than further on in the bill.

I think perhaps that some of the antagonism that seems to prevail in the House against the management of these homes is due largely to some remarks made and to the charges that were brought to the attention of the House on the 29th of April by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], wherein he read a statement made by three men who had been dropped from the rolls at the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, in South Dakota.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] on the 9th of the present month, in a speech in the House, made reference to the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, complaining of the conditions in that institution and referring to the charges that had been made by the three men who had been members of that home, who, as he expressed it, "had been given the gate," meaning that they had been dropped from the rolls.

Mr. Chairman, in general debate on this bill I commented somewhat upon the charges contained in the communication which came from these three men, and which were put in the RECORD by the gentleman from Illinois, and I do not intend to discuss them at any length now, except to say that in the years that I have been in this House and during the time that the Battle Mountain Sanitarium has been in operation in my State I never have received a single complaint from any member of that home, or from any man who had ever been in the home, except the charges that the gentleman from Illinois submitted, copies of which were sent to me.

Some Members of the House undoubtedly labor under the impression that these charges come from some old soldier, some old veteran of the Civil War, some man who had a long and perhaps distinguished military service.

Now, it happens that these charges were principally gotten up by one who had been a member of the home, and I took occasion to look up that man's record. He is 47 years of age. He enlisted in Buffalo, N. Y., in May, 1898. He was discharged in November, 1898, at Buffalo, and he was treated in a hospital during his military service for a period of two days for an ingrowing toenail. That is the record of the man who is the chief sponsor for these charges.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], referring to these charges, on June 9 stated that he had written to a man who had been in that home, who he said was a man he knew and upon whom he could rely, inquiring about these men. That man, in speaking of these men, said in his letter of reply to the gentleman from Kansas:

> In a word, these three men are simply three miserable, wretched, nonpensioned, impoverished invalids, with a rather exaggerated idea of their surroundings.

Of the man who had the six months' service, at Buffalo, N. Y., in 1898, he said:

> He is a frail chap, in the secondary stages of pulmonary tuberculosis, inclined to be fanciful as to his surroundings, reads socialistic literature, etc.

Mr. Chairman, with reference to these charges and the speech made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], I want to have read an article from the Hot Springs Star, of May 15, 1914. Hot Springs is the place where the Battle Mountain Sanitarium is located. I invite attention to the reading of the article.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE OTHER SIDE—THE TRUTH ABOUT THE DISCHARGE OF MEMBERS FROM THE BATTLE MOUNTAIN SANITARIUM.

Regarding an unpleasant situation that developed at the Battle Mountain Sanitarium recently, several of the papers of the Northern Hills have been, we think, a little hasty in publishing articles regarding same without first getting the facts in the case. We refer to the discharge of members, James H. Lacy, John H. Yount, and Anthony H. Walich, from the sanitarium.

The matter published by the Gate City Guide, at Rapid City, and the Pioneer-Times, at Deadwood, is a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and letters submitted by Congressman BUCHANAN of Illinois, to whom these men who were discharged took their case. He, of course, on the floor of the House, seemed to get real bitter and denounced the management of the home here in rather an uncalled-for manner.

Lacy, Yount, and Walich were members of the sanitarium here in the tubercular cottage. As any person in this city will verify, the men at this cottage get the best treatment of any at the sanitarium. Petty troubles were enlarged upon by them until an investigation by the board resulted.

In Congressman BUCHANAN'S tirade, as well as the letters submitted, he called particular attention to the local management and laid all blame, if there be any, on these men.

A synopsis of all the charges made by the men discharged would be too lengthy, but in substance the chief trouble seems to lay in the free tobacco issued at one time, it being somewhat musty; but as soon as reported, this matter was righted.

Leaving out the minor details, the president of the Board of Managers of the National Home, Maj. James W. Wadsworth, of New York City; Col. James E. Miller, inspector general and chief surgeon; together with a committee composed of Col. N. G. Cockey, of Salina, Kans., and Col. F. F. Jones, of Ohio, representing the Spanish War Veterans' Association, upon their regular tour of inspection, investigated these complaints, and after a fair and impartial hearing made a joint recommendation that Lacy, Yount, and Walich be dropped from the rolls, thus exonerating the local management from all charges referred to in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. This investigation was made March 25 of this year. This ought to lead any fair-minded person to a proper conclusion, and that is that the members evidently received their just deserts.

Men in charge of any institution of any importance are always criticized, and of the 500 members at the Battle Mountain Sanitarium there are bound to be some who have an idea that they could conduct it in better shape than men who have devoted their life to this sort of work.

Regarding the food and drugs at the sanitarium, the United States food and drug inspector here last week stated that when it came to criticizing it he had no criticism to offer, but that it was a matter of wonderment to him at the high quality and perfect manner in which everything is kept.

Every person in the city has a personal pride in the sanitarium and its set of efficient officers, and when papers in other cities give publicity to unfounded statements, even though they be in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, we beg to set the matter right and hope that the Guide and Pioneer-Times will set this matter right with their readers.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to add a further testimonial to the high standard that prevails in the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, both as to administration and the conditions generally, and to further refute the unjust charges that were brought to the attention of the House and the country by the publication of the charges that were sent to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] and which appears in the RECORD of April 29. I am going to ask to have read a letter written by a very prominent citizen of South Dakota, a man who had a very distinguished military service in the War of the Rebellion, who rose to the rank of captain, a man who is highly respected and whose word is absolutely good. He happens to be a brother of a gentleman who served in this House with honor and distinction for a period of 12 years, the Hon. Washington Gardner, of Michigan. His name is C. V. Gardner, and before I send the letter which I received only yesterday to the Clerk's desk to be read, I will read the letter accompanying it for the information of the House and to show that he wrote me entirely unsolicited:

PIEDMONT, S. DAK., June 16, 1914.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BURKE: The inclosed is a copy of a letter I have this day mailed to Hon. FRANK BUCHANAN.

His speech, to say the least, was outrageous, and he ought to make amends for so vile a slander.

With kind personal regards,

Yours, very truly,

C. V. GARDNER.

Mr. Chairman, I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a copy of the letter that Capt. Gardner inclosed, the original having been sent to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], to whom it is addressed.

The Clerk read as follows:

PIEDMONT, S. DAK., June 17, 1914.

Hon. FRANK BUCHANAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On my return home, after an absence of some weeks, my attention has been called to a speech made by you and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 29 last, in which you viciously assailed the management and officials of the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, located at Hot Springs, this State. My first thought was one of intense indignation; then, supreme pity, that a gentleman supposed to have the ability to represent in part one of the great States in the Congress, would make such a speech without first trying to ascertain if there was just cause for it, and the alleged complaint in a letter by one Walich, and made a part of your bitter and unjust attack.

Permit me to state that at the last annual encampment of the National Grand Army of the Republic Association, held at Chattanooga, a standing committee of 10, one for each of the national homes, was appointed to investigate alleged ill treatment of inmates and other wrongdoings by the officials of the homes. I was assigned to the Battle Mountain Sanitarium. I made application for admission, ostensibly for treatment, but in reality that I might, from personal experience and observation, study conditions as they actually existed. I was regularly admitted February 5 last and remained until March 2. I was assigned to a ward and lived just as the other inmates, eating the same food at the same tables, and obeying the same rules and regulations of the institution as my comrades did.

It was a pleasant experience and a revelation along many lines. There were at the time of my visit between 400 and 500 inmates.

Being a sanitarium rather than a home, I found men suffering from nearly all diseases and ailments that humanity is heir to—patients in all stages of diseases, from the very sick to those who were physically strong, but were there for treatment of real or imaginary chronic ailments.

I desire to state right here that it is my candid belief that quite a number of the inmates, judging from their physical appearance, movements, and appetites, are there because a too generous Government has supplied them with all the luxuries of a home without money or a price. Men able to work, yet taking the opportunity of having been enlisted as soldiers, live without labor or responsibility. This applies especially to some of the so-called Spanish War veterans.

I do not hesitate to state that if you will look up the record of the man who wrote and those who indorsed that letter you will find that they never heard a hostile shot, or if so, were far in the rear; and, further, if they are ailing, they are being treated for diseases brought on by dissipation and debauched habits. They are simply "camp followers" and unworthy of the name of American soldiers and a disgrace to the great body of young men who are rightly known as Spanish War veterans.

I doubt not all the 10 homes have a greater or less number of these fellows, whose chief occupation is that of disturbers and faultfinders. I found the sanitarium modern in all respects and treatment the very best.

The food, while plain—as it should be—was most abundant, and the chef of the Waldorf-Astoria could not improve on its preparation and cooking. All foodstuffs are accepted only after inspection by a competent committee, two of whom are doctors, and must comply with pure-food laws The sanitary conditions are simply perfect from "cellar to garret."

I have found that not only all the officials, but attendants as well, are most courteous and attentive to their varied duties. As to Gov. James A. Mattison, I do not believe in all the country there is a man better qualified in every respect for the position he occupies. He is kindness personified, yet firm in his administration; and the charges you make in your unconsidered—I want to be charitable—speech are so foreign to his nature that they are simply absurd.

It is my good fortune to have known Maj. W. H. Stanley for a number of years. He is a most genial gentleman and the very soul of honor, and if a wrong, by any means possible, occurs in his department, no man would be swifter to right it if in his power to do so.

Should you have any doubt of the truth of these statements, if you will go and investigate for yourself and not find them in all respects as above set forth, I will pay all your expenses from Washington and return. Should you find my contentions correct, I hope you will be big enough and broad enough to acknowledge before all the people of the country that you did a great injustice to the most worthy gentlemen and conscientious officials. It is that "spirit that makes just men perfect."

Yours, truly,

C. V. GARDNER,
Late Captain Company A,
Twenty-ninth Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. During the remarks of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] I was surprised——

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to make the point of order. The gentleman has already struck out the last word two different times.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I was astonished to find that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in the remarks he addressed to the committee, questioning the correctness of statements made by other Members in reference to the soldiers' home, should himself have displayed a woeful lack of knowledge, a woeful ignorance in regard to matters upon which he is called upon to legislate in his committee. He assured the House that the inmates of these soldiers' homes were abundantly supplied with fresh vegetables from splendid farms connected with every one of these 10 homes.

It is true that we appropriate in this bill about $152,000 to conduct imaginary farms at these homes, but what do the figures compiled from the report of the board of managers show? They show that out of the $152,000 that we appropriate for these so-called farms there is a net loss in conducting them of $83,000, and that the inmates receive only about $60,000 in value in vegetables from these farms. In other words, these farms are conducted at this loss to the Government of $83,000, which is explained by the board as being expended for the maintenance of the grounds. Yet the members are charged up with the maintenance of these grounds, with the cost of this scenery, in the comparative figures which they furnish Congress, showing how much it costs per annum to maintain a member in one of these homes.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that the soldiers are not charged up anything on account of these farms; that whatever is produced on the farms is received by them in addition to the ration cost which has been reported.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have stated to the gentleman that the amount Congress appropriates for farms, $152,000, is used in computing the total cost to the Government of maintaining the members per annum. It is shown by figures that the soldiers do not get the amount of $152,000 by $83,000. At some homes, one, the Battle Mountain Home, not a dollar is expended for the cost of a real farm. Every dollar of it is expended for maintenance and grounds.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the home where the gentleman from that district says there is no complaint.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is very natural for gentlemen representing the district where these homes are situated to get up and defend them. The crowning indictment of these homes arises from the fact that at Battle Mountain Sanitarium for instance, supposed to be a home for the cure of tuberculosis, there has not been a single record of a soldier who has been cured at that institution. Whereas at the Government Army sanitarium at Fort Bayard they turn out dozens of men cured of that dread disease every year.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman think that the Member who comes from the district where there is a home, if he wants to serve his own interest, would be upholding the government of a home against the judgment of several hundred members that might be in the institution?

Mr. ANTHONY. At some homes there is very little complaint, while at others the conditions are very bad. Some gentlemen have spoken in defense of their homes, and justly so.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I have confined my statement to the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, which was assailed by these three men and one or two others.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANTHONY) there were 12 ayes and 18 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Southern Branch, Hampton, Va.: For current expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $46,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I have been informed that the governor of the Hampton Home draws about $7,000, in all, per annum from the United States Treasury, and that that is made up of his salary as a retired colonel in the Army and also the regular salary of a governor of the soldiers' home. It is a generally accepted rule or a provision of law that wherever a retired Army officer is detailed to active duty he is only allowed to draw, in addition to the retired pay, the amount of difference between the retired pay and the regular pay. Yet the board of managers, for some reason, have allowed the governor of the Hampton Home the full salary of $3,000 in addition to his retired pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The retired Army and Navy officers can be assigned to certain military duty, and then they receive full pay. I do not know of any statute that prohibits a retired Army officer receiving civilian compensation. There is a provision in the Revised Statutes that forbids any person receiving a compensation of more than $3,500 from receiving any other additional pay; but I am informed that the comptroller has ruled that the pay of a retired officer of the Army is in the nature of a pension, and that they do not come within this provision.

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course the gentleman knows that a retired officer ordered to active duty simply draws the regular pay, and it seems that the governor of a soldiers' home is merely doing military duty and should not draw any more than the pay of his rank on active duty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He draws a salary as governor of the home.

Mr. ANTHONY. And he gets quarters and a number of other emoluments. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment which I think would correct the abuse. I understand this governor is drawing the full amount of $3,000 salary from the board of managers, in addition to his retired pay from the War Department, and I think the amendment will cure that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert as a new paragraph, to follow line 15, page 83:

"Provided, That when a retired Army officer is appointed to an official salaried position by the board of management of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, he shall not be paid by said board of managers out of any appropriation made by this act a greater compensation than that which will equal the difference between the retired pay and the pay he would receive if on the active list of the Army."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas this question: Why should that rule apply only to retired officers who may be appointed by the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Homes? Why should it be restricted in such a way? If such is to be the policy of the Government, why should the rule not be uniform?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that it is my information that it is the general law now, which applies to every other assignment other than to physicians in the national soldiers' homes, the law governing which seems to have been construed by the comptroller as a law unto itself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the law applies only to active service in the Army.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not see any reason why a Regular Army officer should draw double pay from the Government for doing purely military duty, and this is surely military duty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose a retired Army officer was appointed head of a department of the Government; should he receive only what he is entitled to as an officer of his grade on the active list?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I think perhaps an exception should be made, but in this instance at the Hampton Home he is doing regular military duty. Let me carry the analogy further. If a retired officer of the Army was detailed there as a military instructor to those men, if such could be done, all he could draw would be the difference between his retired pay and his active pay.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because that would be active military duty.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is all this man is doing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; he is the governor and the administrator of this home. Suppose a retired colonel were appointed Assistant Secretary of the Navy or Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, the same rule should apply to him as would apply to a man appointed governor of one of these homes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, to my mind it is bad policy to allow any man to draw two salaries from the Government for doing one duty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There have been retired Army officers who have been Members of Congress.

Mr. ANTHONY. A retired Army officer is subject to being ordered to active duty by the Government at any time that it can utilize his services. He is not like a man retired on a pension.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But only for military duty.

Mr. ANTHONY. That should be military duty at Hampton Home, and it really is. I think the trouble is that it is construed as a civil duty by the comptroller.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Does the gentleman's amendment include also retired officers of the Navy?

Mr. ANTHONY. It covers only officers of the Army, because the presumption is that they would detail only officers of the Army, but still it should apply to officers of the Navy.

Mr. TAGGART. Of course this is not a military duty under any department of the Government. It is a civil duty.

Mr. ANTHONY. As the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] suggested to me, the language should be "Army, Navy, or Marine Corps."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is a limitation on an appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes. It provides that they shall be paid only so much. I think it is a limitation on an appropriation.

Mr. BARTLETT. Not on the amount carried in this bill.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a limittation on the item carried in this bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Has the point of order been made against the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York reserved the point of order, but the Chair did not understand that he made the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is clearly in order under the Holman rule. It is a limitation, a reduction.

Mr. TAGGART. Is it not manifest on the face of the amendment that it works an economy? It limits the appropriation. It will reduce the amount of expenditure on the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will indulge me, I wish to refresh his memory on that part of the Holman rule which provides that an amendment shall be in order where it works a reduction of compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and certainly this amendment covers that character of individual and is in order under the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. ANTHONY (from his seat). Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman did not rise to ask for a division, and that he asked for a division after the Chair had announced the result and had directed the Clerk to read. The request comes too late.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman never rose out of his seat.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman can not make anything by unfair tactics of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not attempting to gain anything by being unfair; but the gentleman did not rise in time.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no doubt the amendment will be voted down; and the gentleman might as well allow a division on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the demand for a division came too late.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman makes the point of order on that, I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. While the rules might require a gentleman to rise to make a demand for a division, ordinarily it is done by a gentleman sitting in his seat.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is too late.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman asked for a division.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon if the gentleman made it in time.

Mr. MANN. But he made it while he was in his seat.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request for a division.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman made his demand for a division in time, of course, I did not understand it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas withdraws his request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is too late to withdraw.

Mr. STAFFORD. I renew it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not renew the request. If it was not made in time, he can not renew it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Kansas was in time, and if he withdraws it another Member has the privilege of renewing it, and I renew it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is too late for the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will bear with me, if the gentleman from Kansas made the demand for a division in time and then subsequently withdraws it, it lies within the power of any Member to renew it.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that was my purpose in renewing it.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me suggest the gentleman from Kansas did not make his motion in time. He did not claim he did. The gentleman from New York agreed, if the House by unanimous consent would give an opportunity to make the motion, he should not object, but that does not give the gentleman from Wisconsin an opportunity to make it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Illinois, whom I believe to be a somewhat superior parliamentarian to the gentleman from Wyoming, claims that the gentleman from Kansas was in time.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand the gentleman from Illinois to claim anything of the kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes, he did; and if the gentleman did not hear it he is deaf.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I do not believe in these invidious comparisons.

The Clerk read as follows:

For household, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $95,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be used for fuel oil if it shall appear to the board of managers that coal as a fuel can be procured and used more economically.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the proviso beginning in line 7, on page 84, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That such part of this sum as shall be used for fuel shall only be expended for such fuel as can be procured most economically and which will furnish the greatest number of thermal units of heat in proportion to its cost."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the point of order I think if the provision which this amendment supplants was in order, and has been held in order, that the amendment which I offer is in order. My reason for offering the amendment is that the present provision which provides—

That no part of this sum shall be used for fuel oils if it shall appear to the board of managers that coal as a fuel can be procured and used more economically—

Is practically worthless as a limitation on this expenditure. The wording of the present amendment in the bill is nothing more or less than a fraud on its face. It says, "if it shall appear to the board of managers." Well, it is liable to appear in most any way to "the board of managers." I have offered an amendment which will provide, in substance, that the fuel that shall be used shall be the fuel which will procure the greatest number of thermal units of heat in proportion to its cost. That is the method the War Department and other departments use in purchasing fuel, and if incorporated in this bill will no longer permit the board of managers to dodge the present limitation which is in the bill. There has been a great deal of contention as to which is the cheapest fuel at the Leavenworth Home. I will admit it is not a precise thing; there have been several reports made upon this question, all of them different; and I am just going to read one short extract from the latest report on the subject, because it is the very latest thing from the Bureau of Mines in reference to the question. This is under date of June 10, the present month, and probably later than anything that has been had by the committee on that question. It is signed by Van H. Manning, Assistant Director, and is as follows:

A report to the Director of the Bureau of Mines shows that the Leavenworth plant could probably save from $7,000 to $8,700 per year if properly equipped to burn the most economical coal (Cherokee Mill Run) to be had in their market.

Now, that is an entirely different coal and comes at a distance of 100 miles away from our coal field. I do not care what coal they burn or what fuel they burn, but I want them to burn the most economical fuel. And if the House will adopt this amendment which I have offered, I believe it will settle that much-mooted question for once and all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill is not effective, and the responsibility can not be placed on the members of the Committee on Appropriations. It is the provision drafted and offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] himself and accepted by the Committee on Appropriations in order to prevent the expenditure of money for fuel at this home in a way that would neither be economical or just.

Now, there has been a controversy as to whether or not it was more profitable to the Government to utilize coal or oil at the Leavenworth Branch of the National Soldiers' Home. The Board of Managers have contended that it was more economical to burn oil, and that to burn coal economically would require an investment of about $75,000 for new equipment.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] early in the session conferred with me and stated that this controversy had gone on for several years; that it was impossible for us to get an agreement; and that if arrangements would be made to have an investigation by an impartial and disinterested official, get a report and settle this question, it would end this controversy. He suggested that the Bureau of Mines be requested to make such an investigation. I ascertained that the president of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home had requested the Bureau of Mines to make this investigation. We got the report and the report confirms the contention of the board of managers, a report based upon a visit of an inspector from the Bureau of Mines to the Leavenworth Home lasting from February 9 to February 19, inclusive:

Now, let me read from his report:

In preparing the estimates which follow, the fact was kept in mind that there are some 3,000 persons in the institution who are dependent upon the power plant for light, heat, and power, and in large measure for the cooking of the meals. There are two general policies, either of which might be followed in changing the plant so that coal could be used, and estimates are included for each. One is to limit the investment and make the change with the least initial expense, and the other is to install such mechanical equipment as will insure convenience of operation and continuity of service, and at the same time reduce the operating expense.

Estimates are based on a price for oil of $1.1425 per barrel in tank cars f. o. b. the switch at the home, and for coal of $2.86 per long ton in coal bins or storage pit at the home. The above figure for oil is the price being paid this year, and that for coal is the price being paid for Leavenworth coal at the Federal prison in cars f. o. b. their switch. The estimates throughout are based upon the assumption that Leavenworth coal will be used if the change in fuel is made, for the reason that no other coal was offered when proposals were called for on a contract for 13,000 tons for the prison.

Additional boilers and another stack will be necessary if a change of fuel is made. The installation of these boilers will necessitate the removal of the shop at the end of the boiler room, and an additional building is included for this purpose. The estimates for depreciation and maintenance are based only on the additional investment if coal is to be used and on that part of the present plant that would be replaced if the change were made.

And then the estimates are included. The annual operating expenses for coal are $62,000; hand-fired, $71,000; coal stokers, $61,100. The necessary investment in order to burn coal is for coal, hand-fired, $21,100; for coal stokers, $77,200.

Having ascertained that the president of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes had requested the Bureau of Mines to make such an investigation, it occurred to me that it would be advisable to have another independent investigation made by competent authorities. So under date of March 16, 1914, I addressed a communication to the Secretary of War and requested him to have some official attached to the Inspectors' Department or the Quartermaster Corps of the Army make an investigation of the plant at the Leavenworth Home and report to the committee what it would cost to properly equip the home for the utilization of coal, and whether in his opinion it would be more economical to use coal or oil. Here was another department of the Government that could have no interest in a controversy as to which was the better. The report of the investigation was made, and that report was submitted to the committee, and from that investigation and report it says that changes are necessary to equip the plant for the economical use of coal which would require an expenditure of approximately $75,000. The Bureau of Mines estimated $77,000. And it is stated that two kinds of coal are available—a high grade, which costs $2.54 per ton, and a lower grade, which costs $2.25 per ton. The Bureau of Mines estimated that the coal cost $2.86 per ton, the cost paid by the Leavenworth prison. And in this report it says that, with the investment required, after we would spend $75,000 for the equipment, we would then save by the use of coal $609.50 a year. And the report continues:

The above comparisons are based on the cost of oil as given in the letter of the quartermaster referred to. It is noted that the oil in question costs $1.14 per barrel, which cost, considering the quantity purchased, would seem somewhat high.

The comparisons are also based on the assumption that the coal and oil would be used with the same relative efficiency. As a matter of fact, the experiences of this office has shown that oil-burning installations are operated generally with an increased efficiency over coal of approximately 50 per cent. This corps is paying for oil on the Pacific coast, under present contracts, 80 cents per barrel, as compared with $1.14 paid at Leavenworth (Kans.) Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers. As a general proposition, considering the efficiency with which oil is used and the many advantages as a labor-saving device, it would seem reasonable, even with the low price quoted for coal, that the oil-burning installation should be more economical.

Now, the plant is equipped for the burning of oil. Here are reports from two independent, impartial bureaus of the Government, both of which contend that in order to equip this plant to burn coal it will necessitate an expenditure of at least $75,000, and in the end we would have gained nothing, either in efficiency or economy.

Now, the provision in the bill is—that no part of this sum shall be used for fuel oil if it shall appear to the board of managers that coal as fuel can be procured and used more economically.

The board of managers have contended that coal can not be procured and used more economically, and their reiterated statements are now substantiated by the report of the Bureau of Mines and the report of the Quartermaster Department of the War Department.

I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] will not be adopted, because it is so worded that if enacted it may be impossible to utilize any of the fund at all for fuel, unless we appropriated $75,000 for equipment in the event that coal is to be used.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is no question, Mr. Chairman, that this appropriation for fuel at the Western Branch Home has been the cause of more juggling of figures than has ever before been attempted by any Government board that has looked into such a matter. Some officials have returned reports that have an almost fictitious bearing on the matter, and they have taken the widest liberty in assuming items of cost of coal that absolutely misrepresent the situation.

I want to be frank with the House. I am making this fight for the use of the most economical fuel at that branch primarily because it is in a coal-mining district. There are 1,200 miners employed in the mines immediately adjacent to this institution; and I would be derelict in my duty if I did not appear here on the floor and insist that their product be utilized in the Government institutions near by when it can be purchased by the Government for less money than any other fuel.

The board of managers let the cat out of the bag on this fuel question in the letter that they addressed to the Bureau of Mines asking for this investigation, which, by the way, I have been asking for for a year and could not get anybody to move until recently. At the bottom of the letter to the Bureau of Mines was the simple statement from the president of the board of managers that, "I have instructed the officials at the Western Branch to furnish you all their information and figures," and so forth. It was very kind in them to furnish the figures, and it is true that the deductions made by both of the investigations that have been had have been based upon figures kindly furnished by the officials of the home.

Now, what do they do? They take an arbitrary cost of the coal there that is anything but correct. They have not used coal at that branch for a good many years. When they did use coal there, this household item was about $87,000. Now, it is about $100,000. That difference represents the increase of cost of oil over coal for fuel.

Furthermore, I am surprised that the Committee on Appropriations allows itself to be bamboozled by the board of managers on this fuel question, as has repeatedly been done.

I want to call the attention of the chairman to a statement made in the hearings, which, on the face of it, will not be borne out by the facts. In the analysis of this household estimate for the Western Branch appears the item for fuel, including gas and oil, also water and electric light, at this Western Branch, $68,000. Last year they expended $63,000 for fuel oil alone, and the combined cost of the gas and electricity and the water at the Leavenworth Home was $25,000, which would leave only $43,000 for the purchase of fuel. Now, how in God's name they can do it under this appropriation is more than I can see and more than the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can see. But I will tell you how they will do it. They will do it by subterfuge, as they did last year.

Last year, as the gentleman knows, after appearing before his committee and stating that $100,000 would be sufficient for this item of "household," the committee took them at their word. I told the committee at the time that it was not sufficient, that it would cost them more money. But the committee took the word of the board of managers. What does the inspector of the War Department say in the report that was filed in the House and which has gone to the Committee on Military Affairs? Maj. Jackson, the Assistant Inspector General, calls the attention of the War Department and of the House to the fact that after Congress had appropriated for fuel they came back for a deficiency of $6,000 at the Leavenworth Branch. After you had given them that in the deficiency bill the board of managers raided the post or the posthumous fund and took $8,000 out of that fund. The board of managers misled you.

Mr. COOPER. What did that make the total?

Mr. ANTHONY. It made the total $63,000, whereas in the estimate it shows only about $43,000, on which they said they could get along for fuel.

So I say the statement they make this year is fraudulent. They can not get along with $43,000 for fuel. It is impossible to do that with either coal or oil, and all I am asking Congress is to put a limitation on this appropriation that means something; to compel them to get under the thermal unit system, which is the system now in use in other departments of the Government. Then the board can not resort to any further subterfuge on the matter, but have got to come through straight and clean.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman agree with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it would cost $75,000 to make the change in the heating system?

Mr. ANTHONY. It would cost a considerable amount. I contend it could be done for very much less than that, but the experts have hit on the figure of $75,000 in order to scare off the House, in order to give an excuse to them not to buy coal from the coal miners of my district, but in order to continue to patronize the Standard Oil Co., which has a refinery in Missouri near by. Now, I suppose it is hopeless for me to stand here and continue to plead for this amendment. Probably it will be voted down, as all the rest of them were, but next year when the deficiencies come in under this appropriation I will have the satisfaction of being able to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that I told him so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] seems to think that everybody is in a conspiracy against what he desires.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman from New York is in a conspiracy to thwart what I desire in reference to the soldiers' homes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. First, the board of managers were doing him an injustice because they would not accept his suggestion as to the use of coal. Then the Bureau of Mines——

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the Bureau of Mines come to your committee for its annual appropriation, and do you think they would dare to go counter to what the gentleman desires?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield to the gentleman. The Bureau of Mines was requested by the board of managers of the homes to make a report, and having found certain things to be facts, they are now in a conspiracy against the gentleman from Kansas. Then the Quartermaster's Department——

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the Quartermaster's Department come to the gentleman's committee for its appropriations, and would that department dare to return a report contrary to the gentleman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield to the gentleman. The Quartermaster's Department does not come to the Committee on Appropriations for its appropriation but goes to the Committee on Military Affairs, of which the gentleman from Kansas is a member. The Quartermaster's Department makes an investigation and finds certain facts, and those facts are contrary to what the gentleman from Kansas wishes, and so the War Department is in a conspiracy against him. Then, because the Committee on Appropriations accepts the statements made by the representatives of the Bureau of Mines and the Quartermaster's Department in preference to these wild, visionary statements of the gentleman from Kansas, he asserts that the chairman of the committee was bamboozled by these two departments because he accepted what they said instead of accepting these specific, accurate statements of the gentleman from Kansas.

I do not know what the president of the board of managers wrote to the Bureau of Mines, but I do know what I wrote to the Secretary of War; and, so that the gentleman from Kansas will not be indulging in any wild imaginings as to what I had written—my letter is printed in the hearings—and for the benefit of the House, I will read it to show how the Quartermaster's Department was induced to engage in this conspiracy to prevent the coal produced in the gentleman's district being used instead of oil produced outside. I wrote to the Secretary of War, as follows:

MARCH 16, 1914.

Hon. LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

DEAR SIR: The Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives is desirous of ascertaining the probable cost of installing a coal-burning plant in place of the present oil-burning plant for furnishing heat, light, and power at the Leavenworth (Kans.) Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. Because of the controversy of several years' standing between the authorities of the national home and parties desiring to supply coal for fuel at the Leavenworth Branch it is very desirable on the part of the committee to obtain a report in the premises from some entirely disinterested and capable source, hence the suggestion that your department be invoked to aid in the matter.

I have therefore to request that through the Inspector's Department or the Quartermaster Corps of the Army, or both, you will have the matter carefully inquired into and a report made thereon through you to the committee within the next 30 days. Incidentally, the committee would be pleased to have any information developed by the inquiry as to the relative cost and efficiency, after installation, of using coal or oil for fuel at this branch of the soldiers' home.

Very truly, yours,

(Signed) J. J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

A report was made to the Secretary of War by the Chief of the Quartermaster Corps. There was a special reason for requesting a report from the War Department. It has a large Army post at Leavenworth, where this home is established. It is burning coal at that post. If it had any partiality at all, it would not be in favor of a fuel that it is not using itself. It would be likely to attempt to show that it was using the more economical fuel at this large post. It took the figures as to the cost of coal from the amount that it was paying under large contracts made for the supply of coal.

Now, it is unfortunate that it so happens that the expert of the Bureau of Mines, who spent 10 days at the national home, and the representatives of the quartermaster's department, after their investigation, both reached the conclusion arrived at by an engineer in the employ of the board of managers a year or two ago, that it would require $75,000 or $77,000 properly to equip this oil-burning plant so that it could burn coal.

What makes the gentleman from Kansas so irritated is that he promised at the last session of Congress that if an impartial investigation was made by some disinterested officials of the department of the Government, that my statement that it would take $75,000 to make the change would be shown to be so ill founded that I would be ashamed to have made it. Now, I have done the best I can, and if there is any other bureau of the Government that has facilities and information and knowledge that makes it competent to report upon this question which will be acceptable to the gentleman from Kansas, I shall be very happy to make the request upon that bureau to make another investigation. But I will not accept the unsupported assertions of the gentleman from Kansas, who has advocated a system which will provide consumption for about 13,000 tons of coal produced in his district. I can not accept him as an impartial witness against the contention and statements of responsible officials of the Government. I am compelled, with considerable reluctance, to accept the disinterested report of these officials and to antagonize the contention of the gentleman from Kansas.

It would be more satisfactory to me if he could demonstrate that it would be more economical for coal to be burned there. It would eliminate some controversy in the House in the consideration of this bill, and would relieve me of the necessity of burdening myself year after year with additional investigation, additional reports, additional facts to remind Members of the same old story, with no more foundation this year than it had last. The more we investigate it the less justification there is in advocating what he desires. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, is clearly legislation, and I insist on the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, the reports of these investigators would be very good indeed if it were not for the fact that the board of managers suppresses from them one important fact. In these reports coming to the Committee on Appropriations they state that it will cost from $2.60 to $2.84 per ton for coal at the Leavenworth institution. They carefully suppress the fact that there is a contract on file with the board of managers, which has some years yet to run and which, in the opinion of competent authority, can undoubtedly be enforced, which gives the Government all the coal that it wants at $2.25 a ton. Why do they not take $2.25 a ton, the contract price of coal? That is the nigger in the woodpile. They are dodging the real price at which coal can be secured.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Is there any other institution in that whole region, beginning with the Federal prison, the Army post, a combined city of 250,000 people 30 miles from there filled up with manufacturing plants of different kinds, a $10,000,000 oil refinery—is there any other institution except the soldiers' home at Leavenworth that burns oil for fuel?

Mr. ANTHONY. Not a single one, for they all know that it is more economical to burn coal. Now, the gentleman from New York has alluded to a "conspiracy." It is pretty hard to understand where a conspiracy exists on my side of the question, but to anyone who understands the ramifications of New York politics it is not difficult to understand the animus of the gentleman from New York in urging the views of the board. The president of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home happens to be the mainstay of the up-State Republicans of New York State, a spoke in the wheel of this Republican "organization," and the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is one of the leaders of the Tammany Hall Democracy, and in pursuance of the time-honored combination between these two political elements I do not blame the gentleman for standing as sponsor for that kind of a thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, gratuitous insults are seldom offered to Members on the floor of the House, and they should not be offered by men who live in glass houses. I am not a member of Tammany Hall. I am not eligible for membership in Tammany Hall. I have been put out of political conventions by Tammany Hall because I was not a member of its organization and was not in sympathy with its action. The gentleman from New York, Mr. Wadsworth, is not in politics so far as I am aware. He served in this House for 20 years with distinction. He was an honorable and is an honorable and reputable citizen.

The trouble with the gentleman from Kansas is, and his grievance is, that I would not in the face of the facts present to the Committee on Appropriations and advocate the burning of coal in the Western Branch of the National Soldiers' Home when one of his relatives was the most largely interested proprietor in the coal mines from which the coal was to come. [Applause.] That explains his persistency in using coal and not oil in this home.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have the amendment reported?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. The amendment provides as to thermal units, and certainly that is legislation, for there is no authority for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman on the point of order. The Chair understood that, inasmuch as the gentleman addressed his remarks almost entirely to the merits of the proposition, he did not care to press the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I had reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I had stated it was clearly legislation. An examination of the amendment discloses that fact. It requires the purchases to be made under certain regulations, which is a limitation upon the power of the department. It is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Holman rule provides:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How does the amendment in any way come within that rule? If the Chair will examine the amendment, he will see that it does not reduce the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, it does not reduce a salary and it does not reduce the amount carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the point upon which the Chair desired to hear the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It specifically requires the purchase of coal to be made under certain regulations, from which the Chair is unable to determine whether it will be an increase or a decrease. It is purely a legislative provision.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think that amendment is purely along the line of economy. It provides that only the cheapest coal shall be purchased, and there is no twisting of the English language that could make it mean anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas that if the amendment is in order at all it must be under the following wording of the Holman rule:

Or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

The Chair will say candidly that when he first read the amendment it seemed to him that inasmuch as it provided that these gentlemen should buy this fuel where they could get it the cheapest, that that did reduce the amount of the bill; but as a matter of fact, it does not.

Mr. ANTHONY. How can the Chair explain that in any different way? That is the purpose of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amount of money carried by the bill remains the same, whether the amendment be adopted or not.

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no; if it is determined one way, it will cost the Government more; and if it is determined another way, it will cost the Government less.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the amendment the amount of the appropriation remains the same. It was under that consideration that the Chair at first decided that the amendment was in order. The Chair now decides that the amendment is not in order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farm, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $17,000;
In all, $437,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think it is desired to pass another bill to-night, and I suggest to the chairman of the committee that this is Saturday night and it is now half past 5 o'clock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to go ahead a little longer. We could easily sit late to-night. We have not many days left, and the bill ought to go to the Senate as soon as possible.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to sit late some night next week, but this is Saturday night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; but it is always Saturday night with the gentleman when my bill is up. The last time the bill was up it was Saturday of last week.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we ought to try and make more progress on the bill. It may be possible to get this bill enacted into law before the last of the fiscal year. I do not know whether it will or not. It can not be enacted unless we sit longer, and I think we ought to stay longer to-night.

Mr. MANN. How far does the gentleman think he ought to read?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, to about page 148.

Mr. MANN. If that is the case, I think we ought to have a quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the House ought to determine whether it is going to stay here or not. I shall not voluntarily ask the House to quit.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and suggest that it will take until 12 o'clock to-night to pass the soldiers' homes items, even if we have a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] make the point of order that there is no quorum present?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty gentlemen are present, less than a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POU, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 162 Members answered to their names; and he reported the list of absentees to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 17041, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 162 Members answered to their names; and he reports the list of absentees to be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion to adjourn is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. No motion is in order.

Mr. MANN. I would like to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the Chair to the manual, which is somewhat of a guide in the proceedings of the House. On page 372 the rule is:

> Whenever the Committee of the Whole House or of the Whole House on the state of the Union finds itself without a quorum—which shall consist of 100 Members—the Chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

The Speaker will find the following note:

> After the committee has risen and reported its roll call, a motion to adjourn is in order before direction as to resumption of the session.

Referring to Hinds, volume 4, paragraph 2969. That motion had been made, according to my distinct recollection, many times while both the Speaker and myself have been Members of the House.

It is true, if the motion to adjourn does not prevail and a quorum is not shown, that the failure of a quorum does not prevent the Chair directing that the committee resume its sitting.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But, Mr. Speaker, I think the question presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is practically the same question presented here a short time ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], and in which the House sustained the decision of the Chair, and I think after the decision was rendered the Speaker announced to the House that he had reached the conclusion that the proper procedure would have been not to recognize the gentleman for any motion when we went back into the House to report a quorum, and that automatically the committee should resume its session. I think that is the case, Mr. Speaker. There is no reason, if a quorum is shown to be present, why anyone should be recognized for a motion to adjourn or another motion. Because when we go back into the committee it is absolutely in the control of the committee, which is a part of the House, to rise and go back into the House and adjourn if they desire to do so. And I think it is merely a question of recognition in the end as to whether the Speaker will recognize a gentleman to make a motion or whether he will call the Chairman to the chair and allow the committee to resume its session. The correct practice of the House, decided some weeks ago, is for the Chair——

The SPEAKER. Was an appeal taken from the Speaker's decision on that day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My recollection is that an appeal was taken, and I moved to lay the appeal on the table, and by an emphatic majority the House laid the appeal on the table; and that there was a roll call on the question when it was before the House.

Mr. MANN. The recognition of the motion to adjourn does not rest with the Speaker. The motion to adjourn is a privileged motion. If it is in order, the Speaker can not refuse to recognize for that motion. It makes recognition itself. It has been ruled many times, Mr. Speaker, both by the present Speaker and by all of his predecessors since this rule has been in force, that the motion to adjourn was the only motion which was in order when the committee rose because of the lack of a quorum. And the reason for it must be manifest, that the House, if it chooses to adjourn, has the right to adjourn and has the right to have a roll call on the motion to adjourn. It is true that a majority of the House changes the rules by vote very often, but that has been the rule from time immemorial.

The SPEAKER. The history of this transaction is that in the first place the precedents are very vague. In the one that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] cited there was a motion made to adjourn in a situation similar to the present one, but nobody raised the point. About six weeks ago the point was raised, but before that, on two occasions, when the Chair was inclined to transact some small business that was on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Illinois himself raised the point that we could not do anything except go back into the committee. About six weeks ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] made a motion—the Chair thinks it was the motion to adjourn, although he is not sure—but anyhow he made some sort of a motion, and the Chair overruled him and he appealed from the decision of the Chair, and we had a roll call on it, by which the Chair was sustained. While the roll was being called, the Chair had time to study the question. And there is no precedent of very great light on the subject. But the performance that the House went through that evening demonstrated to my mind that if motions of one kind and another be made after the committee rises for lack of a quorum or after a quorum is ascertained, that it affords all sorts of means for filibustering. The House for some time has frowned on filibustering, and in this case the Chair would rather rely on his own opinion, delivered in May, which was positive and clear, whether right or wrong, than to depend on this vague case that is cited by the gentleman from Illinois. And the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The appeal is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. It is not dilatory, Mr. Speaker. I beg the Speaker's pardon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided then, and the Chair holds now, from the situation in which we found ourselves when the gentleman from Illinois started in, that the only thing to do is to go back into the committee.

Mr. MANN. But if the Speaker will hear me for a moment——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Here is a case where the unbroken line of precedents is to be reversed, except the one that was made here recently. I have heard this motion made in the House many times while the Speaker has been a Member of the House and while I have been a Member of the House. I have heard it declared in order many times. I have heard it stated many times on the floor that no other business was in order except a motion to adjourn.

The Speaker referred a while ago to a statement that I made at times. I never have stated that a motion to adjourn was not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, as a matter of fact, that that statement of the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker has passed upon that. Now, that being the case, the Speaker rendered a decision some time ago which was sustained by the House. I thought when it was rendered, although I was not here, but I read the proceedings, the Speaker was not informed as to the precedents.

Now, if we are to reverse this immemorial custom of the House, why should we not do it upon a roll call in the House? The appeal is not intended as dilatory at all. Let us settle the question. Two precedents will probably settle it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois is through——

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to call the Speaker's attention to the parliamentary situation. The case that arose when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] made his appeal from the decision of the Chair occurred when the Chair had recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts for the purpose of making a motion to adjourn, and then held it out of order.

Now, in this particular case the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] arose for the purpose of seeking to make the motion to adjourn. The Speaker did not recognize him for that purpose, and the point of order was made that he was not entitled to recognition for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there can be no question but that the question involved in this case is a question of recognition. The Chair has not recognized the gentleman from Illinois for the purpose of moving an adjournment. The Chair might recognize him for that purpose, or he can turn over the gavel to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. Now, there is no appeal and there has never been an appeal in this House on a question of recognition. It is entirely in the discretion of the Speaker, and there is no appeal from that decision, the Speaker having held that the gentleman's motion is not in order and not having recognized him.

Mr. MANN. But the Speaker did recognize him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My understanding of the situation is that the Speaker did not.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker did, and the gentleman made a point of order against the motion, and the Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The point of order I make is that the Speaker asked the gentleman for what purpose he rose.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; he did not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is my understanding of the proposition; and the point of order that I made was that the gentleman was not entitled to make the motion at this time. It was purely a question of recognition.

Mr. MANN. If the motion was in order the Speaker could not refuse to recognize, and did not attempt to. If the motion is in order it is a privileged motion. Now, the question is whether the appeal is dilatory. I assure the Speaker that the appeal is not dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that he was right in May, when he rendered the last decision about that. Waiving the question whether or not the Chair recognized the gentleman to make the motion, you came out of committee to get a quorum—that is what you came out for—to transact the business of the House. Now, if all these other motions are allowable, it simply rigs up a new machine for filibustering.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, no one has claimed that ordinary motions are in order or that ordinary business is in order. That question is not involved.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House is too plain for controversy, and no Speaker ever ruled on this proposition except the present one.

Mr. MANN. I beg the Speaker's pardon. I have heard every Speaker rule upon it since I have been a Member of the House, and it is in order.

The SPEAKER. If there is such a ruling, it is not recorded.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there are lots of rulings that are not recorded.

The SPEAKER. There is a ruling by a Speaker pro tempore; not a ruling, but a sort of ruling in this way: Somebody moved to adjourn under circumstances similar, and nobody made the point of order, and the motion to adjourn was negatived by the House; and then when the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS] prepared his Parliamentary Precedents he put it in the headline in the way it is quoted in this footnote to the rule.

The reason of the thing is in favor of no business whatever being transacted after the quorum is ascertained, because otherwise it rigs up a machine, as the Chair stated a while ago, for filibustering and delaying the business of the House. And while the present occupant of the chair does not like very well to quote his own decisions, he does think that the decision of a Speaker of the House for two terms certainly has a binding force over that of a Speaker pro tempore; and the Chair holds, as he held in May, that the only thing that can be done under the circumstances is to go back into Committee of the Whole, and the Chair so orders.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, has the Chair disposed of the appeal which I made?

The SPEAKER. If you did not have the right to make the motion to adjourn, you have not the right to take an appeal.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; that would not follow at all. That is the question at issue.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, even if the gentleman had the right to make the motion to adjourn, he would not have the right under these circumstances to appeal, because the appeal is of that privileged character which would require a quorum of the House. It is fundamental that you can not violate the written rule, and the written rule is that 100 makes a quorum in Committee of the Whole. If he could appeal, then it would require a quorum of the House, which would violate the written rule of the Committee of the Whole. I think the Chair is entirely right to refuse the appeal.

The SPEAKER. Let us see where we will land, because every Member of this House is interested in orderly procedure. If the Chair entertains the appeal it opens up the way for delay and filibustering. If any gentleman does not like the result of the vote on the appeal, a motion is made to reconsider the vote and a roll call may be had on that. If no quorum answers, a call of the House can be ordered, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. I would not be entitled to recognition for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Some gentleman on the other side would be entitled to recognition to move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. There you are.

Mr. MANN. The mere fact that it requires a roll call is no reason why the House should not have the right to decide it.

The SPEAKER. Now, if a quorum fails to vote on the roll call, then you must have a call of the House, and I undertake to say that if the motion of the gentleman from Illinois was entertained he could make motions enough here to keep us until 9 or 10 o'clock to-night.

Mr. MANN. Is that any reason why orderly procedure should not be followed and an appeal allowed when it is in order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. DONOVAN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to hear the gentleman, if he wants to proceed, on his point of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. The Speaker has decided to call the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] to the chair. We ought not to be obliged to listen to this colloquy.

Mr. MANN. If an appeal is in order, Mr. Speaker, what follows does not make any difference. Here for years this motion has been held in order as an orderly proceeding. The Speaker has now decided that it is not in order. Certainly it is in order for the House, then, on an appeal, to determine whether the recent ruling of the Speaker is the proper ruling or whether the rulings of his predecessors on the subject were proper rulings.

The SPEAKER. But the House has already decided that once.

Mr. MANN. That may be. I understand the House decided that once, but you can not always reverse a long line of precedents by one decision. I want to know what is to be the ruling of the House—not merely of this Speaker, but of Speakers who may follow him.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if I may say just one word, I think I was in error a moment ago when I said that when the gentleman from Illinois rose to make his motion the Speaker asked him for what purpose he rose. My recollection now, refreshing it, is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] rose without recognition and said: "Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn." As soon as he did so I made the point of order that he was not entitled to be recognized for that purpose. The issue before the Chair was the question of recognition, and there is no appeal on that question and never has been.

The SPEAKER. The House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] in the chair. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pacific Branch, Santa Monica, Cal.: For current expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $46,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out "$46,500" and insert "$47,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the amendment will be reported. We will have that much order, Mr. Chairman, anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 21, page 84, strike out "$46,500" and insert "$47,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just what the purpose of the committee was in skinning this down from $47,000 to $46,500. The current appropriation was $47,000. This item covers a great many things in connection with the soldiers' homes. The item in this place refers to the items under the Central Branch. The Central Branch item includes the pay of officers and noncommissioned officers of the home, and their clerks, weighmasters, and orderlies; payments for chaplains, religious instruction, and entertainment for the members of the home; printers, bookbinders, librarians, musicians, telegraph and telephone operators, guards, janitors, watchmen, and fire company; for all property and materials purchased for their use; for necessary expenditures for articles of amusement, library books, magazines, papers, pictures, and musical instruments; and for stationery, advertising, legal advice, for payments due heirs of deceased members.

Now, just why the committee thought it its duty to reduce the sum from $27,000 to $26,500 I do not know. I suppose it was because of the condition of the Treasury. Every dollar that the committee can cut off from an appropriation is now considered quite a big sum. They had to skin all of these things. Think of the great Committee on Appropriations in reference to soldiers' homes being so closefisted that it proposes to reduce the appropriation for all these items from $47,000 to $46,500. I wonder they did not make it $46,499. That would have saved one more dollar from the appropriations. Have we come to the point in the history of our country and the Treasury statements where we have to cut off an item of $500 for the support of soldiers' homes, split even thousands, coming from $47,000 down to $46,500? Can not we raise enough money to provide the odd $500? Why, I think the gentleman from New York ought to be able to contribute that out of his own pocket.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the reason is so simple that I am surprised that the gentleman from Illinois should ask it. The appropriation for the current year was $47,000. The estimates were $47,000. When the items were under examination Maj. Harris, the treasurer of the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home, was before the Committee on Appropriations, with other members of the board. Taking these items, I said, "The next item is for the Pacific Branch, Santa Monica, Cal. For current expenses the appropriation is $47,000, and you are asking for $47,000." Maj. Harris said, "That can be reduced to $46,500." As those in charge of the homes, responsible for their administration, volunteered the information that upon further consideration they did not require $47,000 but only required $46,500, the committee acquiesced in their recommendation without any thought of whether the Treasury would be affected one way or the other. If the board of managers, instead of reducing the appropriation had submitted information that it was necessary for the proper conduct of the home to increase the appropriation, the committee would have made that recommendation. If there is any criticism to be made for the reduction of this sum, it is not the Democratic Members of Congress that should be criticized but the Republican members of the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Home who have requested that the appropriation for this purpose be reduced by $500.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee, in preparing this bill, endeavored to economize as far as it could consistently do so, because it understood the condition of the Treasury and the waning balance in the general fund. They realized our decreasing exports and our increasing imports. They even understood the condition of the gold reserve, a condition which is very clearly indicated in the newspaper clipping which I hold in my hand, showing that since May 1 we have exported $53,000,000 of gold, and that since the beginning of the fiscal year the total export of gold has been $69,000,000.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman is not speaking to the subject matter of any amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I am discussing the necessity of economy.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit an inquiry.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLOAN. I want to ask the gentleman, who speaks of a waning condition of the Treasury, if that is actually the condition or whether it is clearly psychological?

Mr. MONDELL. So far as the balance in the Treasury is concerned, it is an actual dwindling and not psychological.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I want to ask the gentleman what consideration did we get for the $53,000,000 in gold that we shipped abroad?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know, we may have caught some foreign articles for that sum.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Wyoming has no right to yield to the gentleman from Michigan without permission of the Chair.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I addressed the Chair.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope this will not be taken out of my time. I hoped I might have time enough to say, after reading the clipping, that we transferred forty-three millions of gold to the Subtreasury in New York the other day and call attention to the fact that the administration has got so alarmed about the situation that I understand we are now, for the first time in our history, paying the employees of the Government in silver certificates. I understand that on the last pay day in this city the clerks and employees of the Government were paid almost exclusively in silver certificates.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. DONOVAN. I do not want him to yield, Mr. Chairman. I insist on the point of order that he is not speaking on the subject matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Wyoming was reasonably within his rights.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will say "the gentleman's usual way of being within his rights," I think the Chair would state it correctly. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in view of this unfortunate condition of the Treasury, this constantly growing excess of expenditures over receipts, this constant outward flow of gold, this necessity of paying the employees of the Government in silver certificates, in order to maintain a gold reserve—in view of all these facts, the gentleman from Illinois ought to understand that we must save, that we must cut down these appropriation bills, if it is only in the sum of $500.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DONOVAN) there were—ayes 47, noes 43.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. DONOVAN were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported ayes 54, noes 46.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POU, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 4377. An act to provide for the construction of two revenue cutters; and

S. 661. An act for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WINGO, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LOBECK, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. DOREMUS, for one week, on account of important business.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. For the purpose of making a request for unanimous consent, and to inform the House that while nothing has erupted here in the House, there is a new volcano in my district——

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 38, noes 51.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present, and the gentleman from Illinois moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVY. My resolution—— [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to get unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. LEVY. But it is a motion to adjourn the Congress on a certain date. I offered the resolution before the gentleman from New York made his motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn has precedence over the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. How does the Chair know? He has not yet heard my resolution read. It is an adjournment resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman just stated that it provided for the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn has precedence over any other motion.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVY. Has it precedence over the resolution of final adjournment of Congress?

The SPEAKER. Of course it has, because it takes a concurrent resolution to adjourn Congress. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 53, noes 40.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. Thirty-four gentleman have risen in the affirmative, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. What is a sufficient number; one-fifth of the whole number or one-fifth of 100 or one-fifth of what?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has two things mixed. This is in the House, and a fifth of the Members voting on the last vote in the House can order the yeas and nays. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 50, nays 73, answered "present" 5, not voting 305, as follows:

The Clerk having called the roll once, the following occurred:

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the Clerk obliged, under the rules of the House, to call the roll a second time?

The SPEAKER. Not on a call of the House. Maybe the practice has been to call it twice. Perhaps that is true.

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to waive the second call.

The SPEAKER. We shall get along more quickly the other way.

At the conclusion of the colloquy the Clerk called the names of the Members who had failed to answer in the first call.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, how many are there here?

The SPEAKER. One hundred and twenty-eight.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is five minutes to 8, with 128 Members present, and more than 100 are required to get a quorum. While I believe that the Members should be here to transact public business, yet it is hardly worth while to punish the Members who are here by continuing the proceedings. If I thought we could get a quorum to-night I would move to stay. As it is, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, June 21, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Attorney General submitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases, which require an appropriation for their payment (H. Doc. No. 1048); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims which require an appropriation for payment (H. Doc. No. 1049); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to surplus fund (H. Doc. No. 1047); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation for the acquisition of a site for the post office at Phoenixville, Pa. (H. Doc. No. 1050); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, June 21, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore. Mr. RIORDAN.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God and Father of us all, we wait on Thy blessing as we assemble here on this peaceful Sabbath day to commemorate the life and deeds of a departed Member of this House; who won by dint of his own efforts the confidence, love, and respect of his fellows and leaves behind him a worthy record as a servant of the people in his State and Nation. Strong of mind, warm of heart, generous to all who sought him, the poor, the needy, the sick, the distressed, the unfortunate, the outcast found in him a sympathetic, tender, and devoted friend.

We thank Thee for the germ of goodness and purity Thou hast imparted unto Thy children, especially for the good which sees, loves, and acts. Such were his virtues. So may we cherish his memory and emulate his virtues.

Comfort his many friends, his dear ones, and bring them at last to share with him the reward of an everlasting life. In the name of Him who taught us life, love, immortality, and how to pray—Our Father who art in heaven. Hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

APPROVAL OF THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the reading of the Journal.

The motion was agreed to.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was approved.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, by unanimous consent, Ordered, That Sunday, June 21, 1914, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE RESOLUTION 549.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity be given for tribute to the memory of Hon. TIMOTHY D SULLIVAN, late a Member of this House from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That at the conclusion of to-day's proceedings the House, as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, do stand adjourned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

[Mr. FITZGERALD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, almost a year has passed since "the Stern Reaper, who gathereth all in whenever in His wisdom he may appoint," laid his dark and icy hand on one of our number, TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN; and, in accordance with the beautiful and time-honored custom of the House, we pause amid the stress of legislative duties to fittingly pronounce our estimate on the life and character of the distinguished dead.

I rise, sir, to pay my tribute of respect to the memory of our departed colleague, whose life was one of intense interest, filled with varied experiences and marvelous activities.

He was born on February 6, 1863. At the early age of 23, then already popular with the people of his district, he was elected a member of the Assembly of the State of New York, in which he served eight continuous terms, until 1894. He was then chosen a State senator, and continued in the senate until 1903. In 1902 he was elected a Representative in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and reelected to the Fifty-ninth Congress, from which, after a brief service, he resigned to go back to the State senate. He was again chosen a senator, and finally elected by an admiring constituency to the Sixty-third Congress, in which he served until he met his untimely and tragic death.

Timothy D. Sullivan's character was as unique as it was great. From the very hour he reached manhood's estate he became, and continued until his unfortunate death, a prominent figure in the politics of both State and city. As a leader of men he attracted widespread attention, not only of those engaged in public affairs, but of the citizenship generally. No man in our city was better or more widely known than he. No man within his time built up through personal effort and kept throughout the struggles and vicissitudes of political life a larger, stronger, or more faithful and loyal following.

In the State legislature, during the score of years of his service, he was a most influential and frequently a dominating factor. No man in the ordinary walks of private or public life had a larger acquaintance with men of every rank, station, and condition. His friends were countless thousands; not merely in the State, but were to be found throughout the Union. This man, whose influence among the people and in legislative halls was so extensive, whose power in legislature and in party council was so great, whose knowledge of public affairs so diversified, whose keenness of intellect gave him such insight into the intricacies of political affairs as at times made him master of political situations, whose army of friends and devoted followers were numberless, whose name was a household word in his district and the surrounding neighborhood, whose successes in business enterprises as well as in politics followed one another closely, whose liberal generosity, broad charity, and merciful kindness to the needy and the fallen brought cheer to many a heavy heart and sunshine to many a desolate home—this man came from the ranks of the lowly and the humble, for he was born in poverty and reared amid adversity.

Bereft of his father when but a small lad, TIMOTHY in his earliest years had already tasted the cup of sorrow. He became a newsboy, and with the scant earnings from vending papers in the street this ragged, barefooted boy aided in the support of his widowed mother.

I shall never forget the occasion when SULLIVAN, in a public meeting some years ago, spoke in defending himself against an attack made on him in the public prints. It was contrary to his custom to reply to such criticism, but this once he departed from his accustomed way. He referred feelingly to his early training by his aged mother; and this strong, manly man, who had courageously fought many a battle and bravely withstood many a political storm, burst into tears that told more deeply than words can describe the depths of his filial love and the intensity of his sympathetic soul.

He represented part of the East Side of New York City. Its population, comprising people of various nationalities, animated by their love and appreciation of the value of our American institutions, take pride and display keen interest in the men they select for public office. It is a tenement-house district, abounding with myriads of homes of the struggling and toiling masses. It has not the advantages of the more fortunate and wealthy, but it is rich—exceedingly rich—in the possession of a good, honest, intelligent, thrifty and industrious people, the so-called everyday people, who make up the bone and sinew and contribute to the strength and the pride of our citizenship and the welfare of our country.

TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN was in close sympathy and touch with his people. He mingled with them in the warm spirit of genuine fellowship. The most humble and unfortunate could approach him as readily as those in the higher ranks of life. Kind-hearted and generous to a fault, he never was so happy as when he could relieve the distress of the poor or assist some erring being who in his weakness needed the aid of his fellow man to help him rise again. He understood the frailties of human nature and what temptations in the hour of penury and sorrow and tribulation beset men. He did not, as some do, preach mercy and kindness and forgiveness and then withhold the helping hand to lift up the fallen and penitent that he may regain usefulness and be restored to self-respect. The grief of man or woman, the tear of suffering child, the pitiful entreaty of an erring soul appealed quickly to his gentle and sympathetic nature. His manifold acts of kindness attested that he was in unison with the sentiment expressed by the poet:

> In men whom we condemn as ill,
> I find so much of goodness still;
> In men whom we pronounce divine,
> I find so much of sin and blot,
> I hesitate to draw the line
> Between the two, when God has not.

He had risen to a position of affluence, yet he had always the same plain man of the people. He never forgot he sprang from them and was uplifted by them. He observed one rule for rich and poor alike. He was a man of action and of deeds, and not of words. Indeed—

> He blew no trumpet in the market place,
> Nor in the church with hypocritic face
> Supplied with cant the lack of manly grace.
> Loathing pretense, he did with cheerful will
> What others talked of while their hands stood still.

TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN was an uncompromising Democrat. He fought hard and skillfully for his party and never failed in the district wherein he was the idol of his followers to bring success to the Democratic ticket. Yet, withal, his fairness secured for him a host of friends from the ranks of his political adversaries.

He was not an orator who dealt in flowery language and ornate periods, but a logical, practical, and convincing talker who presented his facts clearly in a common-sense way and frequently with commanding power. Had he remained in Congress he might have developed into a useful, working Member. His large legislative experience would have stood him well in hand and his work in committee could have been most useful. There is a mistaken notion prevalent among many of the American people that the best work of Congress is done on the floor and that to be a useful Member one must be found there indulging frequently in spirited debate. They little know that some of the most laborious and serviceable work is done by the earnest, sincere Member of the House in the committee room. And after all, there in the committee room, where the complex problems are first investigated and discussed, and where the difficult task of framing and shaping legislation to be reported to the House, or where bills without merit are to be laid aside, is where the usefulness, the skill, and the ability of a Member is oft put to severe test.

The malady with which Mr. SULLIVAN was stricken unfortunately cut short his career, and in September last we were startled with the intelligence of his pathetic death. The reports published in almost every newspaper in the land sent a shudder of horror through us all. It was the story of a great tragedy, and friend and foe alike in sorrow mourned. Again came vividly and in startling form the lesson we so frequently forget that teaches the uncertainty of human life. The awful story of the tragic death of this man whose district loved him so devotedly cast a gloom all over the locality where he was known so well. The people there mourned as they had never mourned before the loss of any of their neighbors or public men. The terrible news that this man in the prime of life and the height of his career had met with such a fearful fate brought again to the minds of men a realization of how vain after all is this transitory existence.

'Tis the wink of an eye, 'tis the draft of a breath,
From the blossom of health to the paleness of death,
From the gilded saloon to the bier and the shroud,
Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?

Mr. Speaker, the funeral of TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN was one of the most remarkable in point of attendance of people and in general sorrowing and mourning of a devoted constituency ever witnessed anywhere. For days the body of the deceased lay in the club house on the Bowery, and the scene there of men and women, with saddened faces and tearful eyes, coming and going by the thousands during all the hours and way into the far hours of the night was most inspiring and deeply affecting. As the throngs came and went— the rich, the middle class, and the poor—as the many thousands of those who had been the recipients of SULLIVAN'S benefactions and his kindness cast longing, lingering looks on the face of the man they had loved so well, as they knelt and silently prayed for the repose of his soul and then departed with faces betokening unfeigned sorrow and poignant grief at the loss of him who was in truth their friend, the stoutest heart was moved to tears. The floral tributes coming from every quarter of the city and from other sections of the State, the attendance of men and women and children from far and wide to pay respect to the memory of this man attested the universal popularity of our late colleague whose life, whose career, and death are so full of incident, so dramatic in detail, so fraught with lessons of equal opportunity in this Republic to all.

And those of us who in the sad contemplations of this hour reflect upon the many who have left us to go to the land of shadows and enter the state of a blissful immortality, as we take a retrospect and think of the losses we have suffered in the past we may well say—

Life's shores are shifting
Every year.
And we are seaward drifting
Every year,
Old places, changing, fret us,
The living more forget us,
There are fewer to regret us
Every year.
But the truer life grows nigher
Every year;
Earth's hold on us grows slighter,
And the heavy burdens lighter,
And the dawn immortal brighter.
Every year.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the life and public service of our late colleague, Hon. TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, are a shining example of the great possibilities that lie in the path of every American citizen. He was one of the plain people—a true type of his constituents. They looked to him for leadership and advice and always found a sympathetic listener and a willing counselor whenever they applied to him for sympathy or counsel. His was a strong character. He was an apt student in the school of practical experience. He learned to know men as they are, not as the idealists paint them. He became a leader among his fellows because the plain people whom he represented believed in him and had confidence in his judgment.

His goodness of heart and his many deeds of charity made his name a household word in hundreds of the homes of his congressional district. Indeed, his bounty and his charity were known all over the great metropolis in which he was born and grew to man's estate. He was always willing to extend aid to relieve distress and to give help to the needy. His bigness of heart and his love of his fellow man manifested themselves in various benefactions for which he became justly noted. He always found time to give a little attention to those who were less fortunate than he in the struggle for existence. Small wonder, therefore, that when the news of his tragic death was announced in the press of the country there was genuine sorrow for this big-hearted liberal-minded son of the East Side of New York. The thousands who stood with bent head and tearful eyes as his remains were carried to their last resting place attested more eloquently than spoken words the deep affection they had for this simple, rugged type of the self-made American citizen.

Personally, representing in part the city of San Francisco, Cal., and speaking for my constituency, I take this occasion to express the deep sense of obligation and gratitude which I and my constituents feel toward our late colleague. In 1911 the city of San Francisco desired to receive congressional recognition as the place to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal in 1915. The contest for the honor was a long and hard-fought battle. Mr. SULLIVAN had unbounded confidence in the future of the great West and felt that San Francisco was the logical point at which the exposition in commemoration of the completion of that feat should be celebrated. Without hesitation he threw the weight of his great influence in favor of San Francisco. He was a tower of strength to our cause in that fight. I believe it but justice to his memory to make this brief statement in acknowledgment of the debt of gratitude which we of San Francisco and the Pacific coast owe him.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Speaker, my late colleague, TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, has been called from among us to fill his allotted place in the great to-morrow, without having had an opportunity to fill his last mission which an admiring and loving constituency intrusted to him. His personality will live forever in the hearts of the people in the great East Side of New York until they are called to cross the border to meet him on the other side, and the record of his charitable deeds will be handed down to their children's children as folklore in the community of his birth.

His hearty laugh, his genial manner, and his earnest and sincere loyalty to the people in his neighborhood, together with his deep interest in humanity and human kind, won him their everlasting gratitude, respect, love, and adoration, which all combined compose the bouquet of the human heart.

His parents belonged to that noble race whose love of liberty has caused them to fight on the side of freedom under every flag when it stood for justice and equality of the individual, and that race finally achieved self-government without an armed conflict. The inborn love for his fellowman, which shone out of his radiant face at all times, he inherited from his ancestral lineage.

He was born among the poor in the district that he represented, in the country his parents adopted, and never deserted their interests. He, knowing their wants by intimate contact, saw that they were filled; he was the arbitrator of their disputes, the leader in their pleasures, the champion of their cause, and the idol of their hearts.

They, in turn, honored him with the best gift they had—their franchise, which placed him among us as a Member of the House of Representatives, previously having sent him to the New York Legislature, thus delegating to him their interests in the framing of the laws under which they have to live.

His name is spoken in reverence; his life, which he lived for others, is referred to in terms of the deepest gratitude radiating from the hearts and souls of the poor people of the city in which he lived his life. His death is hallowed by that true and sincere reverence and sorrow that the poor and lonely can only know.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, TIMOTHY DANIEL SULLIVAN was a pioneer, a toiler, a leader in that great field of humanitarian activity that relieved the great East Side of 20 years ago of many of its sorrows, its hardships, and its woes. And we are met here to-day, in accordance with the time-honored custom of this House, to tell the simple story of his struggles for his fellow man, and to pay a well-merited tribute to his noble work and his great personal worth.

He possessed a strikingly attractive and magnetic personality, which enabled him to make and to retain friends. As a leader among men he ruled not with an iron hand but with a sympathetic and disinterested spirit of kindly consideration that impressed the recipient of his favor with the dignity and grandeur of his ingenuous nature. As a man he was ardently beloved by his friends and highly esteemed and honored by all who knew and understood his work. His good deeds and generous nature embraced all mankind and were circumscribed by no mean or narrow distinctions of race, creed, color, or condition in life. He was primarily the friend of the poor and the needy, and scores of the fallen and the outcast were given a new start and a better chance in life by this big-hearted, whole-souled, manly man.

He was always kind, and ever sought to win the confidence of men by sympathy and love. There was not even the semblance of malice in his nature. To him his erring and fallen brothers did not seem entirely depraved, although considered so by society. He believed they were not wholly bad, and that there dwelled deep down in the heart of every man, however unfortunate or misguided, true and God-given promptings and aspirations to the higher and nobler ideals of life. He knew that back of every thought and act were the original forces of heredity, that could be regulated and controlled by environment and circumstances, which furnished the seeds of either good or evil. And through all his days, with sound and stainless heart, he was kind, compassionate, tender, and helpful to the erring.

Born on the East Side, of poor but honest parents, richly endowed with the sterling qualities of good old Irish stock, he spent his infancy and youth amid the struggle and strife of the crowded streets of a great city. His father died, leaving him, at the tender age of 8, in poverty and obscurity, to begin the battle of life for the support of his widowed mother and her helpless children.

His childhood and youth were not passed in the comparatively easy poverty of the country, but in the repressive atmosphere of the grinding, sordid, baleful poverty of the congested districts of a great city. The inspiration of majestic nature in all her varied charms and beauty played very little part in the development of the character and quality of young TIM SULLIVAN. The bright and glorious sunrise, the whisper of the breeze in the forest, the sweet songs of the birds, the ever changing aspects of nature from verdant spring to golden harvest, never came with their mysterious blessings to mellow his young life. But from early childhood, through youth and young manhood, to maturity he found his inspiration in the faces of men and women living, like himself, the lives of hardship and struggle, lives from which the simple struggle for a bare existence sapped all the strength and energy of strong men and taxed to the breaking point the endurance of patient, loyal, devoted, self-sacrificing women. To carry whatever sunshine of human kindness he could find into these lives, to make this eternal and ceaseless battle of the breadwinner struggling for a mere existence a little lighter, became the constant aim and steady purpose of his noble life.

Inspired by a strong and deep-rooted love and solicitude for the welfare of his mother, his restless, ambitious nature craved ardently for work. He became a newsboy, then a bundle boy and a hustler in the newspaper offices of Park Row. His energy, industry, and activity soon won for him rapid advancement and promotion.

He was big, brawny, handsome, good-natured, and generous hearted, and by force of his dominating personality he forged to leadership, even in his childhood. He was the arbiter for his companions in their boyhood disputes, and the invariable justness of his decisions won for him the admiration, the confidence, and the esteem of all who knew him. He had the native wisdom of the untutored philosopher, the common sense of the matured man, and the heart of an innocent child.

He became active in politics, and soon won to his standard the men of the community who were worth while and who believed in his honesty, his loyalty, and his sincerity. He became in steady succession the leader of his district, assemblyman, senator, Congressman. He was elected to every office of honor and distinction to which he aspired by overwhelming majorities. He never knew defeat. His people were as loyal to him as he was to them.

So completely had he won their affection and their confidence that there was no honor within the gift of his loyal and devoted people that they would not willingly have bestowed upon him. He was supreme in his district, and his supremacy was built upon the great love he had for the poor, the forsaken, the friendless. He shielded the weak and attacked the strong and gave to every man a square deal.

In business, as in politics, success and prosperity rewarded his genius and industry. His name became prominently associated with business enterprises extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast—enterprises through which he accumulated vast wealth. And he always acted in the control of that wealth upon the principle "that no man liveth and no man dieth unto himself alone." Mankind can not value the heritage of a life well lived. We can not all agree as to the life of any man; but if we write their good deeds upon the tablets of our hearts and their faults upon the sands of the seashore, when the waves have washed across the beach we will have stored up ideals for the betterment of mankind.

Stirred by the pathos of human suffering, knowing the pall that falls on every life that is blighted by adversity, knowing the anguish, the sorrow, the tears, the heartaches that lie within the lowly walls of the East Side tenement, this great and generous spirit, with sensibilities keenly alive to human frailty in all its forms, strove with all his power to better the lot of his less fortunate fellow man. Attacked on every side, maligned by those whose selfish interests were best subserved by impugning his lofty motives, assailed by all who preached the doctrine of scientific charity, a species of charity that his generous nature and noble heart could never understand, he wavered not in his steady purpose, but persevered whole-hearted to the end.

He had no sympathy with the propaganda of scientific charity, but he did possess that serene philosophy that looks on sin as the inherent weakness of human nature and pities those who fall.

He lived a life replete with good and noble deeds, and each day added to the sum of human happiness. By direct giving and personal benefaction he carried happiness into the hearts of more people, relieved more distress, fed more of the hungry, clothed more of the poor, buried more of the unfortunate dead, and gave a new start in life to more of the helpless, the hopeless, the bruised and persecuted children of misfortune than was ever dreamed of in the whole philosophy of scientific charity. And his memory to-day is lovingly enshrined in the hearts of more men, women, and children, more clergymen, judges, lawyers, doctors, merchants, more of the rich, the poor, and the unfortunate, than that of any other public man that has departed this life in the great metropolis in recent times.

The name of this noble soul is a household word in the great throbbing East Side. He battled for the hopes of men. His heart was with the unfortunate. He stood against the onslaughts of greed that preyed upon the lifeblood of the poor. In his beneficent labors for the outcast he did not fear to stand alone. He was brave, generous, loyal, and true, and he will long live in the affectionate regard of the legions of the lowly, who always looked up to him as their protector and their friend.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, however familiar to us may be the details of the life of our lamented colleague, TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, "time does not wither nor custom stale" them; each fresh narration is a "twice-told tale" of fascinating interest and power. The eloquent presentation of the facts of his life to which we have listened only serves to impress us more profoundly than ever with a sense of the man's bigness, and nothing now remains for those of us who knew him personally except to add a touch of color here and there to the portrait of him which has now been painted.

Considering only the externals of his life, the things most in the public eye, the one most impressive thing about him is that he was a self-made man. We hear much of such men in our land, and many are held up for the admiration and emulation of our youth; our democracy is boasted as the nursery of self-made men. But when the elements of family and social influence, hereditary wealth or prerogatives, fortunate circumstances, and good luck are eliminated, little is left of the "self-made" in many of these notable examples.

But analyze Representative SULLIVAN'S life as you will, you can not escape the conclusion that his success, worldly or otherwise, was not due to adventitious aids, but solely and entirely to his native abilities and ambition, to restless energy and creative faculties. His desire to succeed and be an independent factor in life made him a business man in his teens; his power over men, his talent for leadership, his magnetic personality, manifested themselves so early that he was an elected representative of his people as soon as he was a man.

True, he was a politician, and it has become the fashion to deride politicians as the epitome of all that is opposed to the interests of the people. Yet, judged even by the standards of the reformers and uplifters, Representative SULLIVAN was a fine example of success in public life. He represented the people of his district in the State Assembly and Senate and in Congress so well that he broke down all party lines and became the idol of every man, woman, and child. It was said of him that he carried his district around in his pocket. The truth was that he carried his district around in his personality, and it is given to few men to inspire in their friends and neighbors such affectionate devotion, such unbounded loyalty, as was given to him by all the people of his district.

And he deserved it all. Throughout his public life, and in the business life which brought him a competence and showed how well he could succeed in any field, he was ever a man of his word. He was a plain dealer and a truthteller; he hated quibbles and evasions and technicalities; he tried for big things, he achieved big things, and success was dear to him; yet he would rather have failed a thousand times than once go back on his pledged word, the word which was his bond. In his own picturesque language, he was neither a "quitter" nor a "welcher." He was straight and true to the core, and upon that foundation his friends and followers built up their faith and loyalty.

But the most impressive side of his character, and the least known to the general public, was his bigness of heart, his free hand in the distribution of aid to the needy and helpless; his charities were not reported in the newspapers, and he was not a founder of colleges or libraries; yet for many years, in spite of the lack of press agents, he was the big brother and ever-ready friend to hundreds of families and thousands of people; he gave so freely and cheerfully, without question as to the history of the applicant or the use of the largess, that his close associates had to invent schemes to protect him from poverty.

He was thus a man of the people, never found wanting in times of trouble or need, the tried and true friend when the real test of friendship came. He was never much of an orator or talker; he never—

> Walked beside the evening sea,
> And dreamed a dream that could not be.

He was a man of deeds, of friendly acts, of the helping hand to his friends and neighbors; "the still strong man in a blatent land." His attitude toward life can be summed up in those splended lines of Sam Walter Foss—

> Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
> And be a friend to man.

After years of personal association the term "Big Tim," to those privileged to so call him, came to represent all of affection and genuine feeling that could be crowded into a name; and his monument is now in the hearts of countless thousands who mourned his passing as a personal loss.

His end was a pathetic one, and yet such as he would have wished; no trappings or pageants, no "last words" to a tearful accompaniment; he wished to steal away as quietly as he could, without disturbance to the friends whose hearts were overflowing with love for him. He felt that his work was done, and he wanted to pass out unnoticed.

> Some time at eve when the tide is low,
> I shall slip my mooring and sail away,
> With no response to the friendly hail
> Of kindred craft in the busy bay.
> In the silent hush of the twilight pale,
> When the night stoops down to embrace the day,
> And the voices call in the waters' flow—
> Some time at eve when the tide is low,
> I shall slip my mooring and sail away.

Thus quietly did he go; his memory will be no "thistle on the wind of many men's tongues," but a throbbing wound in loving hearts, lasting while life endures.

> Peace to his ashes;
> Honor to his memory.

[Mr. HAMILL addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives, following a sacred custom, pauses on this Sabbath afternoon to render its tribute of respect to the name and memory of the late lamented TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, who represented in this Congress the Thirteenth New York District.

Born in New York City of Irish parentage in 1863, at a time when the North and South were engaged in unhappy internecine strife, his life spells American opportunity.

Poverty was his heritage. He made his own way in the business world, and in legislative halls by force of character. He rose from newsboy on the streets of the metropolis to a legislator of prominence in the Empire State, having been a member of the assembly for five years and a member of the State senate for 10 years. He also served in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses.

TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, affectionately known as "Big Tim" to every man, woman, and child in the Thirteenth New York District, was a postgraduate in the course of practical politics. His word was his bond, his pledge once given ever remained inviolate. He was loyal to his friends, devoted to their interests, unswerving in his party fealty.

He was not a hypocritical, theoretical moral uplifter, but a deep student of human nature, whose heart, early trained in the school of adversity, beat in sympathetic unison with the sufferings of frail humanity. The barefoot newsboy on the streets of Manhattan had known the pang of hunger and the heartache of poverty. In the classroom of experience he learned the wonderful significance of God's injunction, "Feed the hungry, clothe the naked." And when prosperity came he needed no urging to do the Master's bidding.

Christmas Day on the much-maligned, much-misunderstood Bowery, which loved him and which he loved, saw TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN in his happiest rôle—the almoner of the poor, the comforter of the afflicted. He loved mankind with a love that knew no limitations. His hands were always outstretched to the poor fellow who started life with the odds against him, who fell by the wayside in life's journey to the great beyond.

The words of his Creator, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone," seemed to be the spirit that guided him in his treatment of those who sinned against society.

He is gone. The poor of New York City have lost a benefactor, the oppressed a champion, the fallen a mediator. He is gone, but his memory still lingers, and ever will, among the poor of the teeming lower East Side, who knew him best and loved him most.

> Leaves have their time to fall,
> And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
> And stars to set; but all—
> Thou hast all reasons for thine own, O Death!

Mr. GITTINS. Mr. Speaker, it fell to my lot to make formal announcement here of the death of Hon. TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, who had been elected to represent a New York City constituency here in the Fifty-eighth, Fifty-ninth, and Sixty-third Congresses. He had also been four times elected and served four two-year terms in the senate of his native State. It was during my service in the State Senate of New York in 1911 and 1912 that I gained the pleasure and advantage of a somewhat intimate acquaintance with "Big Tim," as everyone called him. The name did not belie the man. It fitted, rather, every faculty of his mind, every phase of his character. It would not have been enough were he called "Big-Hearted Tim."

Mr. Speaker, one of the great compensations which attend membership in the American House of Representatives is the privilege of meeting and knowing great men, statesmen and leaders of people. I have never met a man in public life anywhere who took deeper hold on my affections than did BIG TIM SULLIVAN. His kind is the rarest kind. Many great minds there are, but few indeed have possessed such a heart. As deep and broad as the ocean was his humanity. He always loved mankind, but he loved it most in its afflictions. He was broad and tolerant. The humble thanks of the poor and afflicted brought more pleasure to his soul than any other worldly thing could give.

To speak of a man as genuine has always seemed to me the highest kind of tribute to personal character. Mr. SULLIVAN was genuine. People may speak of the artistic temperament, the judicial temperament, the legislative temperament, but "Big Tim" personified in his temperament all the cardinal virtues. He was filled with faith, hope, and charity; and with him the greatest of these was charity.

In temper he was as simple as a child, as brave as a lion, as tender as a woman. Candor and courage were marked virtues with him. He loved his country with an intense love, and the welfare of his constituents was his highest aim.

He advocated suffrage for women because, he said, he observed in late years as many women as men on the streets of New York at 6 o'clock in the morning.

I learned to respect him for his native wisdom and his broad learning, acquired in the bitter school of experience. His presence always lent a distinct quality to any conference on political and governmental subjects. He always advanced considerations which otherwise would not receive proper attention. His rise from abject poverty to a high place among the leaders of men can only be accounted for by crediting him with high qualities of both heart and mind and an industry of uncommon kind. His abstemious life was also a contributory cause. It is not generally known that he never drank liquor nor used tobacco.

For his simple virtue I would paraphrase Leigh Hunt's immortal poem:

Abou BIG TIM (may his tribe increase!)
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw, within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich, and like a lily in bloom,
An angel writing in a book of gold;
Exceeding peace had made BIG TIM bold,
And to the Presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?" The vision raised its head,
And with a look made all of sweet accord,
Answered, "The names of those who love the Lord."
"And is mine one?" said TIM. "Nay; not so,"
Replied the angel. TIM spake more low,
But cheerily still, and said, "I pray thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellow men."
The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
It came again with great awakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blest,
And lo! BIG TIM'S name led all the rest.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN was a type of man in the public life in New York City that is fast becoming extinct. Born in that city in 1863 of Irish parentage, he was elected to the New York Assembly when hardly of age. He was subsequently elected to the senate and served for a number of years. He was elected to the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses, again elected to the State senate, being elected in 1912 to the Sixty-third Congress. He was a comparatively young man; but in the years that he lived there were crowded together many events of a public character with which he had much to do. Congressman SULLIVAN was a natural leader of men. He did not dominate them through fear of his power, but rather through a kindly disposition. He practiced the art of winning his people by treating them kindly and taking care of them in their hour of distress. He had lived among them as a poor boy, grown up among them, knew their needs, and knew how to win their affection and loyalty.

Mr. SULLIVAN was a man of very large influence in the Democratic Party in New York City in that section lying south of Fourteenth Street, a section upon which the Democratic organization depended for its large majorities. Mr. SULLIVAN, through his years of leadership, was always accessible to every human being who lived in his neighborhood. He believed it the duty of a political leader to find employment for his people, to take care of them when they were sick, to bury their dead if their family was without funds; to save the wayward boy from prison and a life of crime when he was arrested for some slight violation of the law—in other words, he stood as the father of his whole community. He never posed as the leader of his party in New York, but rather as one of the group of men who molded the policy of that party. I seldom agreed with Congressman SULLIVAN in any of the public policies he advocated, and have always been on the opposite side politically, but I had a very high regard for his constant consideration of his people, particularly his attitude toward the unfortunate and friendless of our city.

One Christmas Day, without being known, I visited his headquarters in the Bowery in New York City where all the poor and derelicts of the city were gathered for their Christmas dinner. His custom was to give everybody who came a substantial meal, and before they left to provide them with some warm clothing and shoes to protect them from the winter weather. It was a wonderful sight, and I learned then why these men would vote for and with him on any measure, and die for him if asked. He had a kindly smile and was a man of exemplary personal habits. Among the people with whom he lived and by many great charities in the city of New York he will be sorely missed. I am glad to be present to-day and stand in my place to pay my personal tribute to this man who was so suddenly taken away, a man unique and a tower of strength in his day—a master politician of his kind and a big-hearted friend. New York City in his death lost one of its most interesting characters. The Democratic Party lost one of its strongest leaders, and the people of his district, irrespective of party, lost a kind, good, and true friend, and we all lost one of the most likable men who ever became a leader.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read an address sent here by our colleague, Hon. HARRY HOWARD DALE, of the fourth New York district, who, much to his regret, is unavoidably absent to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives meets to-day to pay its final tribute of respect to one of its Members, the Hon. TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, who passed away on August 31, in the year 1913. The poor people of the city of New York were shocked to the extreme when the sad news reached them that their dearest friend's eyes had closed in death. Such was TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN that we gather here to-day to pay tribute to. As a New York boy beginning his life, the struggle being a hard one, he never forgot the fact that he was a member of the common people, and until his death was ever ready and willing to aid and assist them; and therefore this element which goes to make up the great population of the metropolitan city of New York will forever honor the grand characteristics and memory of their noble champion who has answered the inevitable summons.

It was my pleasure to have spent several years in the Legislature of the State of New York with him, which gave me opportunity to personally observe and study him, and I therefore, Mr. Speaker, refer to him by reason of personal knowledge. His great motto always was: "To make success, all men must help each other." The people of the city of New York loved him. Many a heavy heart he gladdened that stood on the shore of despair by his ever-ready willingness, liberality, and charitable instinct. Most of his life was spent in what is known in the city of New York as the Bowery section, and he never forgot the scenes of his boyhood days, always keeping in touch with his people; always prominent in all their gatherings. He loved to associate with them, to greet them with a smile and a hearty grasp of the hand, and in return to receive their loyalty, love, and friendship. The letter carriers, the policemen, the firemen, the old soldiers, the friendless widow, and the homeless girl and boy will miss him, for he was ever their friend. They learned to know his ability and his worth, and they appreciated the faithfulness and devotion with which he served them. His memory will ever remain in the hearts of the people he represented so long and so ably. He was a self-made man. In his boyhood days he sold newspapers on the streets of New York.

Mr. Speaker, keeping that in mind and knowing what a great man he rose to be, it represents a hard and persistent battle. At a very early age, immediately after attaining his majority, he was elected to the Assembly of the State of New York to represent the people of the district where his boyhood days were spent. All that he was, the position that he achieved, was due to his own exertions and honest work. His career, indeed, furnishes a splendid lesson to the youth of this country and goes to show that in this land of the free and land of opportunity, however lowly or humble a boy's origin may be, he may rise to the highest rank and obtain the most exalted station. Of him it can be truly said that there is no stain upon his record and that he will be followed to his grave with the sincere regrets of all with whom he came in contact. Our colleague had an unfailing sense of humor, which smoothed over the rough obstacles of life we encounter on our travels. He was a good story teller; so when we saw him come, how welcome he became, knowing the likelihood of an enlivening conversation. His knowledge of political subjects was large, so that his observations were illuminated by reference to national events and what the great statesmen of the country had said and done in connection therewith, and his quotations were accurate and pertinent. He did not have the ambition for an orator's reputation, but was always ever alert to protect the interests of his people; and he never permitted any matter in which they were interested to be neglected or passed by. He eagerly watched such measures and was ever watchful in securing votes for the side he favored. Thus his great use to his district was known by his people and appreciated handsomely at the polls. He was an incessant worker for his constituents in all directions, so that they loved and honored him.

TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN was one of the kindest hearted men I ever knew. His grief was extreme for the loss of one he loved. I know, as do many others, the saddening effect upon his life of the death of his cousin, the late Timothy P. Sullivan. He never ceased to grieve over that loss, and I doubt if a day passed thereafter when he did not live over again the charming relations he had been permitted for years to enjoy. It was a blow from which he never recovered, and no doubt was in a large measure responsible for his lingering illness that finally brought him to his end. Mr. Speaker, I could go on for an unlimited period of time dwelling upon the public services he has rendered, his record for honest and intelligent service to not only the people of the Nation, but particularly to the people of the city of New York, which is too well known to be referred to here by me. His influence could always be relied upon in favor of those things that were for the right. His spirit was not that of a warrior trampling and crushing those who stood in the way of his ambition. On he ventured along the pathway, a bright smile upon his face, a willing hand to help the helpers on their way, and lo, when he reached the river a great multitude are gathered on its bank with rueful countenance, and when the boatman appears to bear him hence, there is still a greater multitude with outstretched hands to greet him on the shore.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] asks unanimous consent that Members who have not participated in to-day's ceremonies may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen, in accordance with the resolution previously adopted, the House now stands adjourned until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Monday, June 22, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for coming more and more out of the shadows into the clear light of day, for the increased knowledge that gives the brighter vision of Thy face, for the uplift of humanity that brings us into closer relationship to Thy great plan and purpose. The motive that Thou dost present to us is the strength of life. The influences of Thy grace are our inspiration. The ideals of Thy word are the glory of all our human endeavor. Grant us Thy grace and wisdom to walk with a clear conscience through the hours of this day. May we find high and holy fellowship with God in the discharge of all our duties. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

The Baptist Church of Beaufort, N. C., against United States (S. Doc. No. 521);

James B. Russell, administrator cum testamento annexo of William L. Hollis, deceased, against United States (S. Doc. No. 520);

Marcus D. Wright, executor of the last will and testament of Thomas G. Wright, deceased, against United States (S. Doc. No. 518); and

The trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South of Annandale, Va., against United States (S. Doc. 519).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

NEWLANDS-BROUSSARD RIVER-REGULATION BILL.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the river and harbor appropriation bill, and I desire to make a brief statement in connection therewith.

Ever since 1907 I have been urging the adoption of a river-regulation bill, providing a commission with a fund of $60,000,000 annually for 10 years, for the purpose of promoting the development and control of our rivers in the interest of navigation, and also with a view to the solution of the related questions of irrigation, forestry, fisheries, swamp-land reclamation, flood control, water-power development, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of transfer facilities and sites. Two years ago I succeeded in placing an amendment upon the river and harbor bill in the Senate providing for the skeleton organization covered by this bill, but the amendment was lost in conference because of the opposition of the House conferees. Since then, as the result of conferences with Senator RANSDELL and Senator-elect BROUSSARD, of Louisiana, the bill has been amended by fully recognizing the Mississippi River as a national problem, and the bill now has the active cooperation of these gentlemen, Mr. BROUSSARD having recently introduced it in the House. The bill is now known as the Newlands-Broussard bill.

Early in the present administration the President's attention was called to the bill as a substantial compliance with the Democratic platforms of the past two campaigns, calling in the most specific terms for comprehensive plans, an ample fund, the coordination of the scientific services, and the cooperation of the Nation with the States in the full development and control of our rivers for every useful purpose. The President was much interested and referred the bill to a Cabinet committee consisting of the Secretaries of War, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce for their study and report. This Cabinet committee is very favorably inclined toward the general lines of the bill, but recommends as a step in the ultimate solution of the problem the adoption of an amendment to the river and harbor bill practically on the lines of the amendment offered by me two years ago and adopted in the Senate. The matter has been the subject of discussion at a Cabinet meeting, and the President approves of this action.

The most important difference between this amendment and the full bill is that it does not carry the large and continuing appropriation for which the advocates of a comprehensive plan of waterway development have been working. It does, however, provide complete machinery for the coordination of the scientific services of the Government, for the study of the problems involved, and for the formulation of plans. The amendment has the approval of the Secretaries of the departments named, as well as of the President, and is acceptable to me as a step in the right direction, although it does not go as far as I had hoped it might be carried. It is my belief that upon such a substantial foundation, with the cordial cooperation of the administration, it will be a question of only a comparatively short time until the problem of how to conserve our water resources will be solved in the best possible way.

I ask that the amendment be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. —. That a commission, to be known as the river regulation commission, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, two Members of the Senate to be selected by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives to be selected by the Speaker, is hereby created and authorized to investigate questions relating to the development, improvement, regulation, and control of navigation as a part of interstate and foreign commerce, including therein the related questions of irrigation, forestry, fisheries, swamp-land reclamation, clarification of streams, regulation of flow, control of floods, utilization of water power, prevention of soil waste, cooperation of railways and waterways, and promotion of transfer facilities and sites, and to formulate, if practicable, and to report to the Congress comprehensive plans for the development of the waterways and water resources of the country for every useful purpose through cooperation between the United States and the several States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals within the jurisdiction, powers, and rights of each, respectively, assigning to the United States such portion of such development, promotion, regulation, and control, if any, as can be properly undertaken by the United States by virtue of its power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce and by reason of its proprietary interest in the public domain, and to States, municipalities, communities, corporations, and individuals such portion, if any, as properly belongs to their jursdiction, rights, and interests, with a view to properly apportioning costs and benefits, and with a view to so uniting the plans and works of the United States within its jurisdiction, and of the States and municipalities, respectively, within their jurisdictions, and of corporations, communities, and individuals within their respective powers and rights, as to secure the highest development and utilization of the waterways and water resources of the United States. Such river regulation commission is authorized for the purpose of said investigation and report to bring into coordination and cooperation with the Corps of Engineers of the Army, as a board or boards, the other scientific or constructive services of the United States that relate to the study, development, and control of waterways and water resources and subjects related thereto, and to the development and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, and to consider as a part of its study of a comprehensive plan the continuance of such a board or of such boards with a view to keeping such services in coordination and cooperation; and such river regulation commission is authorized to appoint as members of such board or boards such engineers, transportation experts, experts in water development, constructors, and other employees as it may deem advisable to appoint and employ in connection with the investigation and the formulation of plans herein authorized and to lease offices. And for the expenses of such investigation, organization, and formulation of plans the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. JONES conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 12579, the unfinished business, be laid before the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, on page 43, line 13.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 43, after the word "estimates," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$250,000," so as to read:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be or which have been heretofore disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $250,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910, and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, in line 20, after the word "expended," to insert:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Flathead Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. SMOOT. I make a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 7, before the word "lands," to strike out "allotted," so as to read:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the lands of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, etc.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the purpose of striking out the word "allotted"? Are there lands to be irrigated that are not allotted to the Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the question propounded by the distinguished Senator from Utah, I will refer to page 245, part 1, of the Senate committee hearings. The following proceedings are reported as having taken place before the Committee on Indian Affairs:

"For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $50,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907, and to remain available until expended."

The item is referred to on page 456 of the House hearings.

Mr. MERITT. This is another irrigation project which is being constructed by the Reclamation Service. There was expended on this project up to June 30, 1913, $830,321. It is estimated that it will cost approximately $3,000,000. The project, when completed, will irrigate about 122,000 acres of land, and the present irrigable area amounts to 10,800 acres. There are on this reservation approximately 2,700 Indians.

Senator PAGE. On this you say you agree with the House?

Mr. MERITT. We will be satisfied with the estimates allowed by the House.

Senator MYERS. I should like to have Mr. Newell heard on that.

Then Mr. Newell, the Director of the Reclamation Service, appeared and stated, inter alia, as follows:

Mr. NEWELL. This irrigation system in Montana is immediately south of a large irrigated area in Canada, and immediately north of a large privately irrigated tract, and is one of a series which are being built by the Government and private parties, extending all along the Rocky Mountain front. The appropriations have been from $300,000 down to $150,000 in 1912. As Mr. Meritt has stated, the total cost will be about $3,000,000, and less than $1,000,000 has been appropriated. The foundation has been laid for an extensive irrigation system for water to be brought on 10,000 more acres, all Indian land. In fact, all this land is Indian land that is to be irrigated. It is all irrigated land that has been allotted, but the Indians have not yet utilized any considerable part of it, as they have not yet accepted the ideas of allotments with alacrity. That is to say, they have not moved onto the lands.

Mr. Newell continues:

If we are to continue these irrigation systems, which seems to be the policy of Congress, the work should be carried on at a greater rate than that proposed of $50,000, which merely amounts to marking time. As stated, in the case of the Flathead, if we are to do anything, it ought to be done in an economical and effective manner, and that we should do something I think is testified by the fact that these Indians must be put on a self-supporting basis, must be put on the land, and in that climate the land should be irrigated. I think there are no questions here involved of whites sharing in the expense, because, as I understand it, nearly all the irrigable land is allotted to the Indians, and it is desired to continue the irrigation of those allotments to a point where the tribe can fairly share in them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not see anything thus far in what the Senator has read which indicates any reason for extending the irrigation to unallotted lands.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, with the word "allotted" stricken out it covers all the unallotted lands. With the word "allotted" remaining it would be only for the purpose of irrigating the allotted lands. Some of the Indians have not been allotted their share. If the word "allotted" were permitted to remain, it might be construed that the irrigation project would only be utilized and this provision could only be expended in the matter of irrigating allotted lands. Certain Indians have not had their lands allotted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not so understand the meaning of the word "allotted." I think the word "allotted" there is descriptive and is applied to the character of the lands to be irrigated. It does not necessarily mean lands which are now allotted. The same expression is used all the way through in all these appropriations.

Mr. ASHURST. It was the opinion of the committee——

Mr. TOWNSEND rose.

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator from Arizona will permit me, my understanding of the proposition is that the word "allotted" left in and the words in lines 8 and 9 left in would necessarily mean all the irrigable lands of the Indians. By striking it all out you have covered the Indians' land. It was thought that there should be two descriptive titles, each for a separate portion, to comprehend the whole. The committee have stricken out not only "allotted" but the words in lines 8 and 9, which referred to the other lands that were irrigable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The policy thus far has always been to provide for the irrigation of lands which were given to the Indians in severalty, not to provide for irrigation on these projects by tribal funds of lands which hereafter may be transferred to the whites. That might result in some embarrassment. If we make an appropriation to irrigate all Indian lands, hereafter a portion of those lands may be sold by the Government, and undoubtedly they will be sold to white settlers, and an embarrassing question perhaps might arise as to whether or not they carry the irrigation rights.

There ought to be some provision in the appropriation which confines the use of the appropriation for irrigation to lands which either now or hereafter are transferred to the Indians in severalty, and the word "allotted," which is used in all these expressions is a descriptive word. It is not a word which fixes a status at the present time, but it will apply to lands which are hereafter allotted to the Indians. However, if we strike it out, then you have a provision for all irrigable Indian lands, irrespective of whether they may or may not hereafter be allotted to the Indians.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The idea that the department had, as I recall it, in view of the discussion which was had before the committee, was that hereafter these lands were going to be used by the Indians; and there seemed to be quite a disposition on the part of the members of the committee to provide for the use of these lands for the Indians themselves; that whether these lands have been allotted or whether they were irrigable and unallotted, belonging to the tribe they should be used for the benefit of the tribe. The proposition was to cover the Indian lands. I myself can see very little difference between leaving both those portions in and striking them out. I would not want to have one stricken out and the other left in, but if one goes out evidently to my mind both should go out, and all the irrigable lands of the Indians of the Blackfeet Reservation would then be subject to the appropriation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I presume that in this case, as in all others, an estimate has been made as to how much money will be necessary to provide water for the lands which the Indians will occupy in severalty, and that that estimate does not cover all the Indian lands.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; it covers what will be needed at this time. $50,000, for the construction of necessary works for putting water on the land.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 8, after the word "Montana," to strike out "and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under authority of law," so as to read:

For continuing the construction of irrigation systems to irrigate the lands of the Indians of the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, including the necessary surveys, plans, and estimates, $50,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907, and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 13, after the word "expended," to insert:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Blackfeet Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved; and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make a point of order against that proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 2, after the word "expended," to insert:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Fort Peck Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make allotments in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 558), to unallotted children on the Fort Peck Reservation as long as any of the surplus lands within said reservation remain undisposed of, such allotments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I notice there are two provisos there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a divisible question, if the Senator desires to have it divided.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I make a point of order against the first proviso down to and including the word "repealed" in line 11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The words "and further" should be stricken out if the first proviso goes out.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words "and further" and begin, with the word "Provided," the proviso from line 11 to line 19 on page 45, so as to read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make allotments in accordance with the provisions of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 558), to unallotted children on the Fort Peck Reservation as long as any of the surplus lands within said reservation remain undisposed of, such allotments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The words "unallotted children" seem to introduce into the law a new expression. I have heard of "unallotted lands," but I have never heard of "unallotted children." I suppose what is meant is to allot lands to Indian children who have not yet had lands allotted to them.

Mr. ASHURST. The observation of the learned Senator from Utah is eminently correct from a grammatical standpoint, at least.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator having charge of the bill if this same provision as to other reservations has not been eliminated by points of order?

Mr. ASHURST. I will say to the honorable Senator from Utah that this is the first time we have met with this provision in the course of the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Will not the Senator from Arizona explain to the Senate as to why this provision is put into the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator from Utah refer to the matter not stricken out, from line 11 down to line 19, on page 45?

Mr. SMOOT. I refer to the matter beginning in line 12, which reads:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make allotments—

And so forth.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it was the opinion of the committee that——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Arizona a question which perhaps will clarify the situation quicker than it can be done by his looking up the record. Is this for the purpose of enrolling a number of Indian children who are not yet upon the rolls?

Mr. ASHURST. That is the purpose of the proposed legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have not any objection to it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think the committee amendment ought to be amended.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to suggest an amendment to the amendment, in lines 15 and 16, to strike out the words "unallotted," and after the word "reservation," in line 16, to insert "who have not received allotments."

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest that the words "who are entitled to receive allotments" should be inserted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the amendment of the committee, on page 45, line 15, before the word "children," I move to strike out the word "unallotted," and in line 16, after the words "Fort Peck Reservation," to insert "who have not received but who are entitled to allotments."

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, at the top of page 46, to insert:

For payment to the trustees of school district No. 23, Flathead County, Mont., for the tuition of Indian children during the year 1912, $471.60.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I received a letter from the county superintendent of schools in Box Elder County, Utah, some time ago, in which it was stated that the Indian Bureau, under some provision or lack of provision of the law, was no longer paying for the tuition of Indian children in that county. I was asked to bring the matter to the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which I did. Can the Senator from Arizona tell me whether the matter was taken care of by the committee in this bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my remembrance, without consulting the record, is that an item somewhat analogous to the one now brought to the attention of the committee by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] was incorporated in the bill; at any rate, it was the intention of the committee to incorporate it in the bill; and if the committee has failed to do so, I trust the Senator from Utah will make the motion at the proper time that it be inserted, because it was the opinion of the committee that it would be wise, just, and equitable legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Should there not be some general provision, because that situation exists, I think, in quite a number of places in the West?

Mr. ASHURST. As to the advisability of general legislation on the subject, I am not prepared to state. Speaking for myself, I will say that it might be well to so provide, rather than to treat the various cases as individual items; but the committee has not arranged to treat these matters by general legislation, but has dealt with each one severally. The justification for this particular item is found in volume 5 of the hearings, on page 669. The reason for it is that the comptroller recently held that the office was without authority to pay the claims. The claims were, however, held to be just, and hence legislation was asked.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are a great many places where Indian families have lands which they have occupied and their children attend the district schools. The Indians themselves pay no taxes in support of the schools, as do the white people, and it has been the custom heretofore—I think until last year—for the Government to pay such tuition.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Utah is correct about that, if my memory serves me accurately.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There ought to be some general provision in this proposed law which will continue that practice. I am not sufficiently familiar with the general subject to frame the amendment, and I hope the Senator from Arizona will do so before the bill is finally passed.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to know, while this matter is up, why it is that the comptroller had refused to permit the practice—which I understand has been heretofore indulged in—of paying all such items as those without specific legislation. Why was that practice discontinued? Was it because of some prohibitory legislation?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Nebraska, I will say that I do not know the particular reasons, and I doubt if they were disclosed to the committee, upon which the comptroller predicated his decision. We did not go into that matter. I presume he was fortified from a legal standpoint in his views.

Mr. NORRIS. I assume that he was. I am not complaining about that.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know his reasons.

Mr. NORRIS. The point I wanted to make, and to which I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Arizona, was this: As I understand, prior to last year it was unnecessary in an appropriation bill to appropriate for these specific items, because the department had authority under general law, as I supposed, to pay such items without a specific appropriation in each particular instance. As I understand, the comptroller has now held that that authority does not exist in the department; and I wanted to know whether this decision was brought about on account of any legislation Congress had passed taking away from the department the authority to make such payments.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a very indistinct recollection about it; but, as I recollect it, there was no appropriation made in the bill of last year for that purpose. It was left out of the bill. In that connection I wish to state that I find on page 8 of the bill a proviso to the general appropriation for the support of Indian day and industrial schools and for other educational and industrial purposes this proviso:

Provided further, That not more than $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools.

Perhaps that will take care of it; I am not certain about it; but I inquire whether that is the fact?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think that will take care of it, probably; but this situation arises in this way: These provisions come here from the House of Representatives; and, of course, there is a natural disposition, and a worthy one, to keep appropriations down. The departments come to our committee and present cases where it is urged they can not meet all their expenditures with the appropriation in the bill as it comes from the House, and that it is necessary to increase the appropriation or to make special provision; and in order that the increased amount may, without any question, be devoted to specific cases, ofttimes the committee, the members feeling that it should be devoted to specific cases, make it specific. That accounts occasionally for an increase on the part of the Senate committee over the amount carried by the House bill for items not covered by a general appropriation, but by a specific appropriation. It is often done in that way.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield for a question?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if this particular item was rejected because there was no authority of law for the department to pay it or because of a lack of appropriation? As I understand the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the committee, this claim was not allowed because there was no authority of law for its allowance.

Mr. CLAPP. Well, there may have been something of that kind in that particular case; I am not familiar with the decision of the comptroller in that regard, and I do not know what constrained him to render the decision making this appropriation necessary.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I will send to the Secretary's desk, and ask to have read, the matter relating to this item, which appears on pages 40 and 41 of the report presented by the Committee on Indian Affairs to accompany the bill. It is a very short and succinct statement of the whole item and the reasons for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

PAYMENT TO SCHOOL TRUSTEES, FLATHEAD COUNTY, MONT.

On March 6, 1913, a contract was approved providing for the payment of the tuition of 25 Flathead Indian pupils in public-school district No. 23 of Flathead County, Mont., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, at the rate of $9 per capita per quarter. Later, when claims were presented under this contract, it appeared that the parents of these children were owners of taxable property, although when the contract was drawn up it was understood in the Indian Office that the parents were not owners of taxable property, and this condition was stated in the contract. The children were permitted to attend the public school during the year on the assumption that the district would receive compensation therefor. When the claim was presented to the Auditor for the Interior Department he took the position that, as the parents were taxpayers, the children were legally entitled to attend the school without tuition; in other words, the contract to pay tuition for the Indian children was null and void, lacking consideration, as the Indian children were entitled to attend the public schools tuition free. The Comptroller of the Treasury later confirmed this decision.

As the enrollment in the public schools was given these children in good faith by the public-school authorities with the understanding that the Indian Office would pay tuition therefor, it is believed that the proposed legislation to reimburse district No. 23, Flathead County, Mont., should be given favorable consideration.

Reports indicate that the parents of these children paid practically no taxes and the public schools should be aided by the payment of this claim.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think that statement sets forth very clearly and succinctly the reasons of the committee for embodying this amendment in the bill. I have had considerable correspondence about the matter with the department, as well as with the school trustees named. I think it presents a very strong and equitable claim for recognition. The amount is small, and the circumstances in favor of it are very strong and appealing. If there has been no law heretofore for the payment of this class of claims, this will make one. I trust that the amendment will be adopted, because I believe it is entirely right and just and does no wrong to anyone.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that I am not opposing this appropriation. The reading of the extract by the Secretary disclosed the ground upon which the decision of the comptroller was made. It occurred to me, however, when this amendment was read that such items ought to be provided for by a general appropriation, rather than by a specific appropriation; in other words, that we ought not to appropriate for every particular instance where Indian children are sent to public schools, as it would be very difficult for us to pass on each individual case. I made an inquiry, with a view of ascertaining whether this particular claim was rejected by the comptroller because of a want of authority of law and whether that would apply to all other cases of a similar nature. It does not appear to me that we ought to here take up each individual instance where Indian children are sent to the public schools and make specific appropriation for each case; but that the department ought to have a fund out of which they can pay such claims.

It seems in this case that the department rejected the claim on a technicality, because the report read by the Secretary seems to indicate that at the time the contract was made the parents of these children had no taxable property, but later on they became possessed of some property upon which they paid a small amount of taxes, and therefore this item could not be paid out of some general lump sum appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has the floor. So far as I am concerned, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. MYERS. I think the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska are well made, and they may well be presented to the future consideration of the committee. It would be practically impossible, however, to incorporate in this bill general legislation at this time to cover all such cases, and therefore I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAPP. In my opinion, Mr. President, there ought not to be any general fund out of which claims of this kind may be paid. It develops that in this particular case payment was withheld on account of the parents being taxpayers. It also develops that, while they were technically taxpayers, they were not possessed of very much property, and the justification for this item is that the department having made a contract with the school district, a contract that does not come within the purview of the appropriation on page 8, and it having been made and carried out by the district, it would only be fair to make the appropriation to meet that contract. That is the only justification under the circumstances for this item.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CLAPP. With pleasure.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say that when I said that I thought a general appropriation ought to be made I perhaps was not specific enough. I myself agree with the Senator from Minnesota that a general appropriation perhaps ought not to be made to apply to cases like this; but what I supposed this case to be before the report was read from the Secretary's desk was one where the parents of the Indian school children were not taxpayers. Such cases as that ought to be paid out of a general fund, I think, appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. CLAPP. They are covered by the appropriation on page 8. The only question in my mind when the Senator made his inquiry was, not remembering or being familiar with the history of this particular case, whether it was one of those cases where there was an additional payment due, which the department felt the appropriation under section 8 would not be sufficient to meet. It does not come within that.

Mr. NORRIS. It was the purpose of my inquiry to develop that. On the face of this appropriation there is nothing to differentiate it from any case that might arise under the general appropriation, and I wanted to know why it was, having made a general appropriation, that we were making a specific appropriation in this case. The explanation was given when the report was read, and it was perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. CLAPP. That is true. I am simply stating, as I stated before, that occasionally you will find a specific appropriation within the purview of a general appropriation, made specific because it is desired that it shall be used for that particular object rather than simply to add it en grosse to the general appropriation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think there is no trouble about the department being able to pay all the tuition where there is absolutely no question about whether they are Indian children not entitled to the benefits of the school. The item in question here, for instance, is one that has perhaps some equities in it that would entitle it to receive consideration at the hands of the Senate; and yet almost the same argument would hold with equal force against any of the white children whose parents did not happen to be taxpayers in that community. They are entitled to the benefits of that school. They ought to have the benefits of the school. They did have them, probably. This bill was brought in afterwards to compensate that school, largely on the ground that it is a poor district, although the Government had entered into a contract with the district to allow those children to go in there at a stated, stipulated tuition.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The difference between the case of the Indian children and the white children is that the Indians have the property, but it is exempt from taxation, being held in trust by the United States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In many cases, however, that is not true. In many cases the Indian property is used for the support of the schools, and the white children get the benefit of that the same as the Indian children do.

I did not object to this particularly, first because there was a contract, and also because it seemed perhaps right under some views of the subject that they should pay; but it is only in those cases where there is a question about it that it comes here in this bill, as I understand. At least no other has been called to my attention. Where it is clearly understood that the Indian child is not entitled under any consideration to the benefits of the school without paying for them, the department pays the tuition.

Mr. CRAWFORD. An appropriation is made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. An appropriation is made for that particular purpose. Now, you can not pass a general statute to cover these other cases, because they are all dependent upon particular circumstances which arise in reference to that school; and the Government has been particularly liberal in granting tuition to the schools to pay for the schooling of the few Indian children who have been to those schools.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I understand the Senator to say that the Indian children, for which this amount is provided, were children of parents who were taxed and paid taxes? I will ask the Senator from Michigan if that is not true?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They paid some taxes. They did not pay very much tax. Perhaps some of them paid no taxes; but they were children who, under the construction of the comptroller, were entitled to the benefits of the school just the same as the white children were, their property being so situated and they living under such relations as entitled them to the benefits of the school.

Mr. SMOOT. There may have been a great many white families there that paid no more taxes than the Indians.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Quite so.

Mr. SMOOT. And it seems to me rather a dangerous proposition to start to make an appropriation here for the year 1912 for Indian children taught in a certain school in Montana who are children of taxpayers.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to say, if the Senator will permit me, that this is a little different from other cases, because the department entered into a contract on the supposition that some of these children were not entitled to the free use of the school. Now, whether they employed extra teachers, and under that representation were induced to hire extra teachers, is something that I know nothing about; and it was for that reason that I did not make any particular objection to this item.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say frankly that if this were a straight appropriation to pay any school district for teaching Indian children whose parents are taxpayers, I certainly should object to the item going in the bill, but upon the explanation of the Senator from Michigan I shall not make a point of order against it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that there are a number of cases where the parents of Indian children are taxpayers, and have been for many years, and yet their children are excluded from the public schools. We have had that matter brought to our attention in a number of cases where the white children objected to these Indian children, and the Indian children not only were not permitted to go to the school in the district in which they paid taxes, but they got no schooling at all. That exists, if it is a matter of any interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, that question is not involved in this amendment.

Mr. LANE. No; but that is the fact.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be a statement of fact.

Mr. LANE. Yes; it is a statement of fact.

Mr. SMOOT. But that, as I say, is not involved in the question now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 46, after line 4, to insert:

To reimburse the widow of George A. Miller, for expenses incurred by him in defense of a suit arising out of his operations as a special officer engaged in the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians, $200, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he has a statement from the department showing the expenses incurred.

Mr. ASHURST. George A. Miller, so the department reports, was a special officer employed by the Government of the United States in the matter of inspecting and ascertaining if there were any infractions or violations of the law relating to the traffic in intoxicating liquor among the Indians. In the performance of his duty he found it necessary, unfortunately, to shoot another person in self-defense. Both civil and criminal actions were instituted against Mr. Miller in the courts for this act of shooting on his part. The United States district attorney defended this officer in court, and he was successful in both the civil and the criminal courts; but the expenses referred to in the amendment were expenses which, under existing law, could not be borne by the Government, and costs which arose out of the civil and criminal actions that had been brought against him. The Comptroller of the Treasury has held that there are no funds available to meet these expenses. Then the department, in its estimate, further states:

During a portion of Miller's service he was in financial difficulty because of the illness of his wife, and when he died, a short time ago, he left his family without means. The intent of the item is to reimburse the estate for the amount expended by Mr. Miller, both as a matter of law and justice, to assist the widow.

Mr. SMOOT. What I wanted to know was whether the Senator had a statement of those expenses from the department. I ask the question for the reason that this is a personal claim, and, of course, rightfully should have gone to the Claims Committee. I know that that committee in the past, and also now, never makes an appropriation without some statement of the expenses incurred, and I thought perhaps the Senator had the items of expenses. If he has not, I shall say no more.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I have not the specific items making up the amount of $200.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I never would have voted for the claim unless I had a statement of the expenses at the beginning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 46, after line 24, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, for the purpose of purchasing cattle for the benefit of the Northern Cheyenne Indians: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; and all payments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry from some member of the committee about that appropriation. If I understand it, it is a sort of revolving appropriation by which these cattle are to be bought and sold, and then the department will use the money to buy some more cattle, and so on until 1924?

Mr. LANE. Yes. I may say that the matter was presented to the committee, and the condition which exists on that reservation is that the lands are not all suited for agricultural purposes, but they are lands upon which they can raise hay. The Indians are in a destitute condition, and have had a serious time; and the department thinks it can make them self-supporting and do great good to them by giving them cattle; and then, with the use of the lands that are irrigable upon which to raise alfalfa to feed the cattle in the winter, that they will do well by putting them in the cattle business. The range there in the spring, summer, and fall is, they say, perhaps the best of any in the United States. They can raise fat cattle there if they can carry them through the winter.

Mr. NORRIS. Where is it located?

Mr. LANE. I can not tell the Senator exactly. It is in the portion of Montana where they put these people a number of years ago. I can not tell the Senator the exact location. It is on the edge of the Rocky Mountains, more toward the south—south of the Flathead country and the Crow country. It is a particularly desirable country for that purpose I am told.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LANE. I will.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to say to the Senator from Nebraska that we have made four distinct appropriations for the State of Montana—$50,000 for the Northern Cheyenne Indians, $100,000 for the Fort Peck Reservation, $100,000 for the Blackfeet Reservation, and $100,000 for the Flathead Reservation.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if there are any other appropriations for these other agencies similar to this one?

Mr. PAGE. There may be, Mr. President; but I may say, in regard to that, that the State of Montana is getting more added appropriations over and above what was appropriated by the House than all the other States, or, as I understand, practically as much as all the other States. We not only appropriate $500,000 in addition for the Flathead, Northern Cheyenne, Fort Peck, and Blackfeet Indians, but we also add to the appropriation made by the House $500,000 for irrigation projects, making a million dollars that we add for Montana alone, over and above the appropriation made in the House.

Mr. NORRIS. A portion of this money is reimbursable, however, is it not, and some of it is appropriated out of Indian funds?

Mr. PAGE. It is supposed to be reimbursable; but in the hearings before the committee last year the late Senator from Kansas, Mr. Curtis, who is perhaps more conversant than any other man with matters pertaining to Indian affairs, made the statement that these appropriations were more than the entire value of the land. I think I am right in regard to that. It is substantially correct, at any rate. As I understand the matter, I may say further to the Senator from Nebraska that every one of these added appropriations was recommended by the department upon the supposition that we were going to protect them by the other legislation which provided that the irrigation benefits should not be taken from them for a term of years. Now, all those provisos which protect the Indians have gone out; but we have left in, or seem disposed to leave in, these very large additional appropriations for the irrigation projects.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator that whether or not there is too much money appropriated for Indians in Montana is something that does not concern me so much. I have no objection to the appropriations going to Montana, even though the Montana Indians would get more than the Indians in any other State, if they are justified by the facts. I am not seeking to draw any State lines.

If there are Indians in Montana who need the money, and it is proper to make the appropriation and there is reason for it, I would favor the appropriation even though it meant that the Indians in Montana would get more money from the Treasury than the Indians in any other State. I do not believe we ought to draw the line in that way.

The Senator, however, has given some information that it seems to me is valuable. I should like to ask him now, in view of what he has said about different provisos protecting the irrigation projects having gone out of the bill, whether he is still in favor of this particular appropriation? Does he believe it is right?

I am asking solely for information. I am not opposing the appropriation, although this revolving concern did strike me as being a peculiar one, and I should like to get the judgment of the Senator on that question.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think these particular appropriations to aid the Indian to improve along the line of agriculture, making him more of a farmer and less of a hunter and trapper, are wise. I believe we ought to do this; and I am quite willing that in connection with this we shall appropriate very large sums of money for the irrigation of lands, so that he may do this. It must be borne in mind, however, that these separate additions to the bill in behalf of Montana were all predicated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs on the theory that we were going to protect the Indians by the safeguarding provisions, which have all gone out on points of order.

Mr. NORRIS. The question I ask the Senator is, In view of that fact, does he think this provision ought to remain in the bill?

Mr. PAGE. I rather think it ought to remain in the bill; but, in view of what has been done, I believe we ought now to go back and change the proviso on page 43, where we increased the appropriation for the irrigation project from $100,000 to $250,000. I think we ought to change that, and leave it as it came from the House.

I think we ought to do that or else some assurance ought to be given us by the State of Montana that these large sums to be appropriated out of the Indian fund should be preserved, should be conserved, should be safeguarded and protected in some way; else, if that can not be done, I do not think we ought to make large increased appropriations. The particular appropriation to which the Senator refers I think is a wise one.

Mr. NORRIS. How does the Senator expect to get any guaranty from the State of Montana? The Indians are wards of the Federal Government. I do not see why we should ask Montana to do anything in aid of the Federal Government in support of the Indians any more than we ought to ask any other State.

Mr. PAGE. It has appeared in this discussion that, for instance, the State of Utah has provided by legislative enactment that these rights of the Indians shall be conserved until 1921. Now, if we could attach some proviso here that these appropriations shall not be available until the State of Montana by legislative enactment has done something to protect the Indian, I would be quite satisfied.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator——

Mr. PAGE. If that can not be done, I should feel that I have not done my duty unless I move to strike out the increased appropriation made by the Senate committee.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. PAGE. One word. I shall move to strike it out. I do not know that I shall succeed in carrying the motion, but really I have my own idea of duty and unless something can be done by which it can be safeguarded I shall feel it my duty to make that motion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I have the floor, but I will be glad to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not see the relation between the appropriation on page 47, which is $100,000 for the support and civilization of the Indians of the Fort Peck Reservation, and the appropriation for irrigation work on page 43 in relation to the Flathead Indian Reservation. Why should the amount of this appropriation for the civilization and support of another tribe of Indians, the Blackfeet, for instance, on another reservation be in any way dependent upon the amount appropriated for irrigation work in the Flathead Reservation? It seems to me that they are not connected or correlated.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that an appropriation had been made not only for the Fort Peck, the Blackfeet, and the Flathead Indians, but also for the Northern Cheyennes, and they are all subject to the same conditions that are attached to the amendment now under consideration.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken in that. I do not understand this to be that kind of an item at all. This is an item for the purchase of live stock—cattle—for the benefit of the Northern Cheyenne Indians.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is not the one I was discussing.

Mr. LANE. It is the one under discussion.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

Mr. LANE. Just a moment, please. If that is the item which is under consideration, and I think that is what the Senator from Nebraska referred to, I want to say to Senators that there is no irrigation or reclamation scheme in connection with this reservation. They have but a small portion of land which is irrigated, something like 2,500 acres, I understand, and for the reason that it is particularly advantageous for the raising of cattle and horses it is the desire of the Indian Bureau to let them raise cattle and horses. That is about the only source they have for making a livelihood. They are good cattlemen; they are better horsemen. The country is peculiarly adapted to that purpose. It raises good grass. That is all there is to it.

It is a revolving sum, which they are supposed to repay, or if they do not pay it from the sale of their cattle, it would be a claim upon their land. They are Indians whose annuities are practically nil. I do not think they amount to over $2 per capita. They have no farming land, and at this time they are in a destitute condition. It was the judgment of the department that they should be given this opportunity to make a living from horses and cattle from the use of their range, it being their most available resource.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it ought to be said in defense of the statement made by the Senator from Oregon that all this claim that there was any irrigation project involved in this appropriation——

Mr. LANE. It is not in this, I understand.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator did say, as I understood him, that the department recommended this appropriation on the theory that and other recommendations regarding irrigation contained in another portion of the bill should be allowed, and inasmuch as those other appropriations and recommendations have been disregarded and thrown out, therefore the question is whether this sum should be allowed.

Mr. LANE. I beg pardon. I think this was put in as an independent item regardless of any irrigation or reclamation project.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we can reach that. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon if this particular item is to be appropriated for land under irrigation or that can be irrigated?

Mr. LANE. They have something like 2,500 acres, I understand, that can now be irrigated.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, it appears to me that there is some misapprehension in regard to this matter. It will be observed that the item we are now considering is for the specific purpose of purchasing cattle, and that the item following to which Senators have adverted is one of the industrial items. This is merely for the purpose of purchasing cattle, and I will read the justification submitted by the Indian Department regarding this item:

"There is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000 out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, for the purpose of purchasing cattle for the benefit of the Northern Cheyenne Indians: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; and all payments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied, except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law."

Mr. Chairman, I submit the following justification for this appropriation:

Tongue River statistics.

Population of tribe		1,433
Area of reservation, unallotted	acres	489,500
Agricultural lands	do	33,000
Grazing lands	do	330,000
Live stock owned by Indians:
Horses, 4,000	average value	$35.00
Mares, 3,000	do	$35.00
Stallions, large, 100	do	$300.00
Cattle, 6,500	do	$50.00
Bulls, 100	do	$80.00
Grazing permits now running, cattle, 5,000, at per head		$3.35

The Tongue River Indians are not yet allotted. The reservation includes a few thousand acres of very good agricultural lands, providing water therefor can be secured. It has been found difficult and expensive, however, to provide water for these lands.

As a grazing proposition this reservation is one of the very best within or without the Indian country. The grazing lands carry heavy and nutritious feed; there is ample stock water of fine quality; there is good winter protection, and the topography of the country is such that feeding grounds for live stock can be found at about any time in the winter, regardless of the storms. The statistics show that the Indians now own about 6,500 head of cattle. These are the increase of a thousand heifers put on the reservation about eight years ago and another thousand put on about four years ago. Since then market cattle to the value of about $150,000 have been sold.

This success has been achieved largely by reason of the fact that these cattle, while issued to individual Indians, have been held very largely as a tribal herd, thereby protecting them from surreptitious slaughter and injudicious selling. The female stock is all preserved for breeding purposes, and only the matured steers and cullings put on the market. That very great returns have been achieved and can thereafter be achieved is therefore an established fact.

The statistics show that there are now about 5,000 cattle being grazed on this reservation under a lease. This means that outside interests are reaping the profits that might just as well come to the Indians had they capital with which to stock their reservation.

The statistics show that the Indians own about 7,000 head of horses and mares. Within the last three or four years these Indians, through various kinds of aids, have purchased about 100 stallions, which are now running on the range with their mares. This number is not sufficient hence there is left an unknown number of pony stallions, which should be eliminated as soon as funds can be provided for the purchase of better horses.

The purpose of this appropriation is to purchase cattle, so far as it will go, to place upon the range, consume the grass, and thereby bring to the tribe the profits now going to lessees. The success achieved in the past is such as to assure large profits after the Government has been fully reimbursed for any moneys thus appropriated.

It is believed that were it possible to replace all cattle running under lease by those owned by the tribe and by continuing the upbreeding of the horses, that within a comparatively short period the tribe can be made self-supporting and thereby eliminate the appropriation of public funds for their support, as has been the custom for several years past.

Statement of tribal assets and liabilities.

	Acres.	Value.
Unallotted lands:

Mineral	40,000	400,000.00
	473,000	3,415,714.00
Timber, board feet, 300,000,000		600,000.00

Expended to June 30, 1913		23,061.76
Reimbursable to United States			5,013.07
Surplus			4,073,577.60

Entire reservation unallotted. No legislation pending to allot.

As to the fact that it is a revolving fund, I wish simply to say that the results on this particular reservation have been very flattering. The reimbursable appropriations made on this reservation to June 30, 1913, were $15,000; and at the time this estimate was passed upon, which was in October, of the $15,000 these Indians had repaid $13,074.83; and it was stated before the committee that at that time they had probably repaid all of it. Hence, this one revolving appropriation shows very flattering results.

Mr. NORRIS. How long had the other revolving appropriation for these particular Indians been made?

Mr. ASHURST. It had been made in the Indian appropriation act for 1913.

Mr. NORRIS. And within one year all but $2,000 had been repaid?

Mr. ASHURST. That is true. So the returns were very flattering. I might state that these Indians are inclined to cattle raising.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems impossible that they should do that without selling the same cattle.

Mr. ASHURST. They probably purchased breeding cattle and sold them or sold beef or sold hides or something.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to know whether there have been any appropriations made similar to this one involving quite a number of years; and if so, what has been the result?

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I will say that this is something which has been tried in the last two years, and that in the southern portion of the Union it has been very successful. They have had, I think, no loss practically, or a very small one.

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct.

Mr. LANE. In regard to the Cheyenne Indians, of whom we are speaking at this time, they are Indians as to whom the Government found it necessary, in order to cut down expenses, to curtail the rations. The Indians have become tubercular. They are living in single-room houses without ventilation, and they are dying at a very rapid rate. They have reduced the rations and cut out the beef and substituted for it flour, which is starchy food. I as a physician advised the department against that. I told them if they wished to rid them of tuberculosis it would not do, that they would die like flies unless they did something for them. Those Indians are in need of food, and we are trying to give them this help so that they can raise their own cattle and have their own beef.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Oregon that I have not made these inquiries in a spirit of criticism.

Mr. LANE. I know that.

Mr. NORRIS. But it struck me that it was a novel arrangement, and I wanted to know whether any system similar to it had been tried.

Mr. LANE. The fact is, it is a novel arrangement.

Mr. NORRIS. It is quite an interesting proposition.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to say that the statement made by the Senator from Oregon is correct, that the results in all cases regarding these revolving appropriations have been very flattering. Not only have the sums of money advanced been repaid, but they have been repaid with remarkable promptitude.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 16, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont., the said sum to be expended in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment; and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill whether any appropriation of a similar character to this has been made heretofore for this identical purpose? It would seem to me to be an extremely generous one—

For the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Fort Peck Reservation, Mont.

If similar sums have been expended for similar purposes, there might be some question as to the wisdom or policy, and whether it has been successful or not successful up to date, would show this appropriation to be desirable or otherwise.

Mr. LANE. I can answer that question. A similar appropriation to this has never been made to the Indians of the Fort Peck Agency, and now it has been inaugurated by the department. I want to say that heretofore we have appropriated money in large sums for so-called civilization and support of the Indians, and it consisted in expending a sum of money in payment of salaries to employees out of which the Indian did not in many cases receive one-quarter of a cent; it was of no good whatever to the Indians. Now, they have adopted a plan which has never been followed before. The Indians have not any plows or harrows or seeds, and they found that if they were given these implements, and we trusted them to go to work and raise a crop, they would do it and refund the money. These Indians on the Fort Peck Reservation have water to irrigate their land, yet I have been told from employees on that reservation that they are not allowed water until after it has been taken out above to irrigate the land of white settlers. By giving these Indians harrows and plows, it is believed they will cultivate the land and will make money, and they will repay it from the crops.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator says it is the policy to loan them money. I see no provision here which justifies the conclusion that this is a loan.

Mr. LANE. It is a revolving fund.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. LANE. It is to be repaid.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand that this comes out of the Indian fund and not out of——

Mr. LANE. It is reimbursable.

Mr. ASHURST. It is a gratuity appropriation out of the Treasury, but it does not go to the Indians. The money is under the jurisdiction of a proper bonded official. It is used to purchase these articles of industry, and it is reimbursable in accordance with the manner in which I pointed out a while ago.

I will say, further, in reply to the Senator from Colorado, although it is not necessary, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] has made a very accurate reply, this is the first time it has been attempted on this reservation, and it has been brought about by reason of the splendid success on these lines that have been procured and achieved on other reservations.

Mr. THOMAS. I notice, Mr. President, that a very large number of the proposed Senate committee amendments are of a character similar to if not identical with this one, and the total amount of appropriations which are added to this bill as amendments for that purpose is very large. I am not so confident about the effect of appropriations of this kind for the civilization of Indians as my friend the Senator from Oregon seems to be, although I am not at all averse to a proper and appropriate experiment in that direction. In view of the condition of the Public Treasury, the falling revenues of the Government, and the pledge of the Democratic Party to administer the affairs of the Government economically, I must confess that the increase of the total appropriations for Indian purposes and for purposes which are analogous to the main objects of the bill, about 25 per cent in excess of the sum reported from the House——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Of all the Senators who have contended for economy, I think the Senator from Colorado justly leads, and he is correct.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be in effort, but not in result. I have not received any results of consequence up to date.

Mr. ASHURST. The items to which the distinguished Senator adverts were incorporated in the bill in pursuance of estimates legally made, according to law, by the department. The committee gave careful, diligent, protracted hearings, and much investigation to these items, and after its protracted hearings incorporated them in the bill in accordance with the estimates.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not, Mr. President, reflecting upon the good faith of the committee—at least, I am not intentionally doing so—and certainly not upon its chairman.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield to me to make an observation?

Mr. THOMAS. It has acted conscientiously and properly, as it seems to it. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. I want to make just one suggestion. The Government has long been engaged in doling out thousands of dollars to the Indians to feed them and——

Mr. THOMAS. Now it is engaged in doling out hundreds of thousands.

Mr. MYERS. The expenditures under the former system aggregated hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars without any permanent results. The Government now seeks to educate these Indians to become farmers, self-supporting, and to make their own living. Every dollar of this money is reimbursable, and, judging by the past, it will be repaid to the Government, and the Indians will become civilized and become farmers, citizens, and self-sustaining, and will not have to have an annual donation of money doled out to them.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a very beautiful and alluring picture, Mr. President.

Mr. MYERS. That is the theory of the department.

Mr. THOMAS. But I am very much afraid that the Senator, who is a younger man than I am, will not live to see it materialize in actual accomplishment, though I hope he will.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. In further reply to the Senator from Colorado, supplementing what was so well said by the Senator from Montana, I will say that the history of our dealings with the Indians discloses, as the Senator from Montana says, that for years the Government doled out food and blankets. I submit that if you take the wisest and most virtuous man and assure him that whatever comes, rain or shine, there will be doled out to him his blankets and his food, his initiative will be canceled and destroyed, and every reason for endeavor and for progress will have been taken away. Hence the Bureau of Indian Affairs has, after much consideration, concluded, rather than dole out rations to the Indian, to give him the means by which he will become self-supporting.

Mr. MYERS. To lend it to him; it is only a loan.

Mr. ASHURST. It is only a loan; so that he will become instructed in the art of agriculture, how to build houses, how to become a blacksmith, how to breed cattle, and how—slowly, of course, but surely, we hope—to develop into a self-sustaining person, and thus get rid of the miserable, unfortunate ration system. That is the reason of these revolving appropriations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not criticizing this particular appropriation any more than I am criticizing others of similar character in the bill. The purpose sought to be subserved by these appropriations is unquestionably a good one, and one which does credit to the Indian Bureau, especially in view of the previous methods of the administration in that particular branch of the Interior Department. I do not believe, however, that the prospects of a successful application of these funds for the purposes for which they are designed are very bright, either under a Democratic or a Republican administration. If this money belongs to the Indians, I would see no objection to carrying out the recommendation of the commissioner to the extent to which the fund could be made available; but at this time to make these enormous appropriations—and when I say "enormous," of course, I have reference to the aggregate amount of them—is not justified in view of existing conditions, even though the purpose could be accomplished.

I am not going to make any objection, either by way of points of order or otherwise, to this or to similar appropriations. I merely want to emphasize for one moment a protest against the making of them to the extent that they are made at this time. I think it is wrong; I think it is unwise; I think it is going to react against the present administration. If there ever was a time in the history of this country when economy ought to be practiced, the present is that time; but we are not doing it either in the matter of Indian appropriations or any other appropriations. On the contrary, every bill coming over from the other House that is reported to the Senate from a Senate committee is enormously increased, and that, seemingly, without regard to the condition of the National Treasury.

I do not believe, as I said the other day, in false economy. There are many appropriations that ought to be increased, because they are absolutely essential to the well-being and the necessities of the Government. Where that is not the case, however, I think it would be well for my brethren to call a halt, or at least to go a little slower than seems to have been the case with reference to this and to other large appropriation bills.

Mr. LANE. I wish to say, if I may be allowed—and I shall be through in just a moment——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield the floor to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. The Democratic administration owes it to itself to be just; that is its first duty; and only to the extent to which it is just will it make any great reputation for itself or secure the confidence of the people.

This is the first really just item, and perhaps one of the few contained in the bill. A great many of the others are subject to just criticism, but here is an attempt being made to allow the Indian an opportunity to make a living, which has heretofore been denied him by Congress and by the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

I wish to say that I, like the Senator, do not know—and I did not say I did, although the Senator charged me with the statement—whether or not this will succeed. I very much question whether you can make a successful farmer out of an Indian. We have tied up his land, we have expended hundreds of thousands of dollars of his money in building reclamation projects, and given him a limited time in which to make good upon those, and then refused to give him a plow or a harrow or a grubbing hoe to go out upon those projects and cultivate the land. He has been defrauded in the most contemptible manner. The department, I think, has come to the conclusion that if something of this kind is not done and the Indian is not able to extricate himself by some such means as this there will have to be an entire revolution in methods, for the department will no longer be able to stand upon its feet; it is going to fall by its own weight. We owe it to the Indian, and we have owed it to him for years and years. If he is to be forced to farm, if he is to be compelled to make his livelihood by that method or to starve to death, or to die of tuberculosis if he does not starve, it is our duty to give him a plow and a harrow and seed with which to farm. Any Democratic doctrine of economy which would deny him the means to become self-supporting under the existing circumstances would be subject to just criticism.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I quite agree that every inducement should be offered to the Indian to civilize and improve himself; I do not question that. Neither do I raise any issue as to the manner in which the Indian has been treated by the Government heretofore. There are many things, however, which are just which may not for the time being prove to be expedient. I think that in this particular instance one or two of these appropriations, by way of experiment, might well be made, instead of making them all together in this wholesale manner.

There are, I presume, a number of other items which are more subject to criticism than this one, smaller ones, perhaps, and ones which are needless. I notice, for example, appropriations for the building of gymnasiums for Indian schools and kindred items. It may be that Indians need gymnasiums in their schools; I do not believe they do; I do not believe an Indian has any more use for a gymnasium in a school than I have at my time of life for a gymnasium in my residence; but, if they do need them, the appropriations for them ought to come out of the Indian funds. When this bill is considered in its entirety and it is passed and becomes a law, with the addition of nearly $3,000,000 to an original appropriation bill of about $7,000,000, my impression is that we are going to hear from the people about it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to two different policies, as it appears to me, found in these appropriations for the benefit of the Indians. One is the policy of direct appropriation out of the general funds in the Treasury for the purpose in one case, that of the Northern Cheyenne Indian, of purchasing cattle, and for the purpose in the case of the Fort Peck Reservation Indians of purchasing stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, and so forth; and for this latter purpose, also, is the appropriation in the Blackfeet Reservation item found on page 48 of the bill.

The other policy is not that of direct appropriation out of the Treasury for the purpose of the civilization and support of the Indians or for the purpose of purchasing cattle, but it is an authorization to take and use so much money that is already in the tribal funds to the credit of the Indians. This is the case in North Dakota, for example.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THORNTON in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know whether or not the Fort Peck Indians and also the Blackfeet Indians have a fund in the Treasury?

Mr. STERLING. Not definitely, Mr. President; but I am informed that they have, and I am assuming there is a tribal fund to their credit.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that as soon as I could receive recognition it was my intention to ask that question of the Senator having the bill in charge; but, if the Senator from South Dakota does not object, I would like to ask it right now in connection with his remarks, so that he can discuss that question if he desires to do so, and I can do so afterwards.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly, I will be glad to have the Senator ask the question, although I had intended to ask it myself.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask the Senator having the bill in charge whether or not the Fork Peck Indians at the present time have an amount to their credit in the Treasury?

Mr. ASHURST. The Fort Peck Indians?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; or the Blackfeet Indians?

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, I will supply that information in a few moments; I can not do so at this particular time, but will do so just as soon as I am able, which will be very soon.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, while the Senator from Arizona is examining the matter, I will call attention to the appropriation on page 56, relating to the Standing Rock Indians of North Dakota. It is not accurate to say that it is an appropriation, but it is an authorization to the Secretary of the Interior—

> To withdraw from the Treasury of the United States not to exceed the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Indians on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in North Dakota, for the purpose of purchasing cattle for the use of said Indians to enable them to become self-supporting.

This is quite different from the direct appropriation made in those cases to which I have already called attention, and the inquiry of the Senator from Utah as to whether there are tribal funds to the credit of these other tribes is very pertinent indeed.

Now, there is another question to which I should like to call attention. The Standing Rock Reservation is not wholly within North Dakota, but it is partly in South Dakota; it extends into both States; and why should there be the authorization for the use of $100,000 for the Standing Rock Indians in North Dakota and not for those in South Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. CLAPP addressed the Chair.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if there are tribal funds to the credit of the Indians mentioned, or to the credit of any of these other tribes, why may not the Secretary of the Interior, as in the case of the Standing Rock Indians, be authorized to expend a portion of those tribal funds in the purchase of cattle or in the purchase of farming implements, seed, and so forth? This is exactly the course followed now by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the Indians on different reservations in South Dakota. Where an Indian is entitled to a certain pro rata share in the tribal funds the Secretary of the Interior may say to him, "It is the judgment of this department that you should take your pro rata share in stock rather than in money."

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in the first place, the provision to which the Senator refers, on page 56, is a House provision. I could not say why it was limited to the Indians who might live on that portion of the reservation which is in North Dakota. We took that, of course, as we found it.

There are three distinct conditions here. I might say to the Senator that we tried to frame a general provision under which the Secretary of the Interior, where there was a tribal fund in the Treasury, could, within the probable amount of each Indian's share, take out of that fund and advance to the Indian, under the direction and care of the department and its agents, such amount as the Indian might need. That provision went out on a point of order. Then there are these other conditions: In the case of the Minnesota Indians we took the amount out of the tribal funds, limiting it to one-fourth of what each Indian would be entitled to if an apportionment were now made. That provision was made so as to render it absolutely certain that no disposition of the funds would operate to deprive another Indian at some other time of his share in the general fund. Now that amount is advanced to the Indian; it is not loaned to him; it is to be used by the department to buy things for him, such as seed, plows, and harrows, but it goes to him without any return. The other class is where the money is advanced to the Indian in the nature of a loan. In the North Dakota case the amount advanced is a loan and must be repaid by the individual Indian who gets the benefit of it, and when repaid it goes back again into the general fund of the entire tribe. You will find that in lines 21 and 22.

Some of these Indians have no funds, notably, I think, the Fort Peck Indians, although they have a large amount of land which some day, of course, will result in a fund for the tribe; but under the theory upon which we are proceeding it makes no difference whether the money comes out of the Indian funds or out of the General Treasury, because in both cases it is proposed that the individual Indian shall repay that money, and, unquestionably, under the provision on page 56, if the Secretary of the Interior should utilize the funds belonging to the Indians of the Standing Rock Reservation in North Dakota and advance $200 of that fund to John Smith, and John Smith should fail to pay it back, the United States would be under a moral obligation to place that amount again in that fund to the credit of all the Indians of the Standing Rock Reservation in North Dakota. So that in that respect it is immaterial whether we take the money from what we call the general funds of the Nation or take it out of what has been credited to an Indian tribe. They must pay it back in both cases; and in each case, if they fail to pay it back, the United States is the loser, and not the Indian tribe. It would be manifestly unjust to take the money belonging to the Indians of the Standing Rock Reservation in North Dakota as a general fund and loan out $500 to an individual Indian, and then, if he failed to repay it under the terms of his agreement, to charge that loss to the remainder of the Indians, who had no voice in making that loan, no voice in directing the use of the money, and no voice in seeing to it that the money was repaid.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that just what they do here? Is not that the very thing proposed by this amendment?

Mr. CLAPP. No, sir. Now, one word more. Some of these tribes, while they have property, have no fund from which we could take it even if we wanted to; but in the last analysis it is immaterial, because we take the responsibility of securing the repayment of those loans.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. In the hearings before the subcommittee of the House on the Indian appropriation bill, I find the information I asked for, and for the information of the Senator from South Dakota I will state what it is.

The Northern Cheyenne Indians, according to the testimony, have $62,876 of funds to their credit in the Treasury; the Fort Peck Indians have $11,792; the Blackfeet Indians have $295,442; the Flathead Indians have $58,953. So the Senator can see that the Northern Cheyennes have to their credit $12,876 more than this appropriation; the Fort Peck Indians have an appropriation of $100,000, and they only have $11,792 to their credit; the Blackfeet Indians have a credit of $295,442, and we make here a direct appropriation of $100,000 and do not take it from their credit; the Flathead Indians have $58,953, and we appropriate $100,000 for them.

Mr. STERLING. I think that explanation is satisfactory with reference to most of the reservations about which I have inquired. It was a question in my mind largely as to whether or not there was any considerable fund standing to the credit of the several tribes for which such large appropriations have been made.

I think the Senator from Minnesota is somewhat in error in regard to the construction of the provision on page 56, relative to the authorization of $100,000 for the North Dakota Indians. The proviso is:

Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment and placed into the Treasury to the credit of the said tribe on or before June 30, 1925.

The proviso does not specifically charge the United States with liability for this Indian fund. It might in terms do it, and protect the Indians; but it does not do it.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAPP. I did not say that it is done by the terms of the proviso, but I say that by the terms of the proviso the Secretary of the Interior must make rules and regulations for the repayment; and the Government could not possibly stand up against the claim of the Indians for reimbursement. If the Secretary of the Interior took that money and loaned $500 of it to John Smith, a member of that tribe, and he failed to return it, no man could think of justifying a defense. We would be liable, and it makes that money a revolving fund up to 1925. By 1925 it must be all repaid into the funds or treasury of the tribe. We can not support any other interpretation, especially when we take into account the immorality of our taking money from the tribal funds, without the tribe having any voice in the matter, and loaning it to an individual Indian.

I say again that it makes no difference whatever to the Treasury of the United States whether you take the $500 which as a matter of bookkeeping is to the credit of the Indian tribe, or the $500 which as a matter of bookkeeping is in the general revenue fund of the Government. It comes out of the cash on hand in either case; and so long as we are liable to see to it that the money is repaid and put back again in the Indian fund it becomes immaterial.

If this provision had not come in here from the House, we would not have hesitated a moment to have put in the same provision with reference to these Indians; but it was already in here with reference to these Indians, and consequently we left it as it was.

There are some Senators here to-day who were not here the other day, and I want to reiterate what I said then. I do not think we can put the money to better use than advancing it to individual Indians as they seem, to the mind of the agent and under his observation, desirous and competent, lending them a helping hand and teaching them in the fall the necessity of keeping their obligations by paying the notes which are taken for the money. So far as we have tried the matter heretofore it has worked out with most splendid results.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the proposition that seems to be contained in the bill with regard to the several appropriations for these various tribes. I do not believe it is right, however, for us to take the money out of the Indian treasury in one case and out of the United States Treasury in the other case; and I do believe there is a good deal of difference between the two propositions, notwithstanding what the Senator from Minnesota has said.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLAPP. Turning, now, to page 56, beginning with line 13—of course that paragraph remains in the bill unless it is taken out by a Senate amendment. Under that provision, suppose the Secretary of the Interior should loan to individual Indians—and that is what is contemplated, of course—$25,000 of that money. Of course they do not get the money itself, but he makes the arrangement, buys a team, or seed, or something, pays for it, and takes the Indians' notes. Now, at the end of the term ending June 30, 1925, suppose that money was not to be had; suppose it had simply evaporated.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose they had lost it?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes. Will the Senator insist for one moment that we would not be liable to those Indians for that $25,000?

Mr. NORRIS. I will answer the question, and that is what I rose to do—to point out what I believed to be an inconsistency between the two appropriations. In order to get that money back into the treasury of the Indian tribe, an appropriation by Congress would be required.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. That will be conceded by the Senator from Minnesota, I presume.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. There is the difference between the two propositions.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is assuming that Congress would appropriate the money. I agree with him when he says it is a moral obligation, but there is no legal obligation involved in it. If we speculate with this money, and lose it, of course we ought to pay it back; but when we come here with an appropriation to pay it back we would be met with all kinds of objections. It would be said: "We used this money in a way that we thought was right; the Indian agent did what he believed to be a good thing, but it turned out to be bad, and they must suffer."

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I can not believe that the time will ever come in this body when, if this provision on page 56 went into effect, and in 1925 we found that we had lost $25,000 of the fund, any Senator would oppose an appropriation to make it good. That is not possible, it seems to me.

Mr. NORRIS. It is possible, Mr. President.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator concedes at least the moral obligation.

Mr. NORRIS. Why, certainly. My objection to the House provision is that it is not like the amendments brought in by the Senate committee. The Senator himself says there should be no difference. When we take this money and loan it to Indians we ought to run no risk whatever of the Indians losing the money. Now, as to one tribe, we say: "Here is $100,000 appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States that the department is going to use to loan to individuals to buy stock and other things for individual Indians, and put into this revolving fund." Very good. "Here is another tribe of Indians in South Dakota in whose case we are going to take the money out of their treasury and handle it in the same way." The difference is that in one case, if there is a loss, the matter is ended, because it is Federal money that is used, while in the other case, if there is a loss, it requires action by Congress before the Indians can get what they are justly entitled to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. The committee will not hesitate one moment, I think, if the Senator from South Dakota prefers to have that made a direct appropriation. We can make a direct appropriation of that, but we can not put it on the other basis, taking it out of the funds in each case, because in some of these cases—especially the Fort Peck case—there is practically no money there—$12,000, or thereabouts.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that. I am not advocating that we should take it out of the Indian treasury.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from South Dakota prefers that this should be a direct appropriation, I, for one, certainly should not oppose it, but should heartily agree to it.

Mr. STERLING. No; I am not quite asking that this be made a direct appropriation, nor expressing a preference as between this direct appropriation and the other, so far as that is concerned, under the conditions which have been stated by the committee with reference to other reservations. The fact that there are scarcely any tribal funds to the credit of some Indian tribes is important.

If the Senator will permit me, however, I appreciate very much what the Senator from Nebraska has said. Granting that there would be a moral obligation on the part of the Government to repay the Indians and make good the Indian fund on account of any losses that might be sustained by reason of bad investments or unforeseen conditions, I am inclined to think that there would be those who would say that the Government is not even under a moral obligation.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume there would.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, I can not believe that.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume there would.

Mr. STERLING. They would say: "The Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of his best judgment and discretion, expended this money, thinking it was for the best interests of the Indians. Unfortunately, it has been lost. Under what obligation is the Government to make it good?"

Mr. CLAPP. Upon what theory could we hold an Indian tribe to stand that loss when they had not been consulted? When we authorize the Secretary of the Interior to take funds that are only theoretically, as a matter of bookkeeping, set apart in the Treasury, it is all one lot of money, of course—when we authorize him to take money out of the fund belonging to the Indians and loan it to an individual Indian, I do not believe the time will ever come when a man will stand up in this body and say that the Indians should be subject to that loss.

Mr. NORRIS. We can not say——

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator wants to suggest an amendment, I am willing to vote for it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator from South Dakota, or preferably the committee, ought to have brought in an amendment here originally to put them all on the same basis. We have here several tribes of Indians, and we are going to start out on the theory that it is a good thing for the Indians to try to induce them to farm, to raise cattle and hogs and stock. We want to get them to do that. We also want to teach them the advisability and the necessity, in fact, of paying back their loans when they borrow money, and so forth—all a laudable purpose, and a very good thing to do.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator. That is a policy on which we are starting out. We have five or six different tribes of Indians, and we are going to start on that policy with all these tribes. Some of these Indians have money in their treasury. Some have scarcely anything in their treasury. Regardless of whether they have money or not, however, that is not the reason why some of this money is taken out of the Treasury of the United States and some out of the treasury of the Indian tribes, because in some of these cases where by the committee amendment we have provided that the money shall be loaned by the Treasury of the United States the Indians have more in their treasury than the amount we are appropriating; so that is not the reason why it is done. I take it, therefore, that it is done without any reason.

Mr. LANE. No; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. NORRIS. In one case we take the money out of the Treasury and buy stock and cattle with it, and in the other case we take the money out of the Indian treasury. What is the reason, then?

Mr. LANE. I will tell the Senator the reason. I have been trying to explain it all day. The reason is that some of these Indians' money has been expended in large reclamation projects for which their land has been mortgaged. The white settlers are securing the use of these lands, but the Indian is given only a limited time in which to make use of the water, or he loses his water rights. The Government has never provided him with a harrow, or a plow, or a horse, or anything.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand.

Mr. LANE. This is to allow him to secure tools and implements with which to work his land in order to make a living off it and save him the loss of his water right. In the case of the whites, in the new bill that has been put in here, the Government has allowed to white settlers an extension of time for payment of 20 years, and it has increased the time within which they may make their improvements, for the reason that it was found impossible for the white skilled farmer, with every appliance at his hands, to make these lands remunerative within a period of five years. The Indians, however, are allowed only two or three years. That was the condition, together with the fact that these Indians have been expected to succeed and to become civilized, as we call it, and to become citizens of means, without the Government ever having given them a cent with which to purchase implements with which to till their soil.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not dispute that this is a good thing to do.

Mr. LANE. That is the reason.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think the Senator has comprehended the distinction I have tried to point out. I am not claiming that this should not be done in any of these cases. The complaint I make is this: For instance, on page 47 we appropriate $100,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of having it expended by the Secretary of the Interior in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and so forth. That becomes a revolving fund. When this stock is sold the money goes back into the fund, and is reloaned, and so on until 1924; and then, as it comes in, the Secretary of the Interior will keep it in the fund, and in 1925 the United States Government will be reimbursed.

That is going on the theory, of course, that there will be a profit instead of a loss; and I think there will be. I believe anyone will concede that properly managed, barring accidents and unfortunate investments, in the aggregate there will be a profit, and there will be no loss.

Turn over to page 56, however. There we have a provision in the bill whereby $100,000 is appropriated for a similar purpose for the Standing Rock Indian Reservation in North Dakota; but that $100,000 is taken out of the treasury, not of the United States but of the Indian tribe, and made into a revolving fund in the same way.

Mr. CLAPP. On what page is that?

Mr. NORRIS. Page 56, the one that the Senator himself has been discussing.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. NORRIS. In a moment.

Mr. CLAPP. We can abbreviate this in a moment.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will let me proceed until I reach a good period in the course of my remarks. I believe the Senator from Minnesota has well said that the Government would be morally bound where we have taken money out of the treasury of the Indian tribe and used it for this purpose in case loss instead of profit should result in 1925, and we should out of the Treasury of the United States reimburse their treasury with the amount of the loss. That being true, and I believe it is true, we ought not to take any chances, because, as the Senator from South Dakota has well said, Congress in 1925 may take a different view of it, and it would be no argument, with many people at least, conceding that we had a good reason for it, that this money had been invested in an honest purpose in trying to bring about a profit for the Indians in a financial way and proper instruction given them in the advancement that would necessarily be brought about by the care of stock and the raising of crops. I now yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, to put all this matter at rest, because it does not make a bit of difference—every dollar comes out of the Federal Treasury—I will move to strike out, if the chairman of the committee will adopt it as a committee amendment, on page 56, from line 13 to the bottom line on page 57, and in lieu to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, N. Dak., the said sum to be expended in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924, and all payments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

Mr. NORRIS. That amendment, if adopted, will cure the evil that I have called to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. As far as the chairman has any authority, he will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). The amendment before the Senate is the one at the bottom of page 47, beginning at line 17. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Minnesota is to another item of the bill on page 56.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, we can not adopt the amendment now, but we can go along until we get to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee at the bottom of page 47.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the amendment to which I am giving my attention at the present time. This matter came up incidentally, and I presume will be promptly adopted, since it comes from a member of the committee, when we reach it properly.

I wish to ask the chairman of the committee as to the amendment on page 47. The amendment provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall expend this money "in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support."

In the amendment we have just adopted, beginning at the bottom of page 46 and ending at the top of page 47, which applies to the Northern Cheyenne Indians in the same State where we appropriate $50,000 for a similar purpose, this discretion of investment was not given to the Secretary of the Interior, but he is required in that case to expend all the money for cattle. I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain why this difference is made.

Mr. ASHURST. In answer to the Senator's inquiry, he was doubtless out of the Chamber when I made the statement that the Northern Cheyennes are peculiarly adapted and that their reservation is peculiarly adapted to cattle raising. They follow the pursuit of cattle raising and are inclined thereto. There is no part of the reservation fitted for farming and there is no reclamation project thereon. I read, I think, a part of the hearings disclosing that the Cheyenne Reservation of Indians is peculiarly fitted and fitted only for the raising of cattle.

Hence it appeared to the department and to the committee to be wise to limit it only to the purchase of cattle, but the same conditions will not obtain with respect to the Fort Peck Indians.

Mr. NORRIS. Where they have farming lands.

Mr. ASHURST. Where they have farming land.

Mr. NORRIS. And an irrigation project. I should like to say to the Senator that I anticipated, of course, that answer; yet it seems to me that I ought to call the attention of the Senator from Arizona to the fact that there ought to be, in the case of the Northern Cheyennes, a little discretion left to the Secretary of the Interior. For instance, he is confined entirely to the purchase of cattle. In the other cases there is a very general provision, "and such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper," and so forth. I want to direct the Senator's attention particularly to this: In that country, where the winters are long, in order to make a success of raising cattle I presume there ought to be some shelter. If it does not already exist, and if they do not have shelters, it would be a matter of economy and wise economy, it seems to me, to give the Secretary of the Interior a discretion to use a portion of this money for the purpose of building shelters to protect the cattle that they are raising.

Mr. ASHURST. I appreciate fully the solicitude of the learned Senator, but I will say that in that particular part of the country shelter for cattle is unknown, so I am advised, and the department itself requested that this item read as it does read. It asks that the language employed here be the language which we incorporate into the bill, and neither the department nor the committee knows of any reason why any further provision should be incorporated therein.

Mr. NORRIS. I can hardly conceive how there could be a locality in Montana where a man engaged in cattle raising ought not to have some protection for his cattle in the winter months.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to say to the Senator from Nebraska that shelter for range cattle in that country is unknown. They do not need it. The cattle live in the timber and get through with practically no loss. Any loss is negligible. Of course there may be a milch-cow house now and then, but if that is the case, the Indians can easily go to work and cut logs and put up a barn sufficient to shelter the few milch cows they have.

I would not have any objection to that clause being put in if I could see that it would serve any essential purpose; but I do not believe the conditions require it. That was the opinion of the department and the opinion of the committee. I do not think the conditions would make that essential to this appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. It struck me that it might be a good idea to give the Secretary authority to invest some of this money in horses. I understand these Indians are experts along that line more than with cattle, and that they might raise them to profit. But I want to say just a word——

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say, in answer to the learned Senator, give the Tongue River statistics, and then he will probably be able better to argue from his premises. The population of the tribe is 1,433 Indians; the area of reservation unallotted is 489,500 acres; agricultural lands, 33,000 acres; grazing lands, 330,000 acres; live stock owned by Indians—horses, 4,000; mares, 3,000; large stallions, 100; cattle 6,500; bulls, 100. In other words, the learned Senator will observe that they have 500 more horses than they have cattle. They have more horses than they now can reasonably employ in the herding and the caring for and the branding of their cattle. The department concluded, and it was the opinion of the committee, that rather than use this appropriation in increasing the horse herds, which are already sufficiently large, the sum should be employed in increasing the number of cattle. That was the reason why it was limited to cattle.

Mr. NORRIS. I appreciate fully what the Senator has said, and yet if a little wider discretion were allowed here and horses were specifically named, as well as cattle, it would not follow that the Secretary of the Interior would have to buy horses. I think the Senator himself earlier to-day in this discussion said something about the Northern Cheyenne Indians being particularly well qualified to raise horses. There is profit in the business, and it seems to me that it would be a good idea to give the Secretary at least the right to furnish the Indians horses if they wanted them.

I wish to say another word about the shelter. I judge from what has been said that up in Montana people live in summer houses and have no stoves; that their houses are not heated, because the temperature is so warm that they have to guard against heat rather than cold, and that the cattle there never do get cold; that it is a warm country, like Florida, and hence the cattle need no shelter. I know that out on the Great Plains for a great many years people raised cattle and let them run over the plains without any shelter. They took a gamble on it, and if there was a blizzard or a storm that was very severe the result has often been that all the cattle practically have been lost. If there is a loss from this particular investment, I have an idea now that it will come about on account of the lack of shelter rather than from any other cause.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to correct the Senator from Nebraska. I wish to say for the information of the Senator that there is no loss in that high, dry climate nor in that of our country from lack of shelter. What the cattle die from during a storm is lack of feed. If they can have their hay stacked up at some place where they can have access to it, it is almost a matter of indifference whether they have a shelter or not. They perish from lack of feed when storms drive them forward. They will need more shelter in Florida than up in this portion of Montana. They will suffer greater hardships in the Willamette Valley, Oreg., which is a balmy, soft, damp climate. You would lose more cattle there than on the east side of the Cascade Mountains at an altitude of 3,500 or 4,000 feet, where the temperature falls to 20° below zero, but where it is dry.

There should be a requirement here compelling the Indian Department to buy horses as well as cattle, for it is my opinion that they will do better with horses than cattle. They are more used to handling horses, and a horse will paw through the snow for feed where cattle will starve.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to concur in the delightful description given us by the Senator from Nebraska of the balmy climate of Montana. It doubtless seems very strange to one from the bleak and frigid realms of Nebraska. However, I will say to him that the housing of range cattle in Montana is unknown. It is not done. If they are given plenty of hay and plenty to eat the percentage of loss from death in the winter is inconsequential.

If the cattle were distributed among the Indians in small herds, a dozen or half a dozen to each Indian, and he wants to build barns for the cattle, there is nothing on earth to prevent him from going out into the woods and chopping down trees and getting out logs and building his own barn. He can do that, but if we appropriated money for that purpose it would be encouraging idleness and dependence. If you are going to run cattle in large herds of several thousand it would be impossible to construct shelter for them. It is not done for range cattle. If you are going to divide them and give two or three or half a dozen to each, per capita, then they can go out and cut down trees and build their own barns. It would be useless to vote the money for something that the Indians themselves can do by a little labor.

I appreciate all the suggestions of the Senator from Nebraska and his motives to do what is best, but the department asked for it in this form and really I do not see any use for a change.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very glad to get the information from the Senator from Montana; but I believe he is mistaken when he intimates that the Indians have any burning desire to go out into the timber and chop down trees and build houses.

Mr. MYERS. I did not say they had a desire to do it. I said they could do it; but if we give them money to apply to that purpose they certainly will not do it.

Mr. NORRIS. They could, but they will not. Everybody knows that. I will state the position the Indians up there would then be in. There ought to be a prohibition put in the bill to prohibit any Indians from chopping down any trees on this reservation, because if they get anxious to build barns, as has been intimated, they might get a fever to work hard in chopping down trees and putting up buildings. Suppose they go out and chop down the trees, what would happen? All the cattle would die in the wintertime because they could not get shade; they would be sun-struck. We have to protect the timber so that the cattle will have shade and places to go in the wintertime when it gets so hot in Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 16, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available, and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Blackfeet Reservation, Mont.; the said sum to be expended in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment; and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 17, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Flathead Reservation, Mont., the said sum to be expended in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924, and all payments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nebraska," in section 10, on page 50, after line 19, to strike out:

SEC. 10. For support and education of 375 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $60,000; for general repairs and improvements, $4,500; for new laundry building and equipment, $4,000; for repairs and addition to hospital, $4,000; dairy barn, $6,000; in all, $78,500.

And to insert:

SEC. 10. For support and education of 375 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $62,300; for general repairs and improvements, $7,500; for new laundry building and equipment, $7,500; for repairs and addition to hospital, $6,000; dairy barn, $6,000; for lavatory annex, $10,000; in all, $99,300.

Mr. NORRIS. My colleague [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who has been called away from the Senate Chamber on official business, intended to offer an amendment to these items and he has left the matter with me. I believe the amendments will appeal to the Senate. In accordance with the understanding I had with him when he left the Chamber, I desire now to move that the amendment of the committee be amended, in line 5, by striking out "$7,500" and inserting "$5,000," that is a reduction of $2,500; on line 7, by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$4,000," and adding after the semicolon which follows "$10,000," the following, "for girls' industrial building, $5,000," and changing the total from "$99,300" to "$96,300."

I understand that this has been called to the attention of the committee and that it is satisfactory. It means a reduction in the total appropriation for this school of $3,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, line 5, strike out "$7,500" and insert "$5,000"; in line 7, strike out "$10,000" and insert "$4,500"; and after the numerals "$4,500" and the semicolon, insert "for girls' industrial building, $5,000"; in line 7, in the total, strike out "$99,300" and insert "$96,300," so as to make the amendment of the committee read:

SEC. 10. For support and education of 375 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $62,300; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for new laundry building and equipment, $7,500; for repairs and addition to hospital, $6,000; dairy barn, $6,000; for lavatory annex, $4,500; for girls' industrial building, $5,000; in all, $96,300.

Mr. ASHURST. I merely wish to suggest that it should read "industrial building for girls."

Mr. NORRIS. I think that would be better. I believe that is a good suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be modified. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 7, to insert:

For expenses of the Omaha and Winnebago Agencies, including the pay of superintendent and employees not otherwise provided for, $6,040.

Mr. ASHURST. On page 51, line 9, after the word "superintendent," I desire to perfect the same by adding the letter "s," so as to read "superintendents" instead of "superintendent," so as to read:

For expenses of the Omaha and Winnebago Agencies, including the pay of superintendents and employees not otherwise provided for, $6,040.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 10, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, after the assessments made on Sac and Fox tribal lands by drainage district No. 1, in Richardson County, Nebr., shall have been paid, and after the Indians whose allotments are within the drainage district shall have received their proportionate shares of the tribal funds as authorized by the act of May 13, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 368), to distribute and pay per capita to the remaining members of the tribe entitled thereto the tribal funds on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sac and Fox of the Missouri Tribe, under the above act, in the same manner as provided by the act of April 21, 1904 (33 Stat. L., p. 201).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Nevada," in section 11, on page 52, line 5, before the words "Indian pupils," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "three hundred"; in line 6, after the word "superintendent," to strike out "$41,700" and insert "$50,100"; in line 7, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$10,000"; and in line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$47,700" and insert "$60,100," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., including pay of superintendent, $50,100; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; in all, $60,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New Mexico," in section 12, on page 52, after line 9, to strike out:

SEC. 12. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., including pay of superintendent, $68,600; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; in all, $73,600.

And insert:

SEC. 12. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $68,600; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; for assembly hall and gymnasium building and equipment, $30,000; in all, $106,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 19, to strike out:

For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $59,550; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for water supply, $1,600; for new dairy barn, $4,000; in all, $67,150.

And insert:

For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., and for pay of superintendent, $60,250; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; for water supply, $1,600; for new dairy barn, $4,000; in all, $72,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 10, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $200,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended; and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Mescalero Indian Reservation in New Mexico, the said sum to be expended in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund; and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury, and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "New York," in section 13, on page 54, after line 19, to insert:

For expenses of New York Agency, including pay of employees, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "North Dakota," in section 15, on page 55, line 9, after the word "employees," to strike out "$11,000" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewas, North Dakota, including pay of employees, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 14, to strike out:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at Fort Totten Indian School, Fort Totten, N. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $68,500; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $74,500.

And insert:

For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at Fort Totten Indian School, Fort Totten, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $68,500; for rebuilding dairy barn, $6,000; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; in all, $82,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 23, to strike out:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $35,200; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; in all, $38,200.

And insert:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $35,200; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for extension of power plant, improvement of water system, and addition to power plant, $15,000; for school building and remodeling of present school building into domestic building, $30,000; in all, $85,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 9, to insert:

To assist members of Turtle Mountain Tribe of Indians in making settlement upon their nonreservation allotments, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued from line 13 on page 56 to the end of line 2 on page 57, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States not to exceed the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Indians on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in North Dakota, for the purpose of purchasing cattle for the use of said Indians to enable them to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment and placed into the Treasury to the credit of the said tribe on or before June 30, 1925: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to Congress annually on the first Monday in December a detailed statement as to the expenditure of this fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has offered an amendment to strike out the clause from line 13 on page 56 down to line 2 on page 57 and to insert. That point has now been reached.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, as I said a while ago, to that amendment, so far as I know, there is no objection; but I ask that it shall be passed over until we have an opportunity to consult with the other members of the committee and also with the department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Minnesota that the Senator from Arizona asks that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota be passed over until he can investigate the matter further.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, just one moment. I do not know how far that might involve a question of good faith. The Senator from South Dakota raised the question with reference to the Montana amendments and the Senator from Nebraska raised a question with reference to another provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment is not in order now anyway, because it is to strike out matter already inserted in the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. The amendment would be in order if it had been reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; if it were reported by the committee it would be in order.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to absolve the committee from any lack of good faith with absent Senators.

Mr. ASHURST. I share the same view as that of the Senator from Minnesota. Let the amendment go over, at least.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 57, after line 2, to insert:

For a headstone to mark the grave of Scarlet Crow, a Sioux Indian chief, of the Wahpeton Tribe, who was buried March 13, 1867, in the Congressional Cemetery, Washington, D. C., in a grave marked "76–R. A. 22," the sum of $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, on page 79, line 17.

Mr. LANE. Were there not items of amendment on pages 73, 74, and 75?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that all those items went out on points of order.

Mr. LANE. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Oregon," in section 18, page 80, line 5, after "$12,000," to strike out "in all, $114,000" and insert "for addition to assembly hall, $15,000; in all, $129,000," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including native pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., including pay of superintendent, $102,000; for general repairs, additions to buildings, and improvements, $12,000; for addition to assembly hall, $15,000; in all, $129,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, after line 14, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Warm Springs Reservation, Oreg., the said sum to be expended in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund; and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

Mr. LANE. I should like to reserve the right to have that item passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the item will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "South Dakota," in section 20, on page 81, after line 20, to strike out:

SEC. 20. For support and education of 365 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $61,500; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $67,500.

And to insert:

SEC. 20. For support and education of 365 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Flandreau, S. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $61,500; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000, $2,000 of which shall be immediately available; for repairing and enlarging dairy barn, $3,000; in all, $72,500.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota offered an amendment the other day changing the amount of the appropriation providing for an Indian school at Pipestone, Minn. The school at Flandreau, S. Dak., is a few miles distant across the line from Pipestone, and is one of the strong Indian schools. It met with the same accident in the same storm which blew down the buildings at Pipestone, which occurred since the bill passed the other House. The Indian Office has sent a statement, which is in the possession of the chairman of the committee, calling attention to the necessity for making provision in this bill to meet the situation caused by that tornado, and I have prepared an amendment in accordance with the recommendation of the Indian Office, which I will send to the desk and ask to have incorporated into the committee amendment, together with the report from the Indian Office, which I will ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 82 it is proposed to strike out lines 4, 5, and 6 and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

General repairs and improvements, $6,000; for the repair of buildings and the purchase of equipment destroyed or damaged by the tornado of June 10, 1914, $10,000, $3,000 of which shall be immediately available; in all, $77,500.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the statement referred to by the Senator from South Dakota will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears none.

The statement referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 16, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has received the following telegram from Supt. Peirce, of the Flandreau Indian School, Flandreau, S. Dak.:

"JUNE 10, 1914.

"School property struck by tornado this afternoon. No one injured. Ice house and dairy building destroyed, kitchen, bakery, and part of boys' building unroofed, chimneys down, and all buildings more or less damaged. Loss, about $10,000. Three thousand dollars needed immediately in order to care for pupils and continue school."

He has also received from Supt. Mann, of the Pipestone Indian School, Pipestone, Minn., the following telegrams, each dated June 10, the first reporting—

"Two boys, aged 8 and 9 killed by cyclone raging here to-day."

And the second that—

"Large barn, hospital, porches, and outbuilding wrecked in storm to-day. Will require $6,500 to build barn and restore damage. Strongly recommend Congress be urged to appropriate this sum for purpose."

I wish to bring to your attention the urgent necessity of having money provided for the immediate repair of these two schools. They are splendid institutions, each serving a definite purpose in our plan of Indian education, and will be needed for many years. Being right at the close of the fiscal year, practically both schools are without adequate funds to begin a reconstruction of the plants.

I earnestly recommend that H. R. 12579 be amended as follows:

That, on page 32, line 22, after the amount "$3,500," there be stricken out the words "in all, $48,675," and inserted the following:

"Six thousand five hundred dollars for repairs to buildings and the purchase of equipment to replace that destroyed or damaged by the tornado of June 10, 1914; in all, $55,175."

That, on page 82, lines 4, 5, and 6 be stricken out and the following inserted in lieu thereof:

"General repairs and improvements, $6,000; for the repair of buildings and the purchase of equipment destroyed or damaged by the tornado of June 10, 1914, $10,000; in all, $77,500."

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES, First Assistant Secretary.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 82, line 11, after "$6,000," to strike out "in all, $78,750," and insert "for the purchase of 10 acres of land adjoining the school grounds, $3,500; in all, $82,250," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Pierre, S. Dak., including pay of superintendent, $43,750; for new buildings, including equipment, $22,000; for completion of irrigation system, $7,000; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for the purchase of 10 acres of land adjoining the school grounds, $3,500; in all, $82,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 24, after the word "asylum," to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the equipment and maintenance of the asylum for insane Indians at Canton, S. Dak., for incidental and all other expenses necessary for its proper conduct and management, including pay of employees, repairs, improvements, and for necessary expense of transporting insane Indians to and from said asylum, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, after line 24, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to make an investigation with respect to the necessity and practicability of constructing a wagon road or highway through the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in Corson County, S. Dak., from a point on the Missouri River north of Pontis, S. Dak., thence in a northwesterly direction to the town of Tatanka, and submit his report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1914, and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purposes herein specified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Utah," in section 21, page 84, after line 23, to insert:

For pay of one physician for Indians under the superintendent of the Shivwitz School, Utah, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 3, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "$250,000" and insert "$500,000," and in line 12, after the word "available," to insert "and to remain available until expended," so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, at his discretion, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, together with the accrued interest thereon appropriated under the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., 934), and to use the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, said funds to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That the said Secretary shall report to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1915, a detailed statement as to all moneys expended as provided for herein.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment by striking out, on page 85, from line 1 to line 16, inclusive, and I shall offer two amendments in place of the original text. I now offer the first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate at this time in order is the action upon committee amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. There is a committee amendment offered in this connection, is there not?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I know that; but I do not want the committee amendment to be agreed to, and I understood the chairman of the committee to agree to the amendment that I have offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment being considered at this time?

Mr. OWEN. Let us hear the amendment stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment being considered at this time? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 85 it is proposed to strike out the clause from line 1 to line 16 inclusive, and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use, for the benefit of the Indians of the Confederated Bands of Utes, the accumulated interest on their 4 per cent trust funds accruing up to June 30, 1914, approximating $469,000, arising under the agreement of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., p. 199), or otherwise, the proportion due the Utes in Utah to be expended or disbursed for their benefit under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the proportion due the other Utes of the Confederated Bands to be paid to them per capita in cash or expended under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. The interest arising on the Confederated Ute trust funds after June 30, 1914, shall be hereafter distributed to them in like manner.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in explanation of the amendment I wish to state——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to now considering the amendment?

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have the matter explained, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be glad to explain it.

In explanation of the amendment I desire to state that there is in the Treasury to the credit of the confederated bands of Utes a 4 per cent fund amounting to $3,567,082.17. The accrued interest on this fund up to and including December 31, 1913, was $398,153.42; the interest from January 1 of this year until June 30 of this year will be $71,341.64 in round numbers, making the aggregate interest up to June 30 of this year $469,495. The amendment provides that the amount of $490,000 shall be appropriated. This amount is interest only, and under the agreement made between the Government of the United States and the Indians in 1880, as recited in the amendment, the interest was to be paid to the Indians annually.

There has been a controversy for a great many years as to the amount that was due to these Indians, and, if the Senator will remember, in the Indian appropriation bill of 1913 an amount was appropriated directly, covering judgment in favor of these Indians; or, in other words, the judgment of three million three hundred thousand and some odd dollars, with the accrued interest to June 30, 1914, is the amount I have already named.

That fund, so far as the Utes in Utah are concerned, is desired to be used for the improvement of their lands and the extension of their water rights under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. I will say, however, in passing that this amendment has been approved by the department and that it is in full accord with the idea of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to the future distribution of this fund.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. Does not the Senator think it would be a good idea to withhold and defer these payments until the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws to share in the fund can be adjudicated?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to get into any dispute, of course, upon that serious question with the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Their rights are the same.

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply say no in answering that statement.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I have a justification from the department in the shape of a letter, in concluding which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says:

These two amendments—

Referring to the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and one intended to be proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH]—

These two amendments not only meet with my hearty approval, but are so desirable that I want to indicate my special interest in same, and desire that they shall be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall follow the amendment I have offered by the other amendment to which the Commissioner of Indian Affairs refers in that letter.

Mr. OWEN. I observe that the amendment lays down a rule for all future time. Did the Secretary pass upon that?

Mr. SMOOT. He has passed upon it, Mr. President, I will say.

Mr. OWEN. Did the Secretary's letter pass upon the advisability of establishing this rule for all future years?

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask that the letter may be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to see it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has approved it, as he prepared this amendment. I asked the commissioner if it would not be better to change the words "shall be hereafter distributed to them in like manner" so as to read "shall be hereafter distributed to them in annual payments"; but he thought that it would be better to leave the words as the original amendment provided.

Mr. OWEN. Does the letter state what the amendments are?

Mr. SMOOT. I will show the correspondence to the Senator, if he so desires. I have it here.

Mr. OWEN. I shall make no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to strike out, on page 85, from line 1 to line 16, and to insert the matter which has been read.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to have the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and a statement in justification of the amendment go into the RECORD, so that there will be a memorandum of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the matter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 20, 1914.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your information and use, a copy of proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, H. R. 12579, concerning the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, and to respectfully inform you that since our talk this morning I have had a conference with Senators SHAFROTH and SMOOT, and that this amendment meets with their approval. Senator SMOOT has agreed to offer the amendment as here stated.

I also respectfully request that the proposed amendment submitted to you yesterday, authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to negotiate an agreement with the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians for the final adjudication and settlement of all claims and demands of said Indians against the United States arising under the agreement ratified by the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat., p. 199), to be introduced by Senator SHAFROTH, shall stand as submitted.

These two amendments not only meet with my hearty approval, but are so desirable that I want to indicate my special interest in same and desire that they shall be adopted.

Sincerely, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

JUSTIFICATION.

The purpose of this item is to initiate an affirmative movement looking to the final adjustment and settlement of the claims of the Ute Indians growing out of the agreement between them and the United States entered into in the year 1880.

Under that agreement the Utes ceded approximately 15,000,000 acres of land to the United States in trust with power to dispose of the same. Certain charges against the Utes were to be deducted, and the balance due them was to be held in the Treasury as an interest-bearing trust fund.

By suit in the Court of Claims a partial settlement, covering about half of the ceded lands, was accomplished. The final decree of the court was rendered in 1911.

The remaining portion has not been disposed of and probably will not be for many years as a considerable part of it is classed as coal lands or contains other valuable minerals. In view of the mineral character of this land exact compliance with the original agreement of 1880 is now impossible. Hence the necessity of some substituted mode of settlement.

The matter has been dragging along for many years, and the Indians are entitled to a settlement. It is also to the interest of the United States in this, as in similar cases, to bring the controversy to a close within a reasonable time to avoid the embarrassments incident to the lapse of time, death of witnesses, and loss of record evidence. Moreover, the work of solving the Indian problem must halt so far as the Utes are concerned until their property is ready to be individualized.

Settlement, through negotiation and agreement, is greatly to be preferred to further litigation, not only for the sake of simplicity and economy in procedure, but for the further reason that a suit at this time and under present laws would only serve to settle liabilities which have accrued since the decree of 1911.

JUSTIFICATION FOR "$125,000 FROM PORTION BELONGING TO THE NAVAJO SPRINGS BAND, IN COLORADO, FOR THEIR USE AND BENEFIT."

The Navajo Springs Band of Ute Indians are located on a reservation, the development of which and of the Indians themselves must depend mainly on stock raising. It is estimated that there are 500,000 or more acres of graing lands on which the Indians have approximately 550 head of cattle, 1,050 ponies, 1,250 sheep, and 600 goats. It is readily seen that this is a very inadequate and immaterial amount of stock for the land available for grazing purposes; and it is proposed to use the $125,000 for which appropriation is asked in the purchase of cattle and also in the purchase of stallions and rams for the upbreeding of their ponies and sheep. This amount expended in this way will not purchase sufficient animals to stock the range to its full capacity, but it will be a start from which it is hoped to bring about a stock-raising industry which will provide a vocation as well as maintenance for this band of Indians, and in this way work out the problem of their self-support.

The lands under the Navajo Springs Agency are of practically no account for agricultural purposes, and if these Indians are ever to become self-supporting it must be through the stock-raising industry.

There are, however, sufficient areas of irrigable lands on parts of the reservation which will enable the Indians to provide themselves with small gardens and will offer opportunity to establish homes for them on these small irrigable tracts, but their support must come from the live-stock industry.

By this means of developing the resources of the Indians, it is hoped that the necessity for gratuitous appropriations will be removed and the continued tax on governmental funds finally eliminated.

If this appropriation is not procured this year, it will mean, of course, the delay of another year in inaugurating these plans.

This is merely, of course, appropriating for use of the Indians money which is theirs and is not an appropriation from the Federal Treasury for the benefit of these Indians; it is putting them in the way of helping themselves, and, further, is a proper and sane method of using their funds.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr President, I wish to say a few words in relation to this amendment. I am in favor of it. I will state the circumstances under which I became interested in it, and I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD some communications which caused me to request the changes which have been made, as suggested by the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

As the original provision of the committee appeared in the bill, it seemed to the Southern Utes of Colorado that they were not well cared for, and I received communications from the chiefs of the Ute Indians, which were confirmed by a council of the Southern Utes, in which they complained about the funds being used for the purpose of buying stock or of improving lands or of constructng irrigation systems, and thereby putting to use money which they thought belonged to them and which should be paid to them.

I found, upon examining the treaty of 1880, that there was an arrangement between the United States and the Ute Indians, by which part of these Indians were to leave the State of Colorado and go over into Utah and part of them were to remain in the State of Colorado. It was also provided that certain of their lands should be sold by the United States Government as ordinary lands of the United States, and that the proceeds should be put into a fund for their use and benefit.

It seems that that policy was pursued for quite a while, but the settlement that the Indians thought ought to be made between the United States and the bands of Ute Indians was not made, and so a suit was instituted before the Court of Claims, which resulted in a judgment in favor of the Indians to the extent of $3,300,000. There have been appropriations made out of that fund every year since. The provision was made that these funds should be kept in the Treasury and should bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. The amount which has been paid out has been less than the interest, and consequently the amount of interest which the Indians now have to their credit is, as stated in the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], $449,000.

It was thought by the southern Utes that their interest might not be the same as the interest of the Utes in Utah and also the Utes called the Navajo Springs Utes. They, in fact, objected to there being horses or cattle furnished them instead of cash, because they claimed that they could not utilize the former, whereas they thought that the Navajos could, and also that the Uintahs of Utah could.

Following the communications which I received I had a conference with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with other parties, including the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and we agreed upon an amendment which was not exactly this amendment, but which afterwards crystallized into this amendment.

This amendment now segregates the fund so that the Utes in Utah will get a segregated part of the total amount of $3,000,000 placed to their credit, according to the number of Indians—a per capita amount—and there will also be placed to the credit of the Southern Ute Indians and the Navajo Springs Indians their proper per capita. Those accounts are to be kept separate, so that there will be a guide in the future for each one of those tribes as to how much money will be coming to them. There has been some change in the language of the amendment as to the authority given the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

I have read to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs the communications received by me, and he has said that he agrees very largely with the statements set forth, and he thinks that, as to the Southern Utes, it will not be well to arbitrarily force them to take stock or to take anything else but cash. Inasmuch as the amount coming to each one per year is small, and since I am satisfied that the commissioner is going to treat them in a manner which will be satisfactory to them and which will be to their best interests, I have agreed to support the amendment which the Senator from Utah has presented.

I do not wish to read these communications, but I do want them put into the RECORD. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs said that there was great merit in them and that he would bear them in mind in the distribution of the fund. This amendment will afford the Utah Utes an opportunity to complete their irrigation enterprise; it will afford the Navajos an opportunity to have their range stocked; and it will give to the Southern Utes, who protested against the original proposition because it would be of no use to them, the money which they should have, except in some instances where the Commissioner of Indian Affairs believes it is to the best interest of the Indians that they should have certain advances made to them in the shape of stock or horses, or something of that kind.

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the declarations made in the council of the Indians and ratified by them by signature shall be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SOUTHERN UTE INDIAN COUNCIL, GOOD NIGHT HALL,
Ignacio, Colo., April 19, 1914.

SPEECH OF BUCKSKIN CHARLIE, CHIEF.

When I was in Washington, many years ago, with several prominent Indian chiefs, we made a treaty with the Government in regard to giving up some of our lands. This treaty said that we Utes were to receive an annual cash payment as long as a member of our tribe remained alive. Now that the Court of Claims gave us a judgment enlarging that fund, I can not see where the treaty is changed. We have not asked for a change in that treaty, nor were we consulted as to changing that treaty. As it takes two parties to make a treaty, it takes two parties to change the treaty.

We hear that the Indian Office at Washington wants to set that treaty aside, and in place of the money that we received annually it is going to issue cattle or sheep to us instead. Now, we do not want any more cattle than we have. We have no range, and we can not put them on the regular forest reserve, because that range is all taken by the whites. Even the whites are being turned off the forest reserve, because there are too many cattle and sheep there now. Then, again, we Indians can not compete with the whites in raising cattle and, besides that, the whites will steal the cattle from us as they have taken our cattle and horses in the past. We have 160 acres of land each, but of such sagebrush land it requires 40 acres to pasture 1 cow.

Our old people need their money to buy something to eat. How do you think that old people could care for cattle? You say that they can herd them on vacant patches left around their allotments, but there is no vacant land any more; it is all taken up by the whites.

We want to stand by the old treaty; we do not ask to have it changed. We want the principal to stand as before the last judgment was rendered. We do not even ask that this fund be apportioned per capita, because it may be poorly spent and some of the tribe would be without food or clothing in a short time. Some Indians are like some white people around here, they do not know how to care for money.

The treaty was so made that we were to receive the annuity every fall so that we could buy food and clothing for the cold weather. We know that this is our money, because it is the payment for our land that we sold. The Government got it cheap enough, then why do they object to paying the money.

We are all under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and we have the right to ask him to help us to get Congress to appropriate the money so that he can pay it to us. Mr. Commissioner, you are paid to take care of us. You should see that the treaty is kept. We are friendly with the whites and have behaved ourselves and have progressed ahead of the rest of the Ute Tribes. Now, for that are you going to set us back with the rest of the Utes who were not so progressive? Is that right?

It is possible that some of our Utes could use a few cows, but they should have the right to buy them when you send us the money. The commissioner has nothing to do with that money. You think that we could get along better if we had cattle. I say no. We have no range. The Navajo Springs Utes have lots of range; they could use cattle, but we are now trying to have small farms, and if we have cattle, how could we feed them, and the result would be that they would die in winter or the whites would take them and sell them to those who could feed them, like they do with our horses. Then we would have no cattle and no money.

We can live nicely with our little farms and our annuity payment in cash. We would not even need an agent. Maybe a few Utes drink or gamble, but don't other Indians and whites have the same trouble? You can't change the nature of Indians so quick as that. We are Indians, and if you let us live our way and give us what is coming to us, we will be all right. We can take care of ourselves.

CHARLES BUCK.

NANICE, COUNCILMAN.

I am satisfied with the cash-annuity payment as it was given to us in the treaty. Our great Chief Ouray made that treaty for us with the Government. We want the cash, and we do not want the cattle that the Government wants to send us. We do not have pasture land enough to keep cattle. It would be too bad to give cattle to old people who have no one to care for them and maybe have some one take the cattle away from them. But with the cash the old people can buy what they need and no one can take it away from them.

We want only the interest money, not the principal. If the commissioner thinks different, he is wrong, and knows nothing about our conditions. Or, if he does, he is not trying to help us. If Mr. Leonard, Mr. Fry, or Mr. Linnen tells the commissioner different, they tell wrong stories, or they got their information in the wrong place.

If you give these Indians cattle and they lose them, as they have lost all their range horses to the whites, they will starve to death.

NANICE.

WEASELSKIN, OR GUS WILLIAMS.

Our chief, Buckskin Charlie, went to Washington, and he knows that the treaty was made, and the money must be in the Treasury. This money is for the sale of our land and coal and timber, and, as it is coming to us, we want it. That money is due every fall. It belongs to us, to the whole tribe, and it should be paid in cash. What right has the commissioner or any of the other men who run the Indian Office to change a treaty that was made 40 years ago, when they had nothing to do with making that treaty. It looks as though you wanted to do us a wrong. We want our money, just as you want yours. We make no objection as how you spend your money. So give us ours and we will take care of it.

I have a herd of sheep and have all kinds of trouble herding them. Just as soon as my sheep leave my allotment, which is not all fenced, the whites and Mexicans are after me, and kill my dogs and make much trouble for me.

GUS WILLIAMS.

EDWIN CLOUD, COUNCILMAN.

Why do the commissioners want to cut out a treaty that the Government made with our great Chief Ouray? The Washington officers told Ouray, "Here is your money, and we will pay your people every fall." Now we want to stick to that old law, and you have no right to change that law without our consent. We represent Ouray now, as he is dead. We have the same right to that treaty as he had. You did not tell Ouray that after a while we will change that treaty. You did not tell him that after a while you would not give him money, but would change it to cattle, horses, or chickens. No; the money is in the Treasury, and we want it in cash.

Ouray was a great man, as other great men who died and who made treaties, and they can not be broken unless Ouray's people say so.

The white people have so crowded the range that they have no room for their cattle. They quarrel about the range now. How could a little tribe of Indians expect to get a share of the range, and it is out of the question to keep more than one cow to the family on our allotments? Then, we have horses, and must keep pasture and raise feed for them for winter.

EDWIN CLOUD.

NICHOLAS EATON.

I want to know when the Government will pay us for all the coal land they took from us. It is about 17 years since the reservation was thrown open for settlement. We are dying off, and no settlement is made with us. Why do you let us wait so long? Why do you make us hold council meetings and get our white friends around here to help us—yes; fight for us? You act as if you were our enemies and not our friends.

We know that the money is in the Treasury for us, because Ouray made the treaty and the Indian Office has nothing to say about it. The treaty tells how it should be paid. It should be paid in the fall, when we need it. We don't want the cattle, we don't need them, but we do need the money pretty bad. If you don't give us the money, how are we going to live? How are we going to buy something to eat? If we look for meat in the mountains, somebody else will jump onto us.

What does Congress say about the cash payment? Do they think it is wrong for us to get the money? We are here in a big council, and every man here says we want our money, not cattle, and we want Congress to make the commissioner to give us our money. The commissioner thinks we should have cattle, but he is wrong. If he insists on sending the cattle, we will not take them under any condition. That is why we tell Congress how it is with us.

NICHOLAS EATON.

CYRUS GROVE, COUNCILMAN.

The Government is our father, the same as I am the father of my family. The Government can not say, "This is your money, but I will not give it to you." If I as father of my children, never gave them anything, what would become of them? Now we ask our father to give us what belongs to us, and we have a right to ask it when we need it. It is all right for our father to take care of our money for us. We are not asking for all the money, just for the interest of it.

The commissioner wants us to have cattle. I have a herd of cattle, and I had so much trouble with the whites on account of them that I got rid of most of them. I do not want to have trouble on account of the cattle. Sometimes I nearly had a fight about the cattle, and in winter they almost starved because I could not buy hay enough for them.

CYRUS GROVE.

JOSEPH PRICE, COUNCILMAN.

We want our money just as the treaty says. That treaty was made by our great chief, Ouray. A long time ago our chief, Ouray, made a treaty with the Government. He made a trade with the Government for the Utes where they gave timber, coal, and land to the whites. We gave a great deal in that treaty, and now that Ouray is dead we have a right to speak for ourselves, and we want the money for that timber, coal, and land.

When all the Utes die, what good is the money to them? What good is the money to us when we are dead? We want it now, while we are alive. We are dying fast enough now, and the money would help us a little and make us happier.

I heard that our friend the commissioner wants to buy cattle for us, but we do not want the cattle. Why don't the commissioner ask us if we want sheep or cattle? He don't. He has it in his mind that we need the cattle, but his mind is mistaken. This is no place for sheep or cattle. Sheep can not live on an allotment a day with horses. When we got the cash we were satisfied, but what was $25 a year? We bought some food and clothing and it soon was gone, but the Government thinks that is a lot and we ought to get rich.

JOSEPH PRICE.

JIM BUSH, COUNCILMAN.

We do not want cattle; the money is due the Utes, and we want the cash. We did not get all the interest so far that is due us. You say the last judgment was for $3,408,611, and it was rendered in February, 1911. Well, 4 per cent of that sum is $136,400 a year, and for two years it is $272,800. Only $200,000 was appropriated, so that is $72,000 short; and you say that all is paid up to date. How do you figure that?

We have small allotments and can keep one cow, but that is all; that one cow would not support us.

JAMES BUSH.

JOHN PAUL, COUNCILMAN.

Our father—the Government of the United States is our father, and we know that he has our money, and we think it is right if we ask for it; and we ought to get it. We ought to have it when we need it. I do not think that he can refuse to give it. The Government ought to stick to the treaty. If it wants us to trust the Government, they ought to be honest. If it goes back on its word, how can you expect a poor tribe of Indians to do great things?

JOHN PAUL.

We, the Southern Ute Indians in council assembled this 19th day of April, 1914, were present and listened to our men speak, and know that they speak the truth, and we stand by their ideas and sign our names in acknowledgment thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, following the amendment just agreed to, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, I will say to the Senator having the bill in charge that this is the other amendment referred to in the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to segregate and set apart on the books of the Treasury to the credit of the several bands of Confederated Ute Indians, in proportion to their respective numbers, the trust funds known as "Confederated Bands of Utes 4 per cent fund," appropriated by the act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., 934), together with such amounts as may accrue to said fund from the sales of lands under the agreement between said Indians and the United States, ratified by the act approved June 15, 1880 (21 Stat. L., 199); and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $125,000 from the portion belonging to the Navajo Springs Band in Colorado for their use and benefit, and the sum of $300,000 from the portion belonging to the Uintah, White River, and the Uncompahgre Ute Indians in Utah for their use and benefit, in such manner and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 85, line 21, after the words "the sum of," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

To carry into effect the provision of article 9 of the treaty of March 2, 1868 (15 Stat. L., 619), with the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, for furnishing seeds and agricultural implements, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, line 4, after the word "expended," to insert:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Uintah Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

So as to make the clause read:

For continuing the construction of lateral distributing systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes, in Utah, and to maintain existing irrigation systems, authorized under the act of June 21, 1906, to be expended under the terms thereof and reimbursable as therein provided, $10,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Uintah Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I said on Saturday all that I care to say about the general question that is involved in this class of amendments, but I desire to call attention to one fact that distinguishes this reservation from, I think, all the other reservations involved in the bill, and that is that the territory upon which this reservation is situated came to us from Mexico by virtue of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo, entered into in 1848.

The Indians of Mexico occupied a somewhat different status from that occupied by the Indians of the United States. The rule which was adopted by the colonists and afterwards by the United States Government was that the Indians who roamed over the lands had a title by occupancy, or a right by occupancy, which subsisted until by treaty or purchase the Government of the United States had acquired it. Under the laws of Mexico, originally the Spanish law, the nomadic tribes had no such right. There were two classes of Indians in the territory subject to the Mexican Government. One was the Pueblo Indians, who were recognized as having a right to the soil, while the nomadic Indians, or the so-called "blanket" Indians, under the law of Mexico, had no right to the soil whatsoever. They had no recognized right to the soil over which they roamed any more than had the animals to the lands over which they roamed.

The rule of law is settled beyond question that when a country obtains territory from another by treaty it acquires exactly the title which the ceding nation had. Therefore, we took this territory from Mexico, discharged from any obligation whatever to the Indians. The Indians had absolutely no right and no title, and none passed to them when we acquired the territory. No treaties with reference to this reservation were ever entered into with the Indians. It was simply set apart for their occupancy by an Executive order. Therefore, even if it were true—which I think it is not, as I attempted to show the other day—that in these reservations elsewhere the Indians would have some sort of right to the water by virtue of their right of occupancy of the soil, that doctrine could not apply to the Uintah Reservation, and this forms an additional and very strong reason why this amendment should not be adopted.

I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 86, after line 13, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to protect the north abutment of the Government bridge at Myton, Utah, from high water, $200.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there should be an amendment to this amendment before it is adopted. I move to insert, after "$200," the words "to be immediately available."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, line 16, after the numerals "$200," it is proposed to insert "to be immediately available."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington," in section 22, page 87, after line 11, to insert:

For a water supply for 120,000 acres, more or less, of irrigable land allotted to Indians in the so-called Wapato project on the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, $100,000, to be covered into the reclamation fund as a first installment on account of the repayment of the cost of constructing storage works to impound the necessary flood waters of the Yakima River to provide annually, at the head gates of the reservation canal, 454,080 acre-feet of stored water and natural flow, or such part thereof as may be necessary, additional to the present available supply of 61,920 acre-feet; and for the construction by the Indian Service of a diversion dam across the Yakima River, and for beginning construction of the enlargement and extension of irrigation for distribution and drainage system on the said reservation, $100,000; in all, $200,000.

That of such water there shall be furnished free at said head gates such quantity of water as the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be sufficient for the irrigation of 40 acres of each such allotted tract. Reimbursement shall be made by the landowners of the cost of furnishing water for the remaining lands in such annual payments as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, not to exceed 20 in number, the moneys received to be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That the cost of water right shall be $4 per acre-foot for an annual supply of not exceeding 4.3 acre-feet for each acre of land: Provided also, That the entire cost of said diversion works and distribution and drainage system shall be reimbursed by the owners of all lands for which a water supply is herein provided in not to exceed 20 annual payments; and the Secretary of the Interior may fix annual operation and maintenance charges, which shall be paid as he may direct. All charges against Indian allottees herein authorized, unless otherwise paid, may be paid from individual shares in the tribal fund when the same is available for distribution; and if any allottee shall receive patent in fee to his allotment before the amount so charged against him has been paid to the United States, then such amount remaining unpaid shall be and become a lien upon his allotment; and the fact of such lien shall be recited in such patent, and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage; and should any Indian sell any part of his allotment, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the amount of any unpaid charges against the land sold shall be and become a first lien thereon, and may be enforced by the Secretary of the Interior by foreclosure as a mortgage, and delivery of water to such land may be refused, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, until such charges are paid: Provided further, That no right to water or to the use of any irrigation ditch or other structure on said reservation shall vest or be allowed until the owner of the land to be irrigated as herein provided shall comply with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and said Secretary is hereby authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may determine proper for making effective the foregoing provisions, and to require of owners of lands in fee such security for the reimbursement herein required as he may determine necessary, and to refuse delivery of water to any tract of land until the owners thereof shall have complied therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 24, after the word "For," to strike out "extension" and insert "operation," so as to read:

For operation and maintenance of the irrigation system on lands allotted to Yakima Indians in Washington, $15,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 3, after the word "seven" to insert:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Yakima Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Wisconsin," in section 23, page 90, line 23, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$4,000; in all, $40,670" and insert "$6,000; in all, $42,670," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 23. For the support and education of 210 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Hayward, Wis., including pay of superintendent, $36,670; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $42,670.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 2, after "$6,000," to strike out "in all, $49,450" and insert "for the construction of an employees' building, $15,000; in all, $64,450," so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Tomah, Wis., including pay of superintendent, $43,450; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; for the construction of an employees' building, $15,000; in all, $64,450: Provided, That the appropriation of $2,500 for repairing and rebuilding a barn at the Tomah School, contained in the Indian appropriation act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., 538), is hereby reappropriated and made immediately available for the purpose for which appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 9, to insert:

That within 90 days after the approval of this act a complete roll of the unallotted members of the La Pointe or Bad River Band of Chippewa Indians of the State of Wisconsin, entitled to allotments under existing laws on the Bad River Reservation, shall be made and completed by the Secretary of the Interior with the assistance of a committee of members of said band duly appointed by a general council of the Bad River Band of Chippewa Indians called for that purpose. Immediately thereafter allotments of land (exclusive of the merchantable timber thereon) within said reservation shall be made in conformity with the provisions of the treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stats. at L., p. 1109), and subsequent acts of Congress relating thereto, to all persons so enrolled who may be alive at the time of the approval of this act. Patents for allotments made hereunder, subject to the provisions herein relating to the sale of timber and the distribution per capita of the proceeds therefrom, shall issue to the respective allottees without delay, and such patents shall contain a clause reserving to the United States the right to cut and market merchantable timber on the lands so allotted, the proceeds to be disposed of as herein provided. When the merchantable timber has been cut from the lands so allotted, the title to such timber as remains on said lands shall thereupon pass to the respective allottees: Provided, That the clause relating to the cutting and marketing of merchantable timber shall be omitted from all patents issued for allotments from which the merchantable timber has been cut and removed at the date of such patent.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to sell the merchantable timber on all unallotted lands within the Bad River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wisconsin, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; the net proceeds derived therefrom, together with any undistributed proceeds derived from the sale of timber heretofore cut and sold from such lands, shall be distributed per capita and paid to the members of the band enrolled under the provisions of this act, where such members are or may hereafter be adjudged by the Secretary of the Interior competent; and in cases where members have not been adjudged competent by the Secretary of the Interior their shares shall be deposited to their individual credit as individual Indian moneys are now deposited and paid to them, or used for their benefit under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That before approving any contract covering the sale of timber on any of said tribal lands the Secretary of the Interior shall refer the said contract or contracts to the unallotted Indians of the Bad River Band for an expression of their views as to the price, terms, and conditions of sale, in which matter the interests of minors shall be represented by their parents or natural guardians: Provided, That of the amount now on hand derived from the sale of tribal timber, at least $500,000 shall be distributed among such allottees enrolled under the provisions of this act where the same are competent, or, where the allottees are incompetent, deposited to their individual credit as individual Indian moneys are now deposited, within 60 days from the date of the approval of the roll by the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided further, That in the event a fair and adequate price is not offered for the merchantable timber on the Bad River Reservation authorized to be sold under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, cause to be built, equipped, and operated a suitable sawmill or sawmills, with appurtenances and necessary buildings, on the Bad River Reservation, for the purpose of manufacturing said merchantable timber into lumber; and he is hereby authorized to use so much of the proceeds from the timber heretofore sold, exclusive of the $500,000 herein authorized to be disposed of, to erect said sawmill or sawmills, said mill or mills to be constructed, operated, and maintained under such rules, regulations, and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask to submit for the RECORD, without reading, a memorandum in explanation of that item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the memorandum will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 18, 1914.

To the honorable Senate Committee on Indian Affairs:

On page 91 of the Indian appropriation bill as reported to the Senate is an item providing for the allotment of the tribal lands and the sale of the tribal timber on the Bad River Reservation in the State of Wisconsin.

The proposed legislation represents the wishes of a very large majority of the people of our reservation, and has been formulated with great care so as to meet the views of the Indians, the Indian Office, Senator LA FOLLETTE, and our Representative, Mr. LENROOT.

No one has authority from the Indians on our reservation to oppose the passage of this measure, and if anyone assumes to do so it will be a wrongful act.

The Indians kept a delegation in Washington for many weeks at the last session of Congress, and again at the present session, to accomplish the passage of this very legislation.

The allotment of our lands has been postponed since 1904, with great injustice, hardship, and loss to those members of the tribe who have not received allotments. Two rolls have been prepared in vain.

Much timber has had to be removed at a loss on account of damage by fire, and $635,000 is to-day deposited in bank, of which the members entitled to allotment are in sore need, but which they can not enjoy so long as enrollment and allotment are not completed.

Aged members of the tribe have been living in disappointment and distress from year to year, and many have gone to their graves without the benefit of the property which was theirs but for the lack of this legislation. The advantages that they could have enjoyed in their home life, in the education of their children, and in the improvement of their lands have been withheld from them.

We therefore ask the members of the committee to receive this final assurance from us as the duly authorized representatives of the Bad River Band of Chippewas of Wisconsin that no one has authority from our people to oppose this legislation and that the failure of the measure will be a calamity to the Lapointe, or Bad River, Band.

Very respectfully,

_____, _____,

Tribal Delegates.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 94, after line 11, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to cause an investigation to be made of the condition and tribal rights of the so-called St. Croix Chippewa Indians now residing in the counties of Polk, Burnett, Washburn, and Douglas, State of Wisconsin, and said to be in a destitute condition. That he shall ascertain and report to Congress at the beginning of the next session thereof whether the said Indians belong to the Lake Superior Chippewa of Wisconsin or to the Chippewa of Minnesota; what tribal rights, if any, they have with any band or tribe of Chippewa Indians residing in either Minnesota or Wisconsin; what benefits in land and money they would have received had they removed to a reservation in Wisconsin or had not been excluded from enrollment and allotment with the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 642). That he shall cause a census and enrollment to be made of the said St. Croix Chippewa, and shall report their actual condition and needs, with such recommendation for their relief as he may deem necessary. That for the purpose of making the said investigation and enrollment and for the immediate relief of such of the said Indians as are now in need of food, clothing, medicines, and other supplies, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, there is hereby appropriated from the Treasury of the United States, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Wyoming," in section 24, on page 96, after line 22, to insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., the said sum to be expended in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment; and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund; and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924; and all repayments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, before we go further, on page 95, line 6, at the end of the line, the word "relief" is not properly printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a clerical error, such as the Secretary always corrects. The Secretary will correct it.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 98, line 7, after the word "expended," to insert:

Provided, That the use of so much water as may be necessary to supply for domestic, stock-watering, and irrigation purposes, land allotted or to be allotted to Indians on the Wind River Reservation or set aside for administrative purposes within said reservation, is hereby reserved, and the failure of any individual Indian or Indians to make beneficial use of such water shall not operate in any manner to defeat his or her right thereto while said land is held in trust by the United States. All laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. WARREN. I make a point of order against the proviso, commencing on line 7 and going to line 16.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 98, after line 21, to insert:

For reimbursing Right Rev. N. S. Thomas, Episcopal bishop of Wyoming, for moneys expended in repairs to buildings on the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., $391.84; and permission is hereby granted the beneficiary to remove a certain barn erected by him upon the reservation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 99, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 25. That no appropriation in excess of $5,000 to be paid from Indian funds or which is reimbursable from Indian funds shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior or by any other officer or agent of the United States, and no new irrigation project to be paid in whole or in part from Indian funds shall be begun until the Indians whose funds it is proposed to use for the purposes mentioned in such appropriations or for such irrigation project shall have been consulted and given a fair opportunity to express in writing their views thereon, either through their duly authorized business committee or through a general council meeting of said Indians: Provided, That as to irrigation projects hereafter authorized, no expenditure shall be made until the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall have determined that the same is approved by a majority of the tribe whose fund is to be charged with said expenditure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like the Senator having the bill in charge to explain the real object of this amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the object of the amendment is stated, I think, rather clearly, but in the abstract it means that hereafter the Indians whose funds are to be charged with any appropriation in excess of $5,000 shall be consulted.

The commission that visited the Indians during last fall were impressed with one thing perhaps more forcibly than any other, and that was that the Indians complained that they did not know what was going on and that they were never consulted in the management of their own affairs. In years past—and I think the plan is kept up to some extent now—they have had the plan of organizing a council among the Indians, to whom matters affecting the tribe were referred. That has been, where it has been observed, a very wholesome regulation, I think.

We have provided here that all matters affecting the tribal funds involving an expenditure of $5,000 or more shall be submitted to the tribe and that the tribe shall understand that the appropriation is to be made out of their funds. The amendment provides, further, that so far as irrigation projects for the future are concerned any project which is to be organized, established, and maintained out of the funds of the tribe shall not only be submitted to the tribe to which the fund belongs, but a majority of them shall approve it.

The testimony will disclose that several of the projects, notably the Flathead project, never would have been undertaken if they had been first submitted to the Indians. I think it is generally conceded now that the Flathead project never ought to have been undertaken. I think the testimony will disclose that there is about $1,800,000, or perhaps more, either expended or to be expended upon this project in a country where irrigation is of practically no avail whatever and that it was opposed by the Indians. I have been told that the matter was submitted to the tribe when it was first undertaken, but I have also investigated that question, and I find that it was not properly submitted to the tribe.

We have felt that if we are ever going to make them self-supporting, independent, self-respecting citizens these Indians must be given an opportunity to share in the responsibility of their own affairs.

I realize, I think, what the objections to the provision will be. There is a claim, of course, that there will be certain Indians, who perhaps have more influence than others, who will overpersuade the tribe. I am convinced, however, that that is an exaggerated statement. I think as soon as the Indians are aware of the fact that they do have an interest and a voice in the beginning, at least, of these projects, they will manifest an ability which thus far has been undiscovered in many of the tribes. This applies particularly to the Indians on territory which it is proposed to irrigate.

With this provision I think we would obviate any future conditions such as have existed in the past in reference to the overreaching of the Indians in their own projects by the expenditure of their own money.

For these reasons this provision was put in. I believe it is a good thing to put it in. I think it is one of the most wholesome things in the bill. If we have any faith in the Indian, if our object is a sincere one, and we do intend by these large expenditures of money to make the Indian self-supporting and to make him responsible it is about time we commenced doing it. Therefore I have proposed this amendment, after consulting with the Department of the Interior and after consulting with people who have had charge of the Indian and are familiar with his characteristics, believing this is a wholesome provision to include in this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary proceeded to read the next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, beginning on line 16, page 99.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, before the last item is left I should like to suggest that the word "tribal" should precede "funds" on page 99, so that it shall read "Indian tribal funds" wherever the word "funds" occurs. That is what is really meant.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered and the word "tribal" inserted before "funds" wherever it appears; and, without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 99, after line 15, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 26. On or before the 1st day of July, 1914, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a system of bookkeeping to be installed in the Bureau of Indian Affairs which will afford a ready analysis of expenditures by appropriations and allotments and by units of the service, showing for each class of work or activity carried on the expenditures for the operation of the service, for repairs and preservation of property, for new and additional property, salaries and wages of employees, and for other expenditures. Provision shall be made by the Secretary of the Interior for further analysis of each of the foregoing classes of expenditures if, in his judgment, he shall deem it advisable. Annually, after July 1, 1915, a detailed statement of expenditures, as hereinbefore described, shall be incorporated in the annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and transmitted by the Secretary of the Interior to Congress on or before the first Monday in December. Before any appropriation for the Indian Service is obligated or expended the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall make allotments thereof in conformity with the intent and purpose of this act, and such allotments shall not be altered or modified except with his approval. That hereafter, in submitting estimates for the expenses of the Indian Bureau, the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall omit therefrom all treaty items except perpetual annuities and benefits for fixed unexpired terms, and in cases where treaty appropriations are to be discontinued under this provision and those appropriations are necessary for the support and civilization of the Indians, there shall be estimated gratuity appropriations therefor. There is hereby appropriated $10,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section: Provided, That the report herein directed shall be in lieu of all other reports required to be made to Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior relating to Indian Affairs, except as provided in this act.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the purpose of section 26?

Mr. ASHURST. In reply to the inquiry of the learned Senator from Florida regarding the effect and purport of section 26 of the bill, I will read from page 62 of the report of the committee on this item:

The amendment provides $10,000, and has in view a more complete and concise system of accounting by the department. This item has been carried in previous appropriation bills, but was not finally made applicable until the present, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has requested the amendment in the form proposed. It comprehends the rendition of complete and perspicuous accounts at stated intervals, omits treaty items, except perpetual annuities and benefits, for fixed unexpired terms, and in cases where treaty appropriations are to be discontinued under this provision and those appropriations are necessary for the support and civilization of the Indians there shall be estimated gratuity appropriations therefor.

The amendment is recommended by your committee.

Mr. BRYAN. Section 25 of the bill as passed by the House, as I understand, repeals a similar section that found its way into the appropriation bill last year.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. BRYAN. No appropriation, however, was made in the Indian appropriation bill of last year for this cost-accounting system.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. BRYAN. When the Committee on Appropriations was asked to appropriate money to carry out this cost-accounting system it refused to do so, according to the hearing held before the House Committee on Appropriations a few months ago.

Let me ask the Senator how many employees there are as to whom it would be undertaken to find out what proportion of their time was employed in one branch of the service and what proportion was employed in other branches of the service? As I have it here, according to the answer given by the chairman of the House committee, there are 6,238 employees.

Mr. ASHURST. What is the date of that hearing?

Mr. BRYAN. July, 1913.

Mr. ASHURST. I should say that was approximately correct.

Mr. BRYAN. Of what benefit is it to the Committee on Indian Affairs to know what proportion of the employees' time is spent in examining oil leases, what proportion is spent in teaching school, and so forth?

In the hearings before the House committee the representative of the department stated that the request did not come from the department, but from one or two of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs. According to him, about all that could be accomplished would be to provide places for one or two men to do this work, which would consist in trying to estimate what proportion of the day's work ought to be charged to one activity and what proportion to others.

Mr. President, I will say that the Committee on Appropriations have refused to make appropriations for that sort of business; and, as it is general legislation, I raise a point of order.

Mr. OWEN. Before the Senator raises a point of order——

Mr. BRYAN. Let me state the point of order. It is that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. OWEN. Will the Senator withhold it for a moment?

Mr. BRYAN. I will withhold it.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to advise the Senate that that was prepared by the experts of the Department of the Interior or of the Indian Office, and by Dr. Cleveland, of the Efficiency Commission, and it was done with a view to systematizing the accounts of the department.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me read this to the Senator. Mr. FITZGERALD asked Mr. Abbott who appeared:

> What value will it be to the Government to know that one sixty-second part of the services of a superintendent during any fiscal year was devoted to the administration of an oil lease, another one forty-fifth part devoted to the work of forestry on the reservation, and another one thirtieth part devoted to school work—of what value will it be to have all of this multiplicity of records to enable you to report all of this and to submit it to Congress, to be thrown into the wastebasket? Is that what this is for?
> Mr. ABBOTT. That is what this is for, as I understand it.

Mr. Abbott said:

> I will say very frankly that so far as the value of that kind of work to the Indians is concerned, my time so employed would be a dead loss.
> The CHAIRMAN. Tell me some individual in whose case it would not be a dead loss.
> Mr. ABBOTT. The usefulness of that information would appear when the commissioner goes before the Indian Committee and some member of that committee asks him to show from the records just what percentage of income from sale of timber or oil leases is paid out in administration. He can not tell from present records.
> The CHAIRMAN. It would be absolutely worthless. I have been here 14 years, and the information you would communicate to Congress would not be worth $2 a century.

Then the chairman asked him:

> There is one other question. Do you know what arrangements, if any, have been made for the employment of persons to do this work, or who are contemplated?
> Mr. ABBOTT. Yes, sir.
> The CHAIRMAN. Who are they?
> Mr. ABBOTT. One was a member of the Cleveland commission who worked for about two years examining the methods of the Indian Office.

Mr. OWEN. Answering the Senator as to the value of these criticisms, the question in the first place not only shows hostility, but the question was so framed as to be absurd. Of course nobody wants to know about the one sixty-second part of a man's time, or the thirty-fifth part of something else, or a fractional part of something else. That is not the meaning of this at all. It is a misinterpretation of it.

Mr. BRYAN. What is the meaning?

Mr. OWEN. The meaning of it is that the classification of the work done through the Indian Office in part should be so systematized that it will permit the President——

Mr. BRYAN. That is not what the witness said.

Mr. OWEN. The witness does not know anything about it. Abbott is not an expert on the matter, and does not pretend to be. If any question were going to be asked at all, it ought to be asked of the man who had prepared this, and not the man to whom Abbott was opposed.

Mr. BRYAN. Abbott was not opposed to him.

Mr. OWEN. He was opposed to this proposal.

Mr. BRYAN. No; he was not. He said the recommendation did not come from the department. He was advocating it.

Mr. LANE. I should like to explain to the Senator from Florida that the information we wished to obtain was such facts which would protect us from doing what we did last year when this body unwittingly put through over $100,000 of deficits which nowhere showed any accounting. The committee were ignorant of it, and they acted on it in good faith, and they were passed as live appropriations. If that kind of business was carried on by bankers or other business concerns, somebody would be under criminal indictment and would walk into the penitentiary. It is for the sake of getting information for the Senate so that they may know what they are doing and act upon that information.

Here is another case. There are two funds, two large sums of money, each amounting to $500,000, belonging to some tribe, of which I can get no record from the Indian Office, although I have been hunting for it for a number of days.

Mr. BRYAN. That is not because of the failure to have such a provision as this.

Mr. LANE. It is because of the failure to have an up-to-date system of accounting in the Indian Office.

Mr. BRYAN. That is not because of failure to have such a provision in the law.

Mr. OWEN. It was because of the failure to have a system of accounting in the Indian Office.

Mr. BRYAN. I raise the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the language of this proposal. It is to establish a system of bookkeeping which will, in line 19, afford a ready analysis of expenditures—> by appropriation.

That is one class.

> By appropriations and allotments—

That is another class—

> And by units of the service.

That is a third class.

That does not deal with the number of hours an employee may be engaged. A great many men are employed for certain classes of work.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. OWEN. I think the point of order can be made, but it is not justified.

Mr. BRYAN. I make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the point of order?

Mr. BRYAN. The point of order is that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order. The amendment has to do with the Indian appropriation bill and the keeping of the accounts of this appropriation.

Mr. BRYAN. Then, upon the merits of the proposition, I desire to submit that the Senate specifically, by section 25 of this bill, repeals section 26 of the appropriation act of last year; for the administration Congress refused to appropriate. It seems to me that the House acted more wisely than the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 101, to strike out section 25, in the following words:

> SEC. 25. Section 26 of the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1913 (Public, No. 4), is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there are some matters to come up of importance, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Owen	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Hollis	Page	Smoot
Bristow	James	Perkins	Sterling
Bryan	Jones	Pittman	Sutherland
Camden	Lane	Poindexter	Swanson
Catron	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Thomas
Chamberlain	Martine, N. J.	Reed	Thompson
Chilton	Myers	Saulsbury	Thornton
Clapp	Nelson	Shafroth	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Newlands	Sheppard	Townsend
Culberson	Norris	Shively	Vardaman
Cummins	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.	West
Dillingham	Oliver	Smith, Ga.	White
Fletcher	Overman	Smith, Md.	Williams

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is necessarily absent and that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KERN] on important business. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, if it is a proper time to do so, I would call up the reconsideration of the item on page 80, beginning in line 15, and concluding at line 14 on page 81. I asked that it be passed over in order to have a consultation by telephone with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in regard to an amendment to it. I would like to have it considered now.

Mr. ASHURST. It will not be necessary to reconsider the amendment. It was passed over.

Mr. LANE. It was passed over. The same appropriation was made for all the other States allowing the Secretary to purchase agricultural implements and seeds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANE. There were two more amendments passed over, one on page 25.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, beginning with line 17, the amendment was passed over on the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE]. The amendment is to insert, after line 16, on page 25, the following:

For investigation recommended by the Board of Engineer Officers of the United States Army, as set forth in paragraph 217 of their report to the Secretary of War on February 14, 1914, House Document No. 791, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and report as to the supply of the legally available water, acreage available for irrigation and titles thereto, the maximum and minimum estimated cost of the San Carlos irrigation project, including dam and necessary canals, ditches, and laterals, with recommendations and reasons therefor and the probable cost of adjudicating the water rights along the Gila River necessary thereto, and to take the steps necessary to prevent the vesting of any water rights in addition to those, if any, now existing until further action by Congress, $50,000.

Mr. LANE. I withdraw my objection. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment passed over is the amendment of the committee, on page 14.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] with reference to an amendment proposed by him to the committee amendment on page 56. I asked that it might be passed over until I could have a consultation with some other members of the committee. I now ask the Senate to recur to that amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, strike out the House text, beginning on line 13, down to and including line 2, on page 57, and insert:

There is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use this money, or so much thereof as may be necessary, under such regulations as he may prescribe, for the promotion of civilization and self-support among the Indians residing and having tribal rights on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, N. Dak., the said sum to be expended in the purchase of live stock, seed, vehicles, harness, machinery, tools, implements, and other agricultural equipment, and for such other purposes as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper in promoting their civilization and self-support: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925; and all repayments to this fund made on or before June 30, 1924, are hereby reappropriated for the same purpose as the original fund, and the entire fund, including such repayments, shall remain available until June 30, 1924, and all payments to the fund hereby created which shall be made subsequent to June 30, 1924, shall be covered into the Treasury and shall not be withdrawn or applied except in consequence of a subsequent appropriation made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to recur to a committee amendment that was agreed to on page 63. If the chairman of the committee has no objection, I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well.

Mr. OWEN. I did not hear what the amendment was about.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the amendment on page 63, relative to the Fort Sill School.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Beginning on line 15 and ending on line 22.

The SECRETARY. The amendment referred to is on page 63, beginning with line 15. It reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Women's Board of Domestic Missions, Reformed Church in America, the sum of $10,000 for mission and school buildings built by them on the Fort Sill Military Reserve, Okla., for the use of the Apache Indians and rendered useless on account of the removal of said Indians to the Mescalero Indian Reservation in New Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senate that when this amendment was under consideration I rose for the purpose of making a point of order against it as obnoxious to Rule XVI, paragraph 4. At that time I knew little about the conditions and little about what were the real merits of the amendment.

This morning I had a very prominent citizen of Washington call at my office and tell me that the item should not be allowed to remain in the bill. He gave me the reasons why it should not be, and I am quite sure that he is perfectly sincere in the position taken by him. As this is a claim against the Government, it should be a claim made direct by way of a bill and should not be placed on an appropriation bill; and for the further fact that my entering a point of order against this item will in no way affect the claim of the Women's Board of Domestic Missions I feel constrained at this time to make a point of order against this item.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under paragraph 4 of Rule XVI?

Mr. SMOOT. Rule XVI, paragraph 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OWEN. On pages 73 and 74 an item went out on a point of order, permitting the Muskogee Nation to present its claim to the Court of Claims. In lieu of the item which went out I should like to offer the following, and I hope that no objection will be made to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been the universal rule since the present occupant of the chair has been here to dispose of committee amendments first.

Mr. OWEN. I thought they had been disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have not been disposed of.

Mr. OWEN. I beg pardon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee amendment was passed over on page 14. The committee proposes to strike out beginning with line 11 down to and including line 22, on page 14, and to insert:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees and other persons having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted allotment or in any other estate or property held in trust by the United States under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $20,000 for the employment of additional clerks in the Indian Office in connection with the work of determining the heirs of deceased Indians out of the $100,000 appropriated herein: Provided further, That hereafter any officer or employee appointed or designated by the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as special examiner in heirship cases shall be authorized to administer oaths in investigations committed to him: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to the Osage Indians, nor to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma: And provided further, That hereafter upon the determination of the heirs of a deceased Indian by the Secretary of the Interior there shall be paid by such heirs, or from the estate of such deceased Indian, or deducted from the proceeds from the sale of the land of the deceased allottee, or from any trust funds belonging to the estate of the decedent, the sum of $10, to cover the cost of determining the heirs to the estate of the said deceased allottees, which amount shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury of the United States and a report made annually to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior on or before the first Monday in December of all moneys collected and deposited as herein provided: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to require the attendance of witnesses at hearings, upon proper showing by any of the parties to determine the heirs of decedents, held in accordance with section 1 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 855), and the amendment of February 14, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 678), under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was an amendment to this amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 2, the words "authorized to inquire the," before the word "attendance," were stricken from the bill and the words "directed to compel the" were inserted.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I made a point of order against this amendment on the ground that it was general legislation, but made it, too, because of some objection I felt at the time to this method of determining the heirs of Indian allottees.

Upon reflection, however, and some investigation, I am not disposed to insist on the objection. It may be that under present conditions the method contemplated by the amendment is the better method for determining the heirs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is withdrawn?

Mr. STERLING. The point of order is withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. STERLING. Before the question on the amendment is put, I wish to call the attention of the committee to one expression found in line 25, page 14. The amendment reads:

For the purpose of determining the heirs of deceased Indian allottees and other persons having any right, title, or interest in any trust or restricted allotment—

And so forth.

It occurred to me that the words "and other persons" were too broad and comprehensive in this connection and would include other persons than Indian allottees or related in any way to Indian allotments. They might be white persons for whom the United States would hold in trust, for example, and there would be no necessity for determining the heirship of such persons by the Secretary of the Interior. Such heirship should be determined in the ordinary way by the probate court of the county in which the person resides or in which the property is situated.

I move that the words "and other persons," in line 25, be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. On page 14 of the committee amendment, line 25, strike out the words "and other persons."

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota whether the words "or in any other estate or property held in trust by the United States" should not also be stricken out. As it stands it would seem that the purpose of this amendment, the particular effect of the amendment rather, would be to enable the Government to determine the right of any person in any estate or property held in trust by the United States, whether it is property belonging to the Indians or to anyone else.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, with the words "and other persons" stricken out, it seems to me that the words "other estate or property held in trust by the United States" would only relate to the property of the Indians or of Indian allottees.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true; but the words to which I call attention in that case have no office whatever to perform. I think they ought to go out.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado calls attention, as I understand, to the concluding words in line 26.

Mr. THOMAS. To the words "or in any other estate or property."

Mr. STERLING. I think the words "or in any other estate or property held in trust by the United States" might include property held in trust for Indians other than Indian allottees.

Mr. THOMAS. The words "in any trust or restricted allotment," in line 26, are certainly broad enough to cover any possible claim held by any Indian beneficiary.

Mr. STERLING. I think, Mr. President, the point made by the Senator from Colorado is well taken; and I also move that the words "or in any other estate or property held in trust by the United States," in line 26, on page 14, and in line 1, on page 15, be stricken from the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 23, in the clause beginning in line 6, to strike out "$20,000" and to insert "$35,600," so as to read:

For improvement and sinking of wells, installation of pumping machinery, construction of tanks for domestic and stock water, and for the necessary structures for the development of a supply of water for domestic use for eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, $35,600.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Arizona], who has been called from the Chamber at this moment, was the Senator who requested that that amendment be passed over. I request that it be passed over for a few moments longer until he shall have returned and that we now recur to the next amendment passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again temporarily passed over.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 23, in line 21, after the word "Reservation," to strike out "$15,000" and to insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

For continuing the development of a water supply for the Navajo Indians on the Navajo Reservation, $50,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, reimbursable out of any funds of said Indians now or hereafter available.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, on page 36, in one of the committee amendments there is a provision for a drainage system in the State of Minnesota. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may approve the assessments; it leaves the matter entirely with the Secretary of the Interior. Representative MILLER, of the district in which this drainage plant is situated, has been recently up there and has returned. He advises me that while as a rule this assessment would not be anywhere near $1.50 an acre, as provided in this amendment, yet there might be isolated cases where it would mean more than that sum, and if the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior were limited it would, of course, defeat the entire drainage system. In view of the fact that the discretion is vested finally in the Secretary of the Interior, I see no objection to withdrawing the limitation. I therefore ask that the following words in lines 22 and 23, on page 36, of the committee amendment be stricken out:

Provided, That said assessment shall not exceed $1.50 per acre; and.

To do that, of course, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote by which this amendment referred to by the Senator from Minnesota was agreed to? The Chair hears none, and it is reconsidered. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, in the committee amendment, on lines 22 and 23, it is proposed to strike out the words: "Provided, That said assessment shall not exceed $1.50 per acre; and".

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has sent me a bill, which he asked to have offered and adopted as an amendment to this bill at the end of the Wisconsin item. The Senator from Wisconsin is unable to be here to-day, being ill. I, therefore, in his behalf offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota on behalf of the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the Wisconsin items, on page 96, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to set apart lots 10, 11, and 12, section 25, township 48 north, range 3 west, on the La Pointe Reservation in Wisconsin, for an Indian town site, and to cause the lands described to be surveyed and platted into suitable lots, streets, and alleys, and to dedicate said streets and alleys and such lots or parcel as may be necessary to public uses, and to cause the lots to be appraised at their real value, exclusive of improvements thereon or adjacent thereto, by a board of three persons, one of whom shall be the United States Indian agent of the La Pointe Agency, one to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, and one selected by the Indians of the La Pointe Band of Chippewas, who shall receive such compensation as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale of lots sold under this act, and when so surveyed, platted, and appraised, the President may issue patents to the Indians of the said reservation for such lots on the payment by them of the appraised value thereof, on such terms as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the net proceeds of such sales shall be placed to the credit of the La Pointe Band of Chippewa Indians: Provided, That no person shall be authorized to purchase lots on the lands described other than members of said La Pointe Band of Indians, and those now owning permanent improvements there shall have the preference right for six months from the date such lots are offered for sale within which to purchase tracts upon which their improvements are situated, but no lot shall be sold for less than the appraised valuation; but if any person entitled fails to take advantage of this provision, the agent of the La Pointe Agency shall appraise the improvements on the unsold lots, and any member of the La Pointe Band of Chippewas, on the payment to the owner of the appraised value of the improvements, shall have the preference right for six months from the date of such payment to purchase such unsold lot or lots at their appraised value on such terms as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That any land disposed of hereunder shall be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country until otherwise provided by Congress.

SEC. 2. That the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 34, township 48 north, range 3 west, be set aside and dedicated as a burial ground and for such other purposes as may be approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the use of the members of the La Pointe Band of Indians.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to reserve, within said town site of Odanah, not exceeding 10 acres for use of the La Pointe and other Chippewa Indians for fair grounds, parks, and other public purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. Has that amendment been approved by the Interior Department?

Mr. CLAPP. I am not certain as to that, but it leaves everything to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It relates to the Bad River Indian Reservation. Odanah is the central seat of population of these Indians. We are practically doing away with the reservation. This is to make a sort of a town site there for the Indians. It provides that all these matters shall be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. As I have stated, the Senator from Wisconsin is unable to be here this afternoon and he has asked me to offer the bill as an amendment and to ask for its adoption. Knowing what I do of the situation there—I have been there, of course—I see no possible reason why we should not adopt the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether or not this bill now offered as an amendment has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs or to the department, and whether or not any investigation has been made by either as to the necessity of this legislation? The bill is so long that it is almost impossible to catch its full import by merely hearing it read from the desk. I do not know to what extent it goes or what precedent it might establish.

Mr. CLAPP. The bill, of course, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not now recall whether or not we considered the bill in committee. It relates to one of those matters about which, it strikes me, there can be no possible question. We are closing up matters on that reservation. I repeat that Odanah is the central seat of population of the Indians there. The agency is there, as are the store and the offices; and as the matter is being closed up, it is desired that these Indians shall have an opportunity to buy some of the lots. They also want a burying ground and a permanent fairground. So that while the bill is somewhat long it is necessary that it should be so. It provides that these lots shall be surveyed; that they shall first be offered to those who occupy them, reference being had to improvements upon them. If they fail to take them after 60 days, then the lots can be offered to other Indians of that tribe.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is the Senator from Minnesota personally acquainted with conditions there?

Mr. CLAPP. I am thoroughly conversant with conditions there.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then I will take the judgment of the Senator from Minnesota, of course.

Mr. CLAPP. There can be no question about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota on behalf of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. To come in on page 90, after the word "school," in line 18, I offer the following amendment:

For enabling the Secretary of the Interior to assist the county commissioners of Stevens County, Wash., in the construction of a county road across the Spokane Indian Reservation, $500, reimbursable out of any proceeds arising from the sale or disposition of surplus lands of said reservation or out of any moneys to the credit of the Spokane Indians.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from Washington will pardon me, there is another committee amendment which was reserved, and before we take up the bill for the consideration of individual amendments I ask that the committee amendment which was passed over be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment passed over, referred to by the Senator from Arizona, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 10, after the word "Arizona," it is proposed to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$35,600," so as to make the paragraph read:

For improvement and sinking of wells, installation of pumping machinery, construction of tanks for domestic and stock water, and for the necessary structures for the development of a supply of water for domestic use for eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, $35,600.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I live in close proximity to the Papago Indian Reservation, and I know of no eight Papago villages in southern Arizona; certainly there is no such number within a reasonable distance of that reservation. I do not know whether the purpose of this provision is to establish eight Papago Indian villages or whether the purpose is to provide a water supply for eight Papago Indian villages now on the Papago Reservation, and thus accomplish the object sought to be accomplished by the amendment which has been struck from the bill, giving $50,000 for the purpose of tapping the water flow on which the city of Tucson depends. So I do not like the provision as it stands. I would not object, provided it were amended, in line 9, so as to read:

For the development of a supply of water for domestic use for existing Papago Indian villages situated on the public lands in southern Arizona.

I do not know but that under this provision the Bureau of Indian Affairs might have authority to go to a water supply claimed by a man owning cattle, and proceed there to establish an Indian village. If the provision were made to apply only to existing Papago Indian villages, I should have no objection to it. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee who happens to have given this particular provision consideration what eight Indian villages are supposed to exist to which this appropriation of $35,600 is to be applied?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, speaking for myself—I have had no opportunity to consult the committee—I have no objection to the amendment proposed by my colleague.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, $35,600 divided among eight villages would be $4,450 per village. I should think that if the proposed amendment is going to be agreed to, it ought to be more definite, and it would be better to strike it out entirely than thus to amend it. There may be only one or two of these villages, in which event the total of $35,600 would be an excessive sum, upon the assumption, of course, that $4,450 per village is adequate for each of the total number of eight, which the bill recites.

Mr. SMOOT. That amount ought to sink a good many wells.

Mr. THOMAS. It would sink a good many wells, as suggested by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Colorado that from the regular Papago Reservation, lying on the river above Tucson, certain small bands of nomadic or roaming Indians stray, and do not stay on the reservation at all. They will go off to the foothills of some of the adjoining mountains or to some swale, away from the reservation, and camp there for six or eight months. If there is sufficient rain, they might attempt to raise a few vegetables, but very few; and whenever that location gets dry and does not graze the little stock they take with them, they will move to another place. As I have said, I do not know where the eight Papago Indian villages referred to are; I know of no such number now in existence; the committee does not seem to know of any such number; and it seems to me a pretty wasteful way to attempt to dispose of public money in so indefinite a manner.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I can just recall something that was said by some witness before the committee—perhaps the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It appears that the House provided $20,000 for this purpose, which the Senate committee has raised to $35,600. There was nothing said before the committee which I can recall that did not apply simply to the sinking of wells. It was desired to provide for that, and, possibly, for making ponds where the fall of water was sufficient to justify them. The testimony, as presented by the assistant commissioner or some other witness, was, as the Senator has said, that these Indians are rather a roving band, but will live in villages if located on a piece of ground where they can secure water for their stock and for family uses; and that if wells could be dug for them and they could thereby get water, they would probably settle down more permanently. I do not think it was even suggested by anybody that any of this water would be supplied from any of the streams, but it was all to be procured from wells which were to be dug. I think there was some testimony as to the probable depth of the wells—how far they would have to go to get water—and statements as to what had been done in a few similar instances.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am familiar with the condition which the Senator suggests, and I expected the facts to be presented before the committee as the Senator himself remembers them. The difficulty is that you can never confine that particular tribe of Indians to one particular place. If a well is dug at a place where possibly water can be obtained at a reasonable depth, there is no security on earth that the Indians will stay there one month longer than they want to; the well is there, as it can not be moved, and the cattleman or the farmer who might afterwards desire to use it would be deprived of its use on account of the Indian title.

The Papago Indian Reservation is large enough to afford ample room for every Papago Indian. The whole trouble is that an attempt has been made in one of the provisions of this bill to take the water supply upon which the city of Tucson depends and to apply it to the lands of the Indians. I have no doubt in the world that if the Indian Commissioner could get a sensible Indian agent at Tucson, one who had no other purpose than to adjust the water rights between the Indian and the white man, provision could be made—and it ought to be made—whereby the Indians on that reservation could get much more water than they are now getting, without any injury to anybody; but I can not too strongly condemn the attempt to tap the underflow on which the city of Tucson and everybody below the Indian reservation depends. That has been the purpose here; it has been apparent in bill after bill, and has been stricken out by this body every time it has appeared. No effort has been made to catch the upper flow, the surface flow, of the river and help the Indians with it, but now it is proposed to provide a water supply for eight Indian villages, although I do not know where they exist in spite of the fact that I am quite familiar with southern Arizona. I know of two or three little Indian villages and I know of a dozen abandoned places.

Now, to say that this money shall be applied for the benefit of eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona—and southern Arizona is about the size of New England—is so indefinite that nobody knows where this roving commission will dig the wells. If they are dug, it will result in dissipating the Papago Indian Reservation at Tucson and scattering the Indians over the whole country, probably interfering with the rights of men who have been grazing cattle on the land for the last 30 years. I want to limit the broad right covered by this provision, and, therefore, I suggest an amendment so as to make the provision read in this way:

For the development of a supply of water for domestic use for existing Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, situated on the public lands and outside the Papago Indian Reservation.

I do not think they will find as many as eight Papago villages, but this will confine it to the Indian villages now existing, and not give a roving commission to the Indian agent to go to the Papago people and tell them to leave their reservation and go somewhere else where wells will be dug for them. They would go down to the wells which might be dug and come back, and that would be the end of it, and the cloud of the Indian title would stop anybody else from using the water. It is as much in the interest of the Indian himself as in the interest of the public lands and leaving them open for the occupancy of those who might possibly use them that I suggest the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if he does not think that it is bad policy to dig wells for these roving bands of Indians off of their reservation?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. Does it not encourage them to leave their reservation, which they might stay upon if these inducements were not given by the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator is exactly right about that, and the reason for my full adherence to what he says is the peculiar nature of this tribe of Indians. They are perfectly peaceful and always have been the friends of the white man. They would stay on their reservation and work if they had a chance; but when they are permitted, as the Senator suggests, to wander from the reservation and go off into another country where wells have been dug for them, they will do so, only to abandon it the minute it does not become profitable for them to remain there. If it were provided that on the abandonment of these wells by the Indians, the lands on which they are dug should be returned to the public domain, it would make a very material difference in my idea of the matter.

Mr. THOMAS. It would seem to me, at least, Mr. President, to be also a recognition of his right to leave his reservation and to stay off it, which I do not think is wise in legislation. I should prefer to see the item stricken out entirely, in view of what has been said by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, the facts were presented to the committee in a statement made before the House committee by the Superintendent of Irrigation, and in another statement made to the Senate committee.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is what I was asking for.

Mr. LANE. In the statement to the House committee it was said:

> Mr. SCHANCK. Probably it would be more clearly understood from this map than from a verbal description. The appropriation of $5,000 for the Papago Indians, the same being item No. 35, contemplates the sinking of wells and making other improvements to the water supply of the nomadic Papago villages, as found best by specialists in the field. In addition to this, large areas of the nomadic Papago country have been surveyed, and it has been found feasible to construct at eight villages wells and pumping plants to furnish water for stock, and perhaps in some instances for a small amount of irrigation where the villages have been established for a long time and where it is known that the Indians constantly make their homes. These villages are Via-Viau or Cocklebur, with a population of approximately 200; Chiu Chiuschu, with a population of approximately 200; Ko-opke, with a population of approximately 75; Tahf-Mohmeli, with a population of approximately 100; Quajoti, with a population of approximately 100; Anegam, with a population of approximately 200; Santa Rosa, with a population of approximately 400.

Mr. THOMAS. Where do they get their water supply now?

Mr. LANE. Here is what he says: He says that these Indians follow the water supply, and when it dries up in the valleys they go up into the mountains with their small herds, and wherever they can find water they make good use of it in their small gardens, and raise produce for their families; that they are poor people, and require this help from the Government to subsist upon. He says:

> They live at their villages on the lower elevations during the season when there is water, either obtained from little reservoirs that they have constructed themselves, or in a very few places such as we have chosen for irrigation purposes where there is water available below; but when it becomes dry and the season of drought comes on they go back to the higher country where there is more water and drive their flocks with them. They are to-day principally living on the product of their flocks, with what little irrigation and with what little farming they can do by what is called the dry-farming methods. They have developed on their own reservation dry-farming methods—methods that Mr. Burbank himself might take notice of.
> Diverting a little, I may say that they have raised a bean that can not be raised anywhere else, and which is raised only by them. Our object is to protect their rights.

He said, and repeated to us, that these were a very deserving and an industrious people, who lived in an arid belt of country where it was very hard for them to obtain water, and they have made better use of it than perhaps any other Indians in America.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The only trouble about the report read by the Senator from Oregon is that it is not the fact.

Mr. LANE. The Senator understands that I am not the author of it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; if the Senator had given it on his own information, I would have accepted it as a fact, unquestionably. Now, I do not want to do poor Lo any harm, but the flocks they live on are largely other people's flocks when you get them off the reservation. I do not know of a Papago Indian village in Arizona that has flocks enough to live on for a week; and this thing of their going higher up into the mountains to get water for irrigation is an impossibility. There is not in the whole of southern Arizona a condition which would make that true. They do not go on to these other places and then go up into another mountain hunting up a place to find more water to grow a new bean. They are getting off the reservation because they do not want to live under the rules of it. That is all there is in it. They wander around and stop wherever they please and as long as they please, and whenever they feel like it they go somewhere else, as far from the reservation as they can, and in the late troubles usually into Mexico.

I do not want to strike out the provision entirely, for if we can do anything for these Indians I should like to see it done. I do not believe we can, but I am willing to have the Government try the experiment, but not by whoever wrote this report or gave this testimony, for he does not know what he is talking about.

A beautiful theory hangs around the Indian; and the gentleman living in the East all his life is apt to get very familiar with the extinct tribe of Fenimore Cooper Indians that never did exist, and he immediately forms plans on that theory.

These Indians leave the reservation because they do not want to stay on it. They take no unusual amount of stock with them, because they know that if they are industrious they can find stock in the neighborhood where they are going. When you establish these wells and build these eight villages, my judgment is that not one of them will stay there after the first bad weather comes on or he gets hungry. They leave the reservation constantly.

I am perfectly willing that the Government shall spend money to see if it can develop water that will help these Indians. I know that they have not enough water on their own reservation; but I have noticed that they do not kill themselves trying to cultivate the ground even then, and they are the very best Indians I know.

The water they are now trying to give them has been there for the Government to give to them for the last 50 years; yes, you may say for the last 200 years. The town below them is probably the oldest town in America. Long before Jamestown or Plymouth Rock was heard of the town of Tucson existed. The Indian villages were there then. Now, for the first time, after they have put them all in this great reservation, and it has lain there for years and years, by the expenditure of a million and a half dollars or more, by going very deep across the Santa Cruz Valley and the little stream that runs through it, they have developed enough water to supply a city of 50,000 people, probably. There are twenty-odd thousand there now. The Indian reservation lies above it. Since this deep cutting across and pumping has been found successful, they wished to go in and cut off the water supply of the city. That proposal was struck from the bill. Then we have the other one, that they will send the Indians roving through eight villages. The report from which the Senator from Oregon read very carefully avoids stating the location of any one of those Indian villages. I do not know whether they are in Santa Cruz County, Cochise County, Pima County, or Yuma County, and neither does the man who testified in this report know.

We know that this has been done all over the West—the Indians have been mistreated by a lot of people who did not know how to handle them. Take this thing of educating the Indian, letting him sing a song, throwing him forcibly, if you please, through a schoolhouse, and then, because he can read, thinking you have an elevated citizen.

We all know what becomes of the educated Indian. It is needless for me to say in this presence. Then we go and capture him, virtually with a lariat, and send him off to Pennsylvania and to Hampton, down here, and educate him, to be an Ishmaelite all his life. Then the girl—you can imagine what her fate is. Yet we spend millions of dollars for this sort of foolishness, instead of letting him know how to cultivate an orange, how to plow a field, how to shoe a horse, do the thing in his environment, let the school supply the actual, mechanical knowledge that he should learn, let him grow up to the necessities, and only send to school the boy who wants to go to school.

The Indian will learn these things if you will give him the opportunity; but we turn him into our schools and pay millions of dollars to educate him. I assert, from an experience of 30 years with him, that I do not believe 30 cents out of any $100 has ever gone, although not as the result of any thievery, in effectuation of the purpose for which the appropriation was made.

I should have asked to strike out of the bill the appropriation for this school in Pennsylvania, but I am not going to detain the Senate longer. I will reserve what I have to say about that matter for some future time and some other appropriation bill. I do want to say, however, that this proposal is of the same character. After persuading the Indian, as we have been for 20 years persuading him, to go on reservations, we are now giving him inducements to go off them. In the northern part they will take Indians off the Navajo Reservation and carry them away down into New Mexico, as the Senator from New Mexico stated the last time an Indian appropriation bill was up, and the agent will induce them to leave the reservation and go out on public lands to make locations, to harass, in a measure, the cattlemen, who have been using the water for years and years before.

I do not like this roving idea, but inasmuch as I have a sympathy for these Indians I am perfectly willing for the Government to make a try. I think the $20,000 the House gave is sufficient. I think we ought not to say that it is to be devoted to any eight Indian villages, but let the appropriation go to any village or any number of villages off of this reservation, so that the $20,000 may demonstrate whether or not they can get permanent water on unoccupied public domain, so that the Indian may possibly have a chance to better his condition.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if I had the same idea of the Indian that the Senator from Arizona has—that he is a hopeless proposition and that our large appropriations for schools is money thrown away—I should perhaps be more discouraged than ever over any prospect of civilization either for whites or blacks or browns. I do not take that view of it, however; and I believe the Government is now starting, practically for the first time, along the line of helping the Indian, the man who is entitled to more consideration at the hands of this country than he has ever received. The great West and much of the Middle West was at one time his property, and we have never stood on ceremony when it came to robbing him of it.

I do not care at this time, however, to go into that matter, because I assume that is not the policy of the Government. I simply wish to refer to this particular item, now that I have found the testimony that was taken on the subject. Some parts of the Senator's statement would certainly justify this appropriation. I can not tell now what the argument was for increasing it. I simply have the statement of the assistant commissioner, and I think Mr. Reed, who has charge of Indian irrigation projects.

On page 204 of the hearings, when this matter came up, Mr. Meritt said:

> Mr. Chairman, we would like very much to have our estimate in connection with this item—

Which was $35,000.

> These are Papago Indians that we spoke about a few days ago when the school items were considered. These Indians are living under conditions that would be almost impossible for white people to live under. They are very energetic people, and we think with this appropriation we can develop a sufficient water supply for these Indians so that they can become more self-supporting than they are at this time. They are not asking for any gratuity appropriations; they have not heretofore. We would like to aid them to the extent of procuring water for them so that they can make a success of stock raising and small agricultural pursuits.
> The CHAIRMAN. Is this a gratuity appropriation?
> Mr. MERITT. This is a gratuity appropriation; yes, sir.
> The CHAIRMAN. How is the water supply to be secured?
> Mr. MERITT. By drilling wells. We have one well rig out in that country at this time. Mr. Reed can explain the details of that.
> Senator TOWNSEND. As I understand it, this is a case where the Indians do not own the land. Where are you going to dig the well? The Papagos are living, as I understand, in little villages on land that does not belong to them.
> Mr. MERITT. We have created Executive-order reservations in two cases, I believe, and set aside land for these Indians. They are living in villages and we expect to get an Executive-order reservation covering all the land where the work is now in progress.
>
> Senator TOWNSEND. Do you propose to dig the wells before you get the reservation set aside?
> Mr. MERITT. No, sir. We have had men in that country making surveys. The land heretofore has not been surveyed, and we have data sufficient to enable us to get the land set aside and we have well-drilling outfits there so that we can furnish these Indians with water.
> Senator PAGE. These wells are drilled in the little villages, are they not—the Indian villages around there? I judge that from the hearings.
> Mr. MERITT. Mr. Reed has a map here, and I would be glad to have him answer any questions.
> Senator ROBINSON. Where do they get their water supply now?
> Mr. MERITT. From little hand-dug wells.
> Senator ROBINSON. Is the water supply adequate now?
> Mr. MERITT. It is for domestic purposes only.
>
> Senator ROBINSON. What are you going to use this water supply for?
>
> Mr. REED. To raise some little gardens. These Indians are called the nomadic Papagos. They live at their villages on the lower elevations during the season when there is water, either obtained from little reservoirs that they have constructed themselves or in a very few places such as we have chosen for irrigation purposes where there is water available below, but when it becomes dry and the season of drought comes on they go back to the higher country, where there is more water, and drive their flocks with them. They are to-day principally living on the product of their flocks, with what little irrigation and with what little farming they can do by what is called the dry-farming methods. They have developed on their own reservation dry-farming methods—methods that Mr. Burbank himself might take notice of.
> Diverting a little, I may say that they have raised a bean that can not be raised anywhere else and which is raised only by them. Our object is to protect their rights.
> There is at the present time another railroad survey made through the southern portion, which, if constructed, would bring the white man there, and he would take those places, probably, that have shallow water, and the Indian, who is just able to exist now, would have his last resources cut off and would probably be a charge upon the Government in a short time.
> The reservations have been made, and a few withdrawals, which are indicated on this map. Upon those we could begin work at once. We do not contemplate any large irrigation scheme. If we can get them 2 or 3 acres upon which they can raise something to eat, a few beans and a few other vegetables—they do raise the pumpkin—we will begin there at once. The other place which we have tentatively selected for site would have to be withdrawn. We understand perfectly well that we should not, and will not, expend one cent upon the public domain in developing water or anything of that kind, but we have selected those places, and if we should have this appropriation, would take the necessary steps to secure the land and would put these 5,000 Indians, who are now only semilocated, upon a basis where they could still exist, even though the white man might get in.
> Senator TOWNSEND. But do you think that this nomadic tribe would stay "put"?
> Mr. REED. They never move until they are compelled to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The witness did not answer your question. You asked him a very significant question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I asked the question:

> But do you think that this nomadic tribe would stay "put"?

His answer was:

> They never move until they are compelled to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Compelled by what?

Mr. TOWNSEND (reading):

> Senator ROBINSON. They are not very nomadic, then?
> Mr. REED. That may be a misnomer, but it is a name that has been applied to them.
> Senator ROBINSON. If the House item is allowed, what will be the effect on your service there? The House allowed you $20,000, I believe, on that item.
> Mr. REED. We asked for $35,000. This is something that we won't lose by the use of the $20,000, because it is made up of a number of units—not one big project. We could utilize the $20,000.
> Senator ROBINSON. Would the $35,000 be adequate for all of them?
> Mr. REED. The $35,000 would probably develop all the water that we believe, or know, exists to-day.

I asked him this question:

> Is this the tribe that had the hand-dug wells that some one spoke of yesterday?
>
> Mr. REED. I do not know that they have. These are the Indians that are referred to.
>
> Senator TOWNSEND. Is this going to be artesian water, or is it to be pumped—going down a thousand feet for it?
> Mr. REED. No, sir; none of the places which we have selected for irrigation supply has a great depth. It is shallow; it lies in what is called in that country a wash that accumulates drainage from thousands and thousands of acres, and is moving on toward this drainage center. We won't attempt to pump water for irrigation 400 feet. We might pump it for stock or domestic use, but not for irrigation.

Mr. President, when the Senator from Arizona first arose, I could only recall in a general way what this item was. I am now satisfied from the testimony of an expert, Mr. Reed, who has been out there and has his well-digging apparatus there, that these 7,000 Indians are entitled to some consideration from the United States. I maintain that they are entitled to a prior consideration at the hands of the United States. No white man is in there now on this particular land. I have no objection to the development going to the extent of $20,000, because we can start it at that, at least, and find out what can be done. In this modest way we are putting it in the hands of this tribe to demonstrate that they are what it has been claimed for them that they are, namely, intelligent, industrious husbandmen; that they know something about raising stock; that they will cultivate their gardens; that they do not leave them unless they are compelled to leave them. Located as they are now, it seems to me this is the least thing Congress can do for these wards.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat I should like to inquire what is the area of the reservation which the Papago Indians own, or which has been created for them.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know that. I do know that, according to this testimony, they are to occupy nothing except their reservation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. On the contrary, there is not one of them on the reservation at all. That is the trouble with them.

Mr. THOMAS. The testimony which the Senator read indicated that it was the purpose of the bureau to secure additional reservations by Executive order.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. I am disposed to think that the extent of the reservation at present is ample for their needs, and that it is unfair to the people of Arizona, either by Executive order or otherwise, that this reservation should be extended or any additional reservation created for these people.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the Senator that my understanding is from this testimony—and I know I am correct about it—that in some of these places it was carried out through Executive order. In some they propose to try to get an order for the location where these Indians now are. I assume they will not be located on these reservations, or they will not be set apart for them, unless it is found to be for the interest of the Indians to have those reservations set apart.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt of that. I have no doubt that the department will sincerely intend to benefit the Indians proposed to be benefited by this measure; but before additional reservations are made for them it should be ascertained whether the same relief can not be extended to them in the domain which they at present own.

From what the Senator from Arizona has said—and we must assume that his personal knowledge of existing conditions there justifies him in speaking with authority—these Indians are not of the character portrayed by Mr. Reed in this testimony. I say that without in the slightest degree intending to reflect on Mr. Reed's purposes or intentions in making the statements he did before the committee. I would be in favor of the expenditure of this money upon the reservation. I am not in favor of expending one dollar outside of the limits of the reservation for any Indian tribe in the United States which has a reservation, because it tends to encourage the excursions of these tribes from their reservations. It not only tends to encourage them, but it legalizes their excursions by subsequent reservations by Executive order to include their new habitations. It is not right, and it is a positive injustice to the western settler, who, under the present system of conservation, has a pretty hard time in finding any land outside of reservations as conditions now are.

For the purpose of expressing my ideas in a motion, I offer as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] a motion to strike out on page 23 lines 6 to 10, inclusive.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Colorado for saving me the trouble of making the very exposé that he has made of this case.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] speaks of the "7,000 Indians." The trouble is that he does not know the size of the reservation the Indians already have there. He does not seem to know that 50 per cent of the State of Arizona, a reservation as large as the N v England States, is withheld forever from taxation by the people. We are left nothing but the absolute desert to go to for the selectio of our lands under the bill admitting us as a State. The Indian reservations contain enough land to support 20 times that many white people.

The Senator speaks of these 7,000 Papagos. That is more than there are there, in my judgment, and a lot more. Yet with this immense, mighty reservation you are to let them go out, as you say, and create other reservations in a State already ruined by them, and cut off the State from the possibility of ever getting an acre of land that is worth a nickel. You are to encourage them to leave the magnificent waste of country which has been assigned to them, and go out and select whatever other little spot in the desert a home might be built on and create another reservation there.

If that is true, I join with the Senator from Colorado. If the purpose is to make a reservation of another inch of land in Arizona for any purpose on earth over which the State has no control, I shall certainly vote to strike it from this or any other bill in which it may appear.

I did not know there was any effort to create more reservations. If I had, the Senator need not have anticipated me by his amendment, for I should have offered it myself. It is a revelation to me to find a proposal that they shall leave their reservation, with hundreds and hundreds of acres for every man, woman, and child on it, and go out and create other reservations wherever they can find the possibility of making a home for a white man.

Under the Federal jurisdiction 90 per cent of the valuable land of the State of Arizona is withheld to-day in such reservations. We have nothing to tax except the industry of our people, the cattle, the railroads, and the mines. You have reserved all the best lands, and yet you expect us to maintain a State government, and now you are proposing to take this step.

This is my first knowledge of it. I am surprised that I have not had earlier information that they were going to make some more Indian reservations down in Pima County, Santa Cruz County, Yuma County—every one of them with reservations in it already. You propose to make some more, to let them wander, to let them go out somewhere and say, "We will dig you a well, and we will make another reservation for you," and scatter those reservations, but still withhold the lands from settlement by anybody else. Everyone who knows that country knows that they never selected the worst lands for Indian reservations. They got the very best. The best land in that county to-day is in the Papago Indian Reservation.

I most heartily indorse the motion of the Senator from Colorado to strike out this item from the bill if the purpose is to create a reservation outside of the regular Papago Reservation in Pima County. I withdraw my amendment and accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee is first in order, it being to the text. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes, on page 23, line 10, to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$35,600," so as to read:

For improvement and sinking of wells, installation of pumping machinery, construction of tanks for domestic and stock water, and for the necessary structures for the development of a supply of water for domestic use for eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, $35,600.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to strike out the paragraph embracing lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Owen	Smith, Md.
Brady	James	Page	Smoot
Bryan	Jones	Penrose	Sterling
Camden	Lane	Perkins	Sutherland
Catron	Lea, Tenn.	Pittman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Poindexter	Thomas
Chilton	Lewis	Ransdell	Thornton
Clapp	Martin, Va.	Robinson	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Townsend
Culberson	Myers	Sheppard	Vardaman
Cummins	Newlands	Shively	Warren
Gore	Norris	Simmons	West
Hitchcock	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.	White
Hollis	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 23, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the King of Kings, the Lord of Lords, our God and our Father, dispenser of all good, impart unto us plenteously of the heavenly gifts, that with courage, fortitude, perseverance, and patience we may do the work of this day and be the better prepared to do the work of the morrow, and so fulfill the law and the prophets, and thus grow day by day into the larger life revealed to us in the life and character of Thy Son, Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 20, and of Sunday, June 21, were read and approved.

FORTIFICATIONS AT CAPE HENRY.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate joint resolution 160, a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes.

Resolved, etc., That for procuring title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $31,000, the same to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, to complete the payment of awards in condemnation proceedings prosecuted by the War Department for the acquisition of land at Cape Henry, Va.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that this resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTLETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

THE MEXICAN SITUATION.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimcus consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Mexican situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Mexican situation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution of the United Confederate Association, indorsing the President's Mexican policy and the President's reply thereto. It is short.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the articles referred to.

Mr. MANN. What was the request? I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The request is to print a resolution of the United Confederate Veterans' Association, indorsing the President's Mexican policy and the reply thereto.

Mr. MANN. Can we find out what it is from the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

VOLCANO IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to the active volcano in California.

Mr. MANN. Would it be in order for the gentleman to extend remarks in the RECORD concerning himself?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MINORITY VIEWS ON THE SEAMEN'S BILL.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed six days in which to file minority views on the bill S. 136, the seamen's bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for six days to file minority views on the seamen's bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering District of Columbia bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes a preferential motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky and Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois) there were 69 ayes and 43 noes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 115, answered "present" 6, not voting 184, as follows:

The name of Mr. ALLEN was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 17041), with Mr. POU in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 84, line 21, by striking out "$46,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$47,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For transportation of members of the home, $800.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information from the chairman of the committee. I find a number of items here with regard to payment of transportation of the members of the home. Here is one of $800, and there was one preceding of $2,500, and another of $2,000, in all over $20,000. Is that money refunded in any way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not. This is to pay the transportation of applicants for entrance into the various branches.

Mr. GOULDEN. The reason I asked the question is that in the State home with which I have been connected for the last 12 years or more we have a running account of that character, but the money is charged to the individual member and is returned into the funds of the State. I wondered whether that was the case in the national homes; and if not, is all expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know why they do not. These soldiers apply for admission to the various branches of the home. If they have not been in the home before, their transportation is paid.

Mr. GOULDEN. In the home with which I am connected, the New York State Soldiers and Sailors' Home, we pay their transportation if the applicant is without funds, but it is charged to them and taken out of any money that may accrue to the member. I know of no reason why the national homes should be conducted in any different manner from the State homes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the way the national soldiers' homes are conducted no expense of transportation is attached to a man who applies for admission.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is that simply a rule, or is it the law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a fact. As long as I can recall Congress has been appropriating for the transportation of applicants. I will refer to the regulations under which transportation is furnished. Paragraph 336 of article 8 of the rules and regulations provides that transportation shall be furnished to members of the home on first admission and to members of the home traveling on official business, to be paid out of the treasury of the branch to which the member is assigned from the funds appropriated for the support of the home under the head of transportation.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not interpose any objection to the matter at this time, but I should like to suggest to the Committee on Appropriations, in its hearings on this subject next year, to ascertain why these items, which amount to $20,400, are appropriated for each year, and if it is all expended for the express purpose named.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, they are appropriated for pay of transportation of the old soldiers——

Mr. GOULDEN. We understand that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. From their homes to the national home. That has been the policy of the Government. If the policy is to be changed, there must be legislation on the subject.

Mr. GOULDEN. That is not the policy of the New York State home, and I do not believe that it should be the policy of Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the State homes are different.

Mr. GOULDEN. I do not see any difference as far as the members of the various homes are concerned. Members in the State homes should stand on an equality with those in the national homes. If the members of the one are required to pay transportation, those in the national homes should do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Battle Mountain Sanitarium, Hot Springs, S. Dak.: For current expenses, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $24,000.

For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $38,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, before the next sundry civil appropriation bill is considered I hope the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] will either refrain from assailing the management of the national soldiers' homes of the country as a whole, or that he will confine his complaints to the Leavenworth Home, or else be prepared to offer more evidence to sustain his charges than he has produced since this bill has been under consideration.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] certifies to the satisfactory conditions that obtain in the Mountain Branch located in his district, and that he never has had any complaint from any of its members.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. GUERNSEY] makes the same statement with reference to the Eastern Branch located in his district. No one from the districts where the other homes are located has made any complaint, and therefore it may be assumed that all is well in these other homes.

Mr. CARY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. CARY. I represent a district in which the Milwaukee Soldiers' Home is located, and I have had a great many complaints from the old soldiers there as to the management and treatment. About a year ago there were over 100 soldiers sick from ptomaine poisoning on account of the meat they had.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been under consideration for some days and this question has been discussed at considerable length, and this is the first suggestion that there has been any complaint at the Milwaukee Home.

I am not going to express any opinion with reference to the motives that may have inspired the gentleman from Kansas in attacking the board of managers, and for having criticized the administration of the homes generally, including the food, sanitation, and the conduct of the officials. It may be that he is justified in his position, and that he is actuated only by a patriotic spirit in wanting to better and improve conditions so as to add to the comfort of our soldiers who have rendered service to the country in time of need and are now old and broken down and unable to care for themselves.

With reference to the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, located at Hot Springs, S. Dak., now that we have reached the item in the bill making the appropriation for its support, I want to say just a word.

Summarizing what has been said with reference to the charges made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] in a speech made in the House on April 29 last, it appears that his charges were based largely upon the complaint of three men who had been members of this home for a short period and had been dropped from the rolls. They were not "old soldiers" in the sense that they were veterans of the Civil War, but men who had a brief service during the War with Spain in 1898. One person describes them as follows:

These men have, no doubt, made trouble for six months or more. They are bright men, not drinking men or men of bad habits in any way; they have studied the Blue Book, the Red Book, and the large printed report of the congressional committee investigating the Sawtelle National Home, in California, a short time ago, hence their dissatisfaction and complaint.

It is said of the one most responsible for the charges:

He is a frail chap, in the secondary stages of pulmonary tuberculosis, inclined to be fanciful as to his surroundings, reads socialistic literature—

And so forth.

This man is only 47 years of age and is the one referred to by me on Saturday. It appears from his military record that he enlisted at Buffalo, N. Y., in May, 1898, and was discharged there in November of the same year, having been treated in a hospital during his service for ingrowing toenail of the right foot.

Refuting the charges, we have the statement of the governor and treasurer of the home, the president of the board of managers, the inspector general and chief surgeon, and two members of a committee of the Spanish War Veterans' Association, who investigated the charges. In addition is the statement of Gen. S. J. Conklin, a soldier of prominence, who was a member of Battle Mountain Sanitarium on April 29, when the gentleman from Illinois assailed the management of that institution. Gen. Conklin said of the charges read by the gentleman from Illinois as follows:

The letter which he read is the rottenest thing that I have ever met with. There is not one iota of truth in the whole matter, as will appear if an investigation is ever had.

Finally, there is the letter of Capt. C. V. Gardner, of Piedmont, S. Dak., who served for three years during the Civil War, rising from the ranks to captain of his company. He happens to be the brother of the Hon. Washington Gardner, of Michigan, who served in this House for 12 years with honor and distinction, now commander in chief of the national Grand Army of the Republic. It appears that Capt. Gardner was one of a standing committee of 10 appointed at the last annual encampment of the National Grand Army of the Republic Association to investigate alleged ill treatment of inmates and other wrongdoings by the officials of the homes. He was assigned to the Battle Mountain Sanitarium. He made application for admission to the home ostensibly for treatment, as he says, that he might have an opportunity from personal experience and observation to study conditions as they actually exist. He states that he was assigned to a ward, lived as the other inmates did, ate the same food at the same tables, and obeyed the same rules and regulations of the institution as the other members did; that he remained in the home for a period of nearly a month. He not only refutes the charges made by the three expelled members, but denounces them, and pronounces the quality and quantity of food served, including the cooking and the sanitary conditions, as excellent. He testifies to the high character of the officials and attendants and says that uniform, courteous, and attentive treatment is extended to everyone. He concludes his letter, which is addressed to the gentleman from Illinois, by proposing that he personally inspect the home, and states that if he does not find the conditions in all respects as he has described them in his letter he will pay his expenses from Washington to Hot Springs and return. I hope, if the gentleman from Illinois does not accept this proposition, that he will visit the home and make an investigation at his own expense, and that when he has done so, if he finds that he was not justified in the charges that he made in the House on April 29 against this institution and its officials he will retract the same and acknowledge that he was mistaken. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of cleaning and repairing works of art in the Capitol, including repairs to frames, under the direction of the Joint Committeee on the Library, $1,500.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment after line 17, page 91:

"For the completion of the historical frieze in the Rotunda of the Capitol by having painted therein suitable designs by an American artist of national reputation, one design representing Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, symbolizing the preservation of the Union and a reunited country; another representing a ship passing through the Panama Canal; and another representing the navigation of the air, $10,000: Provided, That the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the members of the Committees on the Library of the Senate and the House of Representatives shall constitute a commission to have charge of the completion of said frieze, to determine the compensation competing artists should receive, and to make contracts for the painting of the designs selected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order for five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to provide for the early completion of the historical frieze in the Rotunda of the Capitol.

We point with pride to our magnificent Congressional Library and the splendid Senate and House Office Buildings, but we are ashamed of our unfinished Capitol. For more than 60 years it has remained in an uncompleted condition. I have no doubt that every new Member of Congress who has passed through the Rotunda has been surprised to observe the vacant space in the historical frieze, and visitors always inquire of the guide why it has not been completed. Believing that there is no good reason for not portraying in this unfinished section a few of the important events which have transpired in the last half century, early in the present session I introduced a bill providing for the appointment of a commission consisting of the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, and the Committees on the Library in the two branches of Congress to select appropriate designs and to contract for their execution. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Library of the House, but up to date no action has been taken in the matter. A few weeks ago Senator O'GORMAN, of New York, at my request introduced a copy of the resolution in the Senate with the hope that action might be taken there, but so far nothing has been done. It appears to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is very important that this work be completed without delay. Early next spring we are expecting thousands of visitors from foreign countries to the National Capital en route to attend the Panama Exposition in San Francisco, and if this amendment is adopted the work could be completed in the meantime and we would not be compelled to apologize for the unfinished condition of this great building.

In this historical frieze, the first of scenes portraying the history of the New World represents the landing of Columbus; the next the entry of Cortez into the halls of the Montezumas 30 years later; the third scene represents the burial of De Soto in the Mississippi River in 1541; then in order follows Pocahontas saving the life of Capt. John Smith in 1606; the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock in 1620; Penn's treaty with the Indians in 1682; the Battle of Lexington in 1775; the Declaration of Independence in 1776; the surrender of Lord Cornwallis in 1781; the death of Tecumseh, 1813; Gen. Scott's entry into the City of Mexico in 1847; and the last event portrayed is the discovery of gold in California in 1848, which was completed by the artist 25 years ago. Since that time work upon this great historical frieze has been suspended.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the events mentioned in the amendment, to be portrayed in this vacant space, are the most important in the Nation's history.

What more important event has transpired in the history of our country than the reuniting of the North and the South after a struggle of four years in civil conflict? It was a fitting recognition of this event after 50 years of peace, which was recently celebrated by the dedication of a monument to the Confederate dead in Arlington.

We all recognize that the building of the Panama Canal is the greatest engineering feat in the world's history. It was constructed by American skill and American money, and the celebration of its completion is a most important event.

The successful construction of a heavier-than-air machine for the navigation of the air was accomplished by Americans, and this important event should also be represented in this great historical frieze.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks an article which appeared in the New York Sun on March 22, 1914, descriptive of this historical frieze and containing brief sketches of the artists who painted them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Sun, Sunday, March 22, 1914.]

STEPS TAKEN TO COMPLETE THE WORK IN ROTUNDA OF CAPITOL IN WASHINGTON, THE LAST OF THE WONDERFUL FRESCOES ON WHICH CONSTANTIO BRUMIDI WORKED FOR MANY YEARS.

A joint resolution has been introduced in the House of Representatives providing for the completion of the fresco frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol at Washington.

ADDISON T. SMITH, author of the resolution, is serving his first term in Congress. Ordinarily new Members are too intent upon impressing and serving the home folks for the first few years to bother much about unfinished buildings. Mr. SMITH'S interest can be readily understood when it is explained that for several years he served as a committee clerk in the Senate. Daily he passed back and forth beneath the unfinished, weather-stained frieze, and a promise he made himself—and has kept—was that if ever seated in either House one of his first moves would be toward the completion of the frieze.

The joint resolution provides that a commission, composed of the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, and members of the Committees on the Library of the Senate and House shall be empowered to complete the frieze "by having painted thereon a suitable design by an American artist of national reputation, representing Grant and Lee shaking hands at Appomattox, symbolizing the preservation of the Union and a reunited country, and another suitable design representing the Panama Canal in operation." An appropriation of $10,000 is made for the work.

Probably there has never been a tourist, a student, or other visitor viewing the vast heights and depths, the magnificent distances of one of the most wonderful rooms in the world—the rotunda of the Capitol—who has not marveled at the dilapidated and uncompleted belt or frieze. The average guide is apt to settle the question by explaining that Constantio Brumidi, who designed all and painted one-third of the frieze, fell from his slender, movable scafford and was instantly killed. This is untrue.

The work has remained unfinished for two reasons: First, no artist, American or foreign born, sufficiently skilled and sympathetic, has been found to complete the frieze; second, the lack of appropriate subject with which to terminate the procession of historical events. To get at the root of the matter it is necessary to go back to the advent of Brumidi and his wonderful art in the Capitol.

Constantio Brumidi is commonly and affectionately spoken of as the Michael Angelo of the Capitol. Little or nothing has been printed of his life and work, both of which are like a romance. Gazetters, encyclopedias fail even to mention his name. Yet this man caused the white staring walls of the Capitol to blossom forth in beauty and in colors that bid fair to retain their brilliancy, and yet mellow with age, as with the incomparable art of the masters of old.

First, last, and always Brumidi excelled in fresco, a branch of painting that is practically dead; yet he was versatile along all lines of art. In the Capitol alone he is entitled to large consideration as a designer, a decorator, a portrait painter, and frescoist. He studied carefully Romanesque, Venetian, Moorish, and Egyptian styles, all of which he used in the decoration of corridors and rooms at the Capitol. He lived in Pompeii for nearly two years, immersed in the knowledge to be found there, and one of the committee rooms at the Capitol he decorated in this style.

Real fresco is best understood by the Italian—it is the Italian word for "fresh" and the painting is done in mineral colors, mixed with water and applied to the surface of stucco or plaster, while the surface is sufficiently wet, or fresh, to imbibe and incorporate the colors. In the process of frescoing only as much surface of plaster is prepared at one time as can be finished while it is wet. The picture must progress piecemeal, and there is absolutely no possibility of retouching after once dry.

The French school in mural, decorative work, paints either in oils upon the walls or upon canvas, which is afterward coated with a gluey substance and pressed firmly upon the wall surface until it adheres. This method was employed in the much-talked-of wall decoration at the Library of Congress. There is no comparison between the so-called fresco of that building and the real fresco by Brumidi in the Capitol.

Brumidi was born in Rome on June 20, 1805, of an Italian mother and a Greek father. When very young he evinced a strong taste and propensity for drawing. A teacher was procured and he was admitted as a student at the Academia di San Luca when but 13. It was while at this school that he began the study of fresco, and took up plastic art under Thorwaldsen and sculpture under Canova. At 30 Brumidi had attained sufficient recognition to attarct the notice of Pope Gregory XVI, who commissioned him with three other well-known artists of that period—Podesti, Coghaetti, and Capaliti—to restore the Raphael frescoes in the Vatican.

When Piux IX ascended the papal throne Brumidi painted the portrait of that pointiff and it now hangs in the Vatican gallery. The new Pope, well pleased with the work, ordered a replica of himself and presented the young artist with a gold medal.

About this time Brumidi became a captain in the national guards, but continued his work upon the Vatican walls. In 1848 Rossi was assassinated. Pius IX fled to Gaeta, and the soldier Brumidi was ordered to turn the guns of his company upon the people. This he flatly refused to do; his house was surrounded at midnight by a cordon of soldiers, the artist captain dragged from his bed and thrown into prison. After 13 months of prison life Brumidi was released, but with the understanding that he would leave Italy at once and forever.

In 1849 Brumidi bade a last farewell to home and family and sailed for America. His leaving was rendered especially sad by reason of the fact that while confined in prison he became estranged from his wife.

Arriving in New York he had little difficulty in gaining recognition, as is evidenced by the altar piece "The Crucifixion" in St. Stephen's Church here. At the time it was painted it was the largest picture in oils in the United States. Brumidi was afflicted with wanderlust and has left examples of his work throughout the United States and Mexico, principally religious subjects in cathedral and church. On his way to Mexico he visited the Capitol in Washington and there received the inspiration for the great work of his life.

Finishing his work in Mexico Signor Brumidi returned to Washington in 1859 and applied to Gen. Meade, who was at that time in charge of the Capitol, for permission to show what could be accomplished by way of mural decoration in the building. Gen. Meade was not inclined to take any chances and the desired permission was delayed. But persistent application finally won the artist his desire and the Italian entered the Capitol—for life.

His first work was the embellishment of the Agricultural Committee room, the central design being "Cincinnatus at the Plough." George Hazleton in his book on the "National Capitol" declares this to be the finest example of mural painting in America. The Senate waiting room next claimed Brumidi's attention, and a few years ago, while visiting in this country, Prince Henry of Prussia said: "This room is the most beautifully decorated one in the world. It is marvelously lovely."

And so Brumidi's brush swept on and on over the walls of the great building, transforming it into a thing of beauty. In the lower corridors he demonstrated an art new to America, skilfully ornamenting the long, narrow halls in arabesque, after the manner of the Vatican loggia, with flowers, fruits, birds, fish, and animals of all kinds and in true colors. A storm of protest was aroused over the introduction of animal life into the wall decoration, but Brumidi weathered it, and strong in his knowledge of the artists of the Renaissance, he continued to lay all the kingdoms of nature under contribution. The corridars to-day are as fresh and lovely as when first painted and a joy to all who see them.

The dream of the Italian artist's life—he became a naturalized American in later years—was to paint the Dome of the rotunda, and he gave every spare minute to the preparation of cartoons for its adornment. In 1862 the designs, to his immense gratification, were accepted, and at the age of 57 the artist mounted a scaffold 180 feet high and began upon the canopy fresco, which covers nearly 5,000 square feet. A small, specially designed lounge on rollers enabled him to lie flat the greater part of the time and to wheel himself from one part of the overhanging bowl to another as the work progressed.

The subject matter is exquisitely drawn and proportioned and painted with admirable regard to historical facts allegorically portrayed. The colors are flaming, breathing, leaping with life; altogether it is a mighty, a finished and fitting picture for the imposing proportions of the magnificent rotunda. The coloring is little less than astonishing because of the fact that in fresco but nine colors are available, lime in the plaster eating up all the rest.

Completing this undertaking, Brumidi at once commenced the cartoons for the frieze. They were accepted by Congress in 1869, but it was 1878 before that body saw fit to appropriate money for the actual work. The style of execution on the frieze is imitative of sculpture, being alto-relievo, and represents a series of scenes in the history of the two Americas, beginning with the entry of Cortez into the halls of the Montezumas, 1521, and ending with Gen. Scott's entry into Mexico in 1848.

The frieze is 100 feet from the floor and 250 feet in circumference. It is remarkable that at 73, an age when the generality of men have retired from active business life, the Italian-American wonderworker allowed himself to be drawn up to a scaffold, a sliding affair planned and rigged by himself, which clung like a huge tarantula to the side of the wall, at a height of 100 feet, and there he began the historic frieze.

At first he reached his workshop, as he called it, by means of a spiral stairway leading to the Dome. The stairway passes a balustrade a number of feet above the frieze. This balustrade the aged artist would scale and then descend a ladder to the delicate, apparently insufficient, scaffold beneath. Toward the last, grown silver haired and weak in the service of his adopted country, Brumidi devised a wooden cage, with a chair inside, and seating himself would each morning be hoisted by a system of pulleys to his beloved "shop." When evening shadows made it impossible for him to work longer he would give the signal and be gently let down from the exalted workbench.

In December, 1879, he had a narrow escape from instant death; a misstep on the scaffold caused him to lose his balance, and until rescued by a watchman in the Dome he hung as best he could, clutching a ladder and in a perilous position. Brumidi never recovered from the shock and died in February, 1880.

During the two months he lived, realizing that his own hands would not lend the historic procession around the belt, he worked feverishly at enlarging the frieze cartoons, finishing them only a few days before his death. These cartoons were promptly appropriated by Congress and later used, and neither Brumidi nor his family ever received one cent for them.

In this regard it is interesting to note that while decorating the committee rooms and corridors the artist received $8 a day until Jefferson Davis, who was a great admirer of Brumidi, saw that the amount was increased to $10. The canopy in the dome was the only piece for which he received a lump sum, and for the three years' labor on that $39,000 was paid him. Out of this sum he was forced to pay the assistants who mixed the colors, applied the cartoons, and assisted in small ways under the master's personal direction.

Brumidi's work began with the Cortez subject and ended with Penn's peace treaty. Filippo Costaggini was engaged not long after Brumidi's death to complete the frieze, but the result proved disastrous. Some declare that Brumidi purposely drew his cartoon two scenes short of finishing the frieze, waiting, as it were, for later subjects. Others contend that he calculated to the fraction of an inch the space necessary to be covered.

Be that as it may, Costaggini from the very inception of his own work crowded the cartoons in an abominable and heart-breaking manner; so much so that in some instances figures of importance are unrecognizable from the mass of surrounding matter. Costaggini was openly accused of crowding the cartoons with the idea of adding two scenes of his own—Leland Stanford driving the golden spike at the junction of the Union and Central Pacific Railways, 1869, and President Cleveland touching the button that opened the world's fair at Chicago.

Howls and avalanches of criticism evidently rattled the newer artist, and forthwith he madly started to spread and separate the remaining figures in a manner that might have been almost ridiculous if the result had not been such an artistic tragedy. But the elasticity came too late, and after using all the Brumidi cartoons a space of about 36 feet was left uncovered. It is this space that Representative SMITH'S resolution proposes now to fill.

In 1896 Senator Hansbrough offered a bill to finish the frieze with the Costaginni sketches, but it was not passed. A fine row developed, Senator Hawley declaring, says George Hazelton, "that a series of historical paintings without George Washington or Abraham Lincoln, but presenting Grover Cleveland, is not satisfactory." Mr. Hawley also said: "I wonder how a man giving a history of the United States can entirely skip the great war of the Union. I would put on the frieze the apple tree at Appomattox and Grant and Lee shaking hands, with surrounding touches of troops and artillery."

This settled the work of Filippo Costaggini, and since 1889 the frieze has been left to "innocuous desuetude" and the elements, for the frieze is badly stained from a leaky roof, now happily repaired so that no more damage can be done in that regard. The difference in the work of the two Italian artists is too apparent and too unhappy a subject to need delineation. In regard to the absence of George Washington in the frieze the artist probably thought that as the entire spirit of the dome canopy represented the beatification of George Washington some other great man or men should be honored in the frieze.

In all probability Mr. SMITH'S bill will go through. One amendment at least is certain, because it will be fostered by the Idaho Representative who offered the original resolution. The added clause will call for the discovery of the north pole and aviation to be depicted. Whether the face of the pole discoverer is to be composite or not Mr. SMITH has not decided. The artist who undertakes to draw designs and cartoons showing the surrender at Appomattox, the Panama Canal, the north pole, and aviation, and present all this in 36 feet of space will have his hands full. But, perhaps, it can be successfully done.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. One minute. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word merely for the purpose of asking a question. I think this is a highly meritorious proposition, although subject to the point of order. In proposing designs for this vacant space in the Rotunda I notice that the gentleman does not even mention Abraham Lincoln. Does not the gentleman think a frieze representing Abraham Lincoln striking the shackles from 4,000,000 slaves would be a magnificent suggestion?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Most assuredly; that would be a very proper subject to be portrayed, if the space would permit. Of course, the commission will have entire charge, and they can determine what to put in there; and if they saw proper to put in a design portraying the great emancipator, they could do so under this provision in connection with the design representing Grant and Lee shaking hands.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In the gentleman's proposition he does not tie down the commission to any specific design?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Not to any special design, except as stated in the proposed amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRYAN. The amendment was to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. FITZGERALD], while we are on the question of statuary, why he does not bring out the very meritorious bill which he has introduced for the erection of a statue in honor of John Ericsson, the inventor and constructor of the Monitor, one of those great men who is entitled to recognition by the Government for actual and stupendous service performed. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations having introduced that bill, I would have thought it would have been brought out and passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course the gentleman understands that I have no control over the Committee on the Library, not even being a member.

Mr. BRYAN. But this bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. BRYAN. I thought it was.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I tried to do that, but they would not let me.

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the chairman of the committee that I should like very much to see that bill come out of committee and be passed. Some of the very best and most reliable citizenship of my State has, through resolutions and by letter, called this to my attention, and I am anxious to get an opportunity to vote for that worthy act of appreciation of service rendered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol Grounds: For the care and improvement of the grounds surrounding the Capitol, Senate and House Office Buildings, pay of one clerk, mechanics, gardeners, fertilizers, repairs to pavements, walks, and roadways, $30,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, all of us have observed for several years past the dilapidated condition of the street in front of the Library of Congress, adjoining the Capitol Grounds. Ever since the terminal railway company built its tunnel under the Capitol Grounds that roadway has been in a very dilapidated condition, which is a disgrace to the Government. Yesterday I had occasion to ride over the street car tracks from the Capitol to the Union Station, and I noticed that the tracks were very unsettled. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the reason for that poor condition of the street east of the Capitol Grounds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that the railroad tunnel extends under the street, and the settlement has not yet been finished as the result of the falling in of the tunnel and the operation of the trains. Until the settlement is completed it is deemed unwise to attempt to reset the walls and permanently fix it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to say to the gentleman that other parts of the street over this tunnel seem to be in a very good condition. It seems that just in that part tributary to the Capitol Grounds is where this condition has existed for years and years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is since the original construction that the pavement has settled. The pavement has settled and has caved very badly. I made inquiries about it, and I ascertained that for some time there would be sufficient continuing settlement to make it unwise to permanently reset the boundary walls and curbing on the Capitol Grounds and make the necessary repairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon whom rests the obligation to put that street in proper condition? Is it the Government, in control of the Capitol Grounds, or the Washington Terminal Co.? I recall that we granted some years ago the right of way to the Washington Terminal Co. to tunnel under these grounds. This street is now in a bad condition and should be repaired. It is an eyesore to thousands and thousands of people who have occasion to visit the Congressional Library.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would not be worth while to do the work over and over.

Mr. MURDOCK. Has that sinking, which has been gradual, and which has been going on for years and years, affected the House Office Building in any way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. The House Office Building was specially strengthened. Foundations were put in at that point with a view to resisting the effect of any vibration from the operation of the trains.

Mr. MURDOCK. Well, while this subject is up, I would like to ask the gentleman this question: How often is the plaza right here in front of the Capitol paved and who has that in charge?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know how often it is done, but we are making provision here to resurface the plaza east of the Capitol. It looks as if it had been done about 30 years ago.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is what I thought.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been urged from time to time. It is under the jurisdiction of the Superintendent of the Capitol, and he has urged it; and in this bill we carry $50,000, which will do the bulk of the resurfacing and make some changes in the drainage system.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would be glad to hear the opinion of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia on that point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York will pardon me, it is my view and information that the railroads were to repair that street after they had built the tunnel under it. They have repaired it, as I understand, in places, except on the ground owned by the Federal Government. It is also suggested that the railroad is going to ask the Government to give it the Congressional Library over here as a roundhouse—the Government has given it everything else—and it may be very well not to improve this street over there until that has been done, because they will need to tear up the street again when that is done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the duty rests upon the Washington Terminal Co. to repair that street and put it in condition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. From my information I understand they were required to restore it to its natural and normal condition.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York state whether there is anything in this bill for the repaving of the portion of the Capitol Grounds east of the Capitol, on the east front?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; $50,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It needs it very badly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume the improvement is not limited to the Plaza to the east. It is all about the Capitol Grounds?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not do any more than cover the entrances and the Plaza.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC LANDS SERVICE.

Registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, $540,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 93, by striking out lines 4, 5, 6, and 7 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Registers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum, $270,000: Provided, That the office of receiver of public moneys for land districts from and after the 30th day of June, 1914, is abolished, and all the powers, duties, obligations, and penalties at that time lawfully imposed upon such receivers and upon registers of land offices shall, from and after that date, be exercised by and imposed upon such registers; and such registers shall, in addition to the duties thus imposed, have charge of and attend to the sale of public and Indian lands within their respective districts, as provided by law and official regulation, and shall be accountable under their official bonds for the proceeds of such sales, and for all fees, commissions, and other moneys received by them under any provision of law or official regulation. Instead of the office of receiver of public moneys hereby and herein abolished, the Secretary of the Interior may appoint or designate a chief clerk for any land office, who shall receive such salary, not exceeding $2,000 per annum, payable from the appropriation for contingent expenses of land offices, as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may authorize, and such chief clerk shall perform such duties as may be directed by the register of the land office for which he is appointed, or by official regulations, including the receipt of moneys, and he shall during the absence of such register or in case of a vacancy in the office of such register exercise all the powers, perform all the duties, and be subject to all the obligations and penalties imposed upon such register by law or official regulations; but such clerk shall, before entering upon the duties of his office, execute to the United States a bond in such penal sum as the said Secretary may prescribe, with approved security, for the faithful performance of his official duties; and such clerk shall be accountable under his official bond for such proceeds arising from the sale of public or Indian lands within his district, and for such fees, commissions, and other moneys as may come into his hands under any law or official regulation or direction: Provided, That all the fees and commissions now allowed by law to both such registers and such receivers shall, after the 30th day of June, 1914, be paid to and accounted for by such registers in the manner prescribed by law and departmental regulations, and in like amounts in which they are now required to be paid to and accounted for by such receivers, but the compensation of such registers shall in no case exceed $3,000 per annum, as now provided by law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point or order against that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman make his point of order if he thinks it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is new legislation. It authorizes a number of things that are not now authorized by law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am perfectly willing, Mr. Chairman, to accept the ruling of the Chair without discussing it. I do not care to discuss the point of order. I am perfectly willing to submit the matter without discussion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is legislation. An attempt is made, I suppose, to bring it within the terms of the Holman rule, but so much other legislation, not now authorized, is added to the provision that it constitutes general legislation, and appears to me to be subject to a point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the gentleman from New York said, the statute now provides that the receiver shall receive $500 a year, under the provisions of the legislative act, in the Revised Statutes. This bill adds a new officer to take the place of the receiver, and fixes his salary at $2,000; so that as a matter of fact it is a large increase, on the face of it, over the present law. The receiver gets $500 and commissions that can run up to $3,000 only and no more. Some of these receivers have been getting not over $800, some of them $1,000, some $1,500. It is an ascending and descending scale, according to the work done in the office. But here is a positive change of the statute, fixing a new office, fixing the salary at $2,000 in the place of the $500 fixed by the Revised Statutes of the United States. Clearly that would not come under the Holman rule, because it is an increase all along the line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I thought possibly, if given sufficient time to think about it, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] might recall that two years ago, on the 14th day of June, 1912, when the sundry civil appropriation bill was pending, he reported to the House the identical proposition that is involved in my amendment, and therefore I was not surprised when I saw him take the RECORD of that date to the desk so that the Chairman would know how the then occupant of the chair ruled on a point of order made at that time. A point of order was made against the provision by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] and was discussed at considerable length, particularly by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who argued eloquently and ably against the point of order, which was overruled by the then occupant of the chair, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], the Chair basing his ruling by holding that the provision reduced expenses and was therefore in order under the Holman rule.

I wonder why it is that the gentleman from New York now makes a point of order when this provision is offered to the House, which he seems to have omitted in reporting the bill in this Congress. In 1912 the gentleman, then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, brought this provision in as a part of the bill, and it was adopted by the House. I think every Member on that side voted for it. I wonder why this change of front. This proposition had been recommended and urged upon Congress for many years, but was not adopted until two years ago, when it passed the House under the leadership of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. He stated at that time that it would mean a saving of a very considerable sum of money. It will be observed that the amount carried in the amendment is just one-half of the amount that is carried in the bill. The gentleman, referring to these offices of receivers in 1912, said in his remarks:

> The purpose of this provision is to improve the efficiency of the land office and at the same time effect a very considerable economy. This recommendation has been made now for three different years by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and it has been recommended and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Then he said further:

> This provision in the bill is to eliminate useless political officers and to substitute in their place men who are selected with regard to their qualifications for the work and to give them a tenure of office that will promote the efficiency of the administration of the public service.

Then he goes on further and says:

> In a majority of the land-office States it is a notorious fact that 75 per cent of the officials whose places are to be abolished by this provision do not personally perform the duties of their offices, but turn it over to a subordinate.

And he goes on still further:

> Here is an attempt, based upon the recommendation of responsible officials, to place in charge of the administration of these offices competent, efficient men, who will be compelled to discharge the duties of the office and not devolve them upon subordinates, which adds to the expense of the offices. This provision will relieve the office at Washington from considerable expense and trouble, as well as the ordinary field force, and greatly advance the interest of those seeking to secure their patents through these local offices.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is due to the House that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who first makes a point of order against this amendment, which was his own product in 1912 and which he defended at that time, should explain what has happened since June 14, 1912, to cause him and his associates on the Committee on Appropriations to come back with the old proposition of providing for receivers, as had been done previously for so many years. If it was a good thing then, why should not that side of the House accept it now and adopt the amendment that I have offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am indebted to the gentleman from South Dakota for reading to the House my remarks of two years ago when this bill was under consideration.

I made the point of order against the amendment because it was impossible to tell, as it was read from the desk, what the amendment contained; but I sent to the desk the provision reported by the Committee on Appropriations two years ago, so that the Chairman could determine by comparison whether the amendment was similar or identical and not be misled as to whether the proposed amendment was in order.

I have not changed my opinion as to the desirability of abolishing certain of these offices. In 1912 I urged it and had the House adopt it, but was compelled to surrender on it to the Senate in order to obtain the reorganization of the customs-service provision, the repeal of the Tarsney Act provision, and the elimination of nearly $5,000,000 out of a total of $6,000,000 added by the Senate. It was the best that could reasonably be expected. The experience had at that time did not lead me to expect or hope for any assistance from the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] or any others on his side if such a provision were reported. I do not know whether the gentleman from South Dakota has changed his views, but for the information of the House so they may be able to weigh impartially the arguments pro and con——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman, and perhaps save him the trouble of saying, that I have not changed my position; I was against it then and I am against it now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not changed mine; but since the gentleman read the argument made by me, perhaps it is only fair to the House to read the argument made by the gentleman from South Dakota at that time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I still stand for that argument.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In opposition to the amendment which he now offers, the gentleman from South Dakota then said:

> Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to strike this provision from the bill, first, because I do not believe that legislation as important as this legislation should be incorporated in an appropriation bill.
> It has been suggested that this provision is in order under the Holman rule because it would save expense. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it will not save one dollar in the expenses incurred in connection with the administration of the land offices of the country.
> I remember only a few years when it was proposed by the Interior Department to discontinue the Indian agents, and to consolidate the position of the school superintendent and the agent in one position, and we were assured if that was done we would save a large sum of money.
> Mr. Chairman, we did discontinue agents and substituted the school superintendents, but the experience has been it has not saved expense, but simply has put into the classified service positions that theretofore were filled by appointments made by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and we now have at the Indian agencies of the country agents who are charged with great responsibility, who are in some instances clerks sent out from the Indian Office, who never had seen an Indian until they left the District of Columbia and never had had any practical experience in dealing with Indians.

And further along the same line.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him, if I did not succeed at that time in convincing him, since he has had an opportunity to read and consider what I said, has he not concluded I was right about it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And is not that the reason why he now proposes to appropriate for continuing receivers of public moneys?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I repeat what I have already said. I have not changed my position. I have not changed my views. I still think as I thought two years ago, that in the interest of efficient and economical administration——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is the gentleman for the amendment that I have offered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not speak if the gentleman is going to try to speak at the same time. I think, if the reforms proposed were adopted, they would be to the advantage of the Government; but the gentleman continually confuses me with the Committee on Appropriations. I am not, I am only a single member of the committee, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who bitterly antagonized the provision in the bill two years ago, this year was a member of the subcommittee that prepared the bill, so that it was much more difficult to attempt to reform in any way anything connected with the public-land service than it would have been if he was absent.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from New York admits that I convinced him that his position of two years ago was a mistake?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will state for the third time, and I hope this will be sufficient, that I have not changed my opinion as to the wisdom of abolishing these offices. I believe we would get better administration and save money. Then I will add further that I think we are not going to abolish them at this time. I believe that the Republicans who strenuously antagonized abolishing these offices when they were still indulging in the vain hope that they might be successful in the national campaign can not in good faith, after they have lost the opportunity to fill the offices, attempt to abolish them. We were willing to take the chances regardless of whether we came into office or not. But the gentleman wished to wait to ascertain whether his own people would remain in office, and if they were he did not wish to reform, but if his party was unsuccessful then he wishes the reformation to proceed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman, as I understand, is of the same opinion that he was two years ago, but he anticipates that his associates on that side of the aisle are not of the same opinion, that they have changed while he has not. Is that what I am to understand?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I think Members like the gentleman from South Dakota interested in these land office districts, here and elsewhere, are not going to succeed in the abolition of these offices.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not indulge in any remarks as to whether it is a good thing to maintain the registers and receivers when the Republicans were in or now while they are out. I will say that the amendment abolishing receivers ought not to be adopted for the reason that under existing law the Secretary of the Interior has the right to abolish these land offices in toto when the business dwindles down and they are no longer needed. In States where the public land has all been taken up the Public Lands Committee has been diligent in abolishing the receiver, and where the office business has dwindled down. The register and receiver of the land office are important officials; they are needed; and the House ought not to side-step the question whether it is good politics to keep them in or not. It is an economic question. It is not a matter of political jest. The register and the receiver have conducted the land business ever since the country was organized, and they ought to have it until the business dwindles down so that they are not needed. It costs only $500 apiece to retain them; the balance of their fees are fees collected from the settlers and does not cost the Treasury anything. The amendment ought not to be agreed to. It is too important to go on this bill in this way.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, while the Chairman recognizes this amendment as being admissible under the Holman rule, I think if we went into a further investigation it would demonstrate that it costs more than it does under the present law.

I want to call attention to the fact that the law provides, in the Revised Statutes, section 2237, that the receivers shall receive a salary of $500. That has been the law for many years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Read the rest of the provision.

Mr. RAKER. Section 2240, which is some ways from 2237, says that the compensation of the registers and receivers, including salary, fees, and commission, shall in no case exceed the aggregate of $3,000, and that no register or receiver shall receive for the quarter more than the fractional part of such maximum.

Now, this amendment provides for a new officer and that he shall receive $2,000, and he permits the Secretary to put another in charge of the work. Aside from the question of economy, it is taking from the local people the very men that they want there, who have been appointed by the President, with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior—two good competent judges to handle the business on the ground. I will guarantee that there is not a Republican Member from a Western State that will vote for this amendment, because he knows that 95 per cent of his people are against this amendment.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. No; I can not yield just at this point. I am surprised to hear my friends, who know that 90 per cent of the people in the Western States are against any such provision, advocate this legislation. Why, these people would rise up in arms against such an amendment, in taking from them good, competent judges who now fill these important offices. The gentlemen know that; they know the facts, and they know the condition of the country, and there is no reason or sense in sending employees from the city of Washington out there to do this work. There is no reason for it, no use for it, and I am surprised that my friends who are sent here by the people of the West should at this time try to put on this bill such a piece of legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURKE of South Dakota) there were 4 ayes and 55 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses of land offices: For clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the district land offices, including the exchange of typewriters, $330,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of per diem, in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $4 per day, of clerks detailed to examine the books and management of district land offices and to assist in the operation of said offices, and in the opening of new land offices and reservations, while on such duty, and for actual necessary traveling expenses of said clerks, including necessary sleeping-car fares: Provided further, That no expenses chargeable to the Government shall be incurred by registers and receivers in the conduct of local land offices except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 10, page 93, the figures "$330,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$340,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 93, line 10, strike out the figures "$330,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$340,000."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the chairman of the committee will accept this increase of $10,000 in this item. He will recall that the appropriation for the current year is $320,000, and that we have made a deficiency appropriation of $20,000, making $340,000, the amount to which I now seek to increase the appropriation. The other day I made an investigation of the situation in the General Land Office with regard to this appropriation for clerk hire and incidental expenses in the land offices, and I discovered that up to this time they have made appointments and authorized expenditures which consume all of the $340,000 available for the present fiscal year, except $86.96. There will be just as many land offices the coming fiscal year as there have been during the present fiscal year and are now. The probability is there will be one additional land office at least. I do not believe it possible for the department to reduce its expenditures below the expenditures for the current year without very considerable injury to the public service. I have not asked for the amount of the estimate, which is $350,000, but for the sum available for the current fiscal year. I think I am fairly well acquainted with the conditions under which this fund is expended. I believe it is being expended economically. I feel confident that if we do not give the department this additional $10,000 it will be necessary for them to discharge clerks. They must do it under the law, because they can expend only one-twelfth of the appropriation each month. The chairman will recall that they asked for a deficiency appropriation of $30,000 for the current year. We gave them $20,000. They found it very difficult to keep up with the business of the land offices with the sum we gave them for the current year. Any less sum will certainly have the effect of reducing the force and doing an injury to this very important public service. The local land offices have to do with the local entrymen. It is to the local land office that the entryman goes in the first instance to present his claims for land and to make his proof. If we do not give those offices a sufficient number of clerks and sufficient sums for other expenses, we work a hardship on our people who are seeking homes in the West and who are seeking to develop the West and who are seeking lands under the public-land laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. In the fiscal year 1913 there was an increase of $90,000 over the customary appropriation for the contingent expenses of the land offices because of the passage of the three-year homestead and other laws. There was a very large unexpended balance for 1914, the current year. There was appropriated $320,000, the amount requested by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Some time ago the request was made for a deficiency appropriation of $20,000. It was ascertained that there would be an unexpended balance of $30,000 from the other year, and an attempt was made to get $30,000, although they had requested, if I recall, but $20,000. For the next fiscal year the committee has recommended an increase of $10,000 over the current year, and yet it appears that although they contemplate employing six less clerks than they employed in 1913, they expect to spend over $7,000 more for clerk hire than they did in 1913.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands, of course, that this proposed appropriation is $10,000 less than the amount available for the present fiscal year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It ought to be less than that. I am not certain that it is not somewhat too liberal, but so that there could be no falling off, the committee did recommend $10,000 more than was given for the current fiscal year, and yet despite that fact, despite the fact that those who presented this matter to the Committee on Appropriations disclosed they contemplated using six clerks less next year than they had in 1913, they wanted to expend $7,000 more for 239 clerks than they expended for 244 clerks in 1913. Of course, if the committee desires to give ample funds to enable indiscriminate increases of compensation of these clerks to be made, they ought to vote the additional $10,000. I believe that the service is given ample in the amount recommended by the committee, and I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is aware of the fact that had it not been for the discharge of a number of clerks, it would have been impossible to have gotten along with the amount available the present fiscal year, and yet we are proposing to give them $10,000 less than is available the present fiscal year for the same or a greater number of clerks than they now have, not taking into consideration the new land office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken. The trouble is this: In response to a request of the General Land Office the committee, perhaps erroneously, gave $90,000 additional for 1913, because of the extraordinary conditions that it was asserted existed. The Land Office could not possibly expend the money that was given it, and ever since then they have been exerting every effort to have this money made available from year to year so that they might possibly expend what they could not expend in the year in which it was appropriated. I think there is not any necessity or justification for any further increase in this appropriation. It is now more than it has been at any time, with the exception of one year, and it is ample for the legitimate operations of the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $735,000: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied in whole or in part by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890, and to surveying under such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States and Territories, and such indemnity lands as the several States and Territories may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes which may have been sold or included in some reservation or otherwise disposed of, except railroad land grants, and other surveys shall include lands adapted to agriculture and lands deemed advisable to survey on account of availability for irrigation or dry farming, lines of reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations. The surveys and resurveys provided for in this appropriation to be made by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, at such compensation, not exceeding $200 per month each, as he may prescribe except that the Secretary of the Interior may appoint not to exceed two supervisors of surveys, whose compensation shall not exceed $250 per month each, and except in the District of Alaska, where a compensation not exceeding $10 per day may be allowed such surveyors and such per diem allowance, in lieu of subsistence, not exceeding $3, as he may prescribe, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, said per diem and traveling expenses to be allowed to all surveyors employed hereunder and to such clerks who are competent surveyors who may be detailed to make surveys, resurveys, or examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making, by such competent surveyors, fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States: Provided further, That the sum of not exceeding 10 per cent of the amount hereby appropriated may be expended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of metal or other equally durable monuments to be used for public-land survey corners wherever practicable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph and the next paragraph be considered together. If the indefinite appropriation is to be repealed, there are two amendments that should be offered to the pending paragraph. One is, after the word "lands," on page 94, in line 4, to insert "including the proportion to be paid by the United States of the cost of surveying lands within the limits of railroad land grants," and to strike out, in lines 18 and 19, the words "except railroad land grants." These amendments should be adopted if the next succeeding paragraph remains in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the paragraph read and the succeeding paragraph may be considered together. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I have a letter here from the Commissioner of the General Land Office. First, I will inquire of the gentleman what he hopes to do? The Commissioner of the General Land Office says that we are denying the right to him to carry on surveys, that he has some 28 line parties in the field whom he will have to bring in if this legislation is enacted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We propose two amendments necessary to perfect the paragraph if the indefinite appropriation is repealed. If the indefinite appropriation be repealed, then the Commissioner of the General Land Office can use such part of the $735,000 for surveying within land grants as he considers necessary. It is more advantageous than the other. We wish to strike out "except railroad land grants," lines 18 and 19, and to insert after the word "lands," in line 4, "including the proportion to be paid by the United States for the cost of surveys of the lands within the limits of railroad land grants."

Mr. FERRIS. Would the gentleman really do that? Although he adds this amendment, he takes away $100,000 and gives $35,000 in its stead; that is what he really does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; we do not. He has never been able to use more than $35,000 a year.

Mr. MONDELL. It is $635,000; and $35,000——

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has never been able to use in any one year more than $35,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The indefinite appropriation for "Surveying within land grants (reimbursable)" made by the act approved March 2, 1895 (28 Stats., pp. 937 and 938), is terminated as an appropriation from and after June 30, 1914, in the same manner and under the same conditions as any annual appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and any amounts that shall be reimbursed to that appropriation by railroad companies or otherwise under the terms of the act shall thereafter be covered into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. FRENCH and Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho reserves a point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. I make the point of order that this paragraph is not in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us have a disposition of it; there is no use wasting time.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I make the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to hear the gentleman's point of order before he makes his argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Idaho to indicate to what portion he makes the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the point of order I make is directed against the language on page 98, the paragraph that has been read, and I make the point of order upon the ground that the paragraph is new legislation, that it does not come within the Holman rule, and that it is not a saving of money to the Government. There is and has been for something like 20 years an irreducible or reimbursable fund maintained of $100,000 for the purpose of carrying on certain survey work. The committee, as I understand it, advises that it proposes to make appropriations for the surveys of these lands for which this reimbursable fund has been used. The chairman of the committee has just said there is included in the preceding paragraph an item in excess of that which has been used for any one year for the purpose of survey of grant lands. If we appropriate elsewhere for this survey, it is not a saving of money, but is a transfer of money from one appropriation for the purposes of another item in the bill. Instead of using the money that is always provided for, and to repeal the law making that authorization, this clause or paragraph has been inserted in the bill.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. FALCONER. In his discussion of the point of order the gentleman indicates that he is against an increase of expenditures for certain survey purposes; that is, railroad land grants. Do I understand the gentleman to be opposed to spending more in the future than we have in the past on the surveying of railroad land grants?

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman did not understand me. I think we ought to expend a good many times as much as we have been expending in the past because of the fact that the railroads or their grantees that own these lands to-day are escaping taxation. The lands are increasing in value from year to year, and by following the tardy policy that the Government has been following during the past in the survey of grant lands we are permitting the railroads that own those lands, or their grantees, to receive an increase in value without paying to the States and counties their reasonable proportion of taxation for the support of local institutions.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I do not find that the gentleman's argument tends to that end. It seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York or the committee, on page 96, line 18, together with the amendment offered on page 98, would leave this whole amount of money to be expended at the disposition of the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of surveying greater tracts of railroad lands than ever before. The State of Washington, more than Idaho or any other State in the Union, suffers from this nontaxable feature. That is the thing we are trying to get at.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, of this item of $735,000 carried on page 96, the Commissioner General of the Land Office has advised me that $700,000 is needed to make surveys applied for by settlers and States under the law and can not be used at all for survey of grant lands. In other words, there will be left only $35,000 available of the general appropriation for the survey of the lands embraced within land grants. On page 98 we propose to repeal the authorization and the expenditure, not of $35,000 but of an amount almost three times as great, or of $100,000. Now, I say, during the coming year we will expend three times as much by letting the law remain as it has been instead of repealing the law and permitting the Government to proceed with the surveys under the proposed paragraph.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will be glad to.

Mr. HAWLEY. Would the gentleman consider if the language on page 98 is stricken out and the $100,000 available now for use for surveys of lands that railroads have, and for which they are compelled under the law to provide the survey in part, which money is reimbursable to the Government by the railroad company, that if this $100,000 remains it might be used over and over again in the course of a year and really amount to a much larger appropriation and a very much greater area of railroad land to be surveyed and be subject to taxation than if this item goes out, and all these surveys must be made under the provisions of the item on page 96?

Mr. FRENCH. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FRENCH. Not at this point. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY]. We have at this time an irreducible fund of nearly $100,000, which at this time is available for grant land survey work. Under the authorization of an act of Congress passed in 1910, the burden was placed upon the railroad companies of depositing money for the purpose of surveying their part of the land, and there is available at this time deposited by the railroads approximately $100,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Not at this moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is discussing the merits of the matter. I have no objection whatever to his discussing the merits of the proposition before the House, but I simply want to have it understood that if he is to discuss the merits of the matter on the withheld point of order, others also may discuss the merits of the matter in the same way. If that is understood, then I shall rather insist on the gentleman discussing the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. In further answer to the question of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], I will say that this $100,000 authorized by law, but which the committee seeks to repeal, represents an amount of money that the Government itself has for carrying on its part of the survey within the primary grants of land to the railroads. The House understands that one-half of the land within the primary grants belongs to the Government and one-half belongs to the railroads, and under the act of Congress passed in 1910, authority was given to the department to call upon the railroads for the amount of money that might be necessary and could be used for the survey of the railroad lands.

Now, the department has done that. There is at this time something like $100,000 upon deposit with the Government that has been advanced by the railroads for the survey of their lands within the primary grants. This amount will be added to the $100,000 authorized by the Government. In other words, we have at this time, as the gentleman from Oregon has just suggested, an amount several times as great as that which would be available if this paragraph should be stricken out and the language of the bill were amended as suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Not only that, but inasmuch as this is a reimbursable fund——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. Can the gentleman discuss the merits of the point of order? If the Chair will allow that, when will it end?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only call to order a gentleman when it is shown that he is not speaking in order.

Mr. DONOVAN. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. I assume that the gentleman can not discuss the merits, but confine himself to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman that he confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Now, if the Committee on Appropriations proposes to give an amount of money for the survey of this work——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not do that——

Mr. FRENCH (continuing). Equal to the sum which under this provision it is proposed to strike out, then this does not reduce the expenditures of the Government a single penny. But, on the other hand, as I said in the beginning, it simply provides for the expenditure of money in another way instead of in the way already provided by law.

If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations means to do that, then my point of order must be sustained. If the committee does not propose to do that, then this paragraph should not be stricken out, for it is imperative that our grant lands be surveyed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman wandered somewhat from the point of order, and if I were to do that—which I do not intend to do for any length of time—it would simply be to say that it is rather discouraging, when one starts out in good faith to endeavor to cure a situation that has been well-nigh unbearable for years, to have the gentlemen who are most interested in having that situation cured arise and attempt to block the reforms which we are trying to carry out.

The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], if he had his way about it, would continue the same miserable, halting, ineffectual policy for the survey of railroad land-grant lands that we have had for the last 10 years. We have, it is true, an indefinite appropriation that at one time amounted to $100,000, but as a matter of fact we have been spending out of it at the rate of only about $30,000 to $35,000 a year.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment; and, continuing at that rate, it would take us about 24 years to survey the lands lying within the railroad land-grant limits. It was to cure that condition that we sought to strike at the root of the tree, dispensing with that old law which has not been workable and making this entire appropriation of $725,000 available for that purpose.

Mr. FALCONER. I wanted to ask the gentleman, if the department has not surveyed more lands in the last 10 years when they have had $100,000 to do it and used only $30,000, where does the fault lie?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know. This indefinite appropriation was provided in 1895.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. I do not want the gentleman to yield. I submit to the Chair that the gentleman is not talking to the point of order. Will the Chair allow this to run loose all afternoon?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not rule until it develops clearly that the gentleman is not talking to the point of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. According to the ruling of the Chair on the point of order, they have got the floor. Has the Chair been informed of the point of order in this discussion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor to prove that this appropriation comes under the Holman rule, and I shall do so by calling attention to the fact that after having difficulty for years in securing the survey of these lands it was finally said we were unable to survey them more rapidly because the railroad companies were not compelled to put up their share of the cost. To cure that situation the Committee on the Public Lands reported the bill of 1910, a compulsory bill, compelling the railroad companies to put up their share of the cost of surveys. Instead of getting any better conditions under that compulsory law, we continued along at about the same old rate, spending about $35,000 a year and getting nowhere with a conclusion of these surveys. This year, in submitting the estimates, the department itself asked Congress to repeal this old law. In other words, what these gentlemen are opposing is the very thing that the department in their interest has asked to have done.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Do I understand your position to be the position of the department, or has the department, after making that recommendation, changed its opinion so that it now recommends that the law be not repealed?

Mr. MONDELL. I am going to be entirely frank with the gentleman from Idaho and with the House in regard to that matter. My opinion is that the department is not so much worried about surveys as it is about clerks. The department asked for 16 additional clerks. The House did not see fit to grant them, though I tried to have it done. Some clerks are now being paid out of the railroad land-grant fund, and there is now in the legislative bill an amendment authorizing the department to use $25.000 of this money to pay clerks here in Washington. The gentleman from Idaho tells us that we ought not to repeal the continuing appropriation, because they want to spend that money in surveying lands in his State. If the gentleman can make me understand how you can spend money in paying clerks here in Washington and at the same time pay it out in surveys, then I will agree with him fully. This appropriation was depleted over $20,000 years ago, and it is now to be further depleted under a provision in the legislative bill by $25,000 to pay clerks. That item in the legislative bill should and I think will be agreed to; then if we repeal the continuing appropriation there will be $25.000 of it still available to pay clerks the coming fiscal year, and for the year following we can take care of those clerks directly.

Mr. DONOVAN. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not saying a word about the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Gentlemen complain because we propose to give them $735.000 instead of the $35,000 they have been getting for this work.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question on the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman has not the floor to yield. He is supposed to be addressing the Chair on the point of order. He can not yield the floor. The floor is entirely in the discretion of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. DONOVAN. How has he got the floor to yield? He has not the right to farm out the time on this floor in discussing a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming yields to the gentleman from California for a question.

Mr. RAKER. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Under the statute, volume 28, page 937, the act of 1895, this fund is provided for. Do I understand the gentleman that even with the amendment, if this act is repealed, it will reduce the expenses of the survey if the work is actually done?

Mr. MONDELL. It saves the appropriation.

Mr. RAKER. One other question: If the survey work is done, will it not require the same amount of expenditure whether it is done under the act of 1895 or whether a new appropriation is made for it in this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, well, Mr. Chairman, that is not the question which I am discussing.

Mr. RAKER. That is the only question for the Chair to rule upon, whether this reduces expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. The provision against which the point of order is made is not in order unless it reduces the amount of money carried by this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. It will be in order if it reduces the expenditures of the Government under the Holman rule. That has been held time and again.

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the rule is—

Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. But the Chair has not read the entire rule.

The CHAIRMAN. For the moment the Chair has not, but the Chair wishes to get the point of order stated clearly.

Mr. MONDELL. This repeal does not reduce the amount of money carried in this bill, but it does reduce the expenditures of the Government. It does reduce the money paid by the Government to officials for various classes of work. Therefore, it does come within the Holman rule. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this provision was passed in 1895, and that it provides for a continuing appropriation for the survey of certain classes of public lands. It was originally $100.000. It is no longer quite that amount. It amounts now to about $80,000. The repeal of that undoubtedly is within the Holman rule, because it reduces expenditures. This sum is used for the payment of parties in the field surveying lands within railroad land-grant limits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Wyoming——

Mr. MONDELL. If the Chair will allow me just a word further—it is used also for the payment of the salaries of certain clerks here in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants to suggest to the gentleman from Wyoming that the Holman rule provides that this reduction of expenditures must be in one of three ways. There must not only be a reduction of expenditures, but the reduction of expenditures must be such as to reduce the amounts carried by the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not so understand the Holman rule, Mr. Chairman, and I think the Holman rule has never been so interpreted. This does reduce Government expenditures. It does repeal a statute under which officials are paid. If no other provision were made for them, it would reduce the number of the officials of the Government. Therefore it comes clearly under the provisions of the Holman rule. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], it is true, has talked on both sides of the proposition. He has claimed, on the one hand, that it would reduce largely the amount of land surveyed and the number of people to be paid, and, on the other hand, that it would not. Well, one or the other of those two propositions must be true. It clearly does reduce the expenditures of the Government, reduce the moneys paid to employees of the Government, and if no other provision were made would reduce the number of Government employees, because they are paid directly out of this appropriation. So that it comes not only within the letter, but within the spirit of the Holman rule.

There have been a great many rulings on this point, as the Chair will see if he has had time to look them up. It is not necessary that an item reduce the sum carried in the bill or that the amendment reduce the sum carried in the bill. If that were the only application of the Holman rule, let me suggest to the Chair that the committee itself could never report in a bill an amendment which could come within the Holman rule, because the committee would not do the illogical thing of making an appropriation and then providing in amendment which reduced that same appropriation. So far as appropriation amendments offered by the committee are concerned, they can not in the nature of things increase or decrease the amount carried in an appropriation bill. They must be of a character that reduces governmental expenditures, that reduces the number of officers paid, and the amount of public expenditures. The Chair should recall that the law which we seek to repeal is, as a matter of fact, a part of the surveying legislation of the country. It is as though we carried annually in this bill a permanent provision that in addition to the other appropriations which we make for the survey of other lands we carry this continuing appropriation for land-grant lands. It is not necessary to carry this continuing appropriation in the bill, and yet to all intents and purposes that appropriation is as though it were carried in this bill. The Chairman is aware of the fact that there are many continuing appropriations, that once provided for in an appropriation bill, are then, for the purposes of brevity, dropped from the bill.

The act which we repeal is found on page 937 of volume 28 of the United States Statutes at Large and is carried in the item for the survey of the public lands.

Here we are actually repealing a $100,000 appropriation, which except for the fact that it was made permanent would be carried right along with the paragraph in this bill. It is simply eliminated from it for the purpose of brevity, because it is not necessary to continually reiterate a statement of an appropriation which becomes permanent. If the Committee on Appropriations has no authority to reduce expenditures except by first making an appropriation and then adding to their own bill a provision reducing it—if that is the only way the committee can come under the Holman rule, the Holman rule is a dead letter. The committee comes within the limitation of the rule in the only way the committee can, and that is by reducing expenditures, and there are no end of rulings to the effect that it is not necessary that the amount carried in the bill shall be reduced.

The discussion which was had in regard to the Cavalry regiments when the military bill was under discussion is a case in point. The committee did not reduce any amount in its bill, but it simply changed the law in regard to Cavalry regiments. By changing the law in regard to Cavalry regiments that much money was saved. I do not care to take the time of the Chair, but it seems to me that these decisions are so numerous that there should be no question in regard to them.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the Chair hear me for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Wyoming has concluded.

Mr. MONDELL. For the present I do not care to take up the time of the committee any further.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the act of March 2, 1895, makes this a continuing appropriation, and does a lot of other things. It is permanent law and has been permanent law since that time. This amendment comes in and seeks to repeal the existing law. This paragraph on which the point of order has been reserved or been made by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] does not reduce the expenditures of the Government, does not reduce the number of officers, either on the face of the bill or as a matter of fact. To repeal a section of the law here and put it in on another page does not bring it within the Holman rule. It is not reducing expenditures; it is not reducing the salaries of officers or the officers themselves. I think it is subject to a point of order. The Appropriation Committee brings in an act repealing the law and putting in the provision on another page in language equivalent thereto. It does not bring it within the Holman rule, and I think the point of order well taken, and that it ought to be sustained by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. There is one thing about which the Chair thinks there is no dispute, and that is that this section against which a point of order is made is new legislation. It is not in order unless it reduces expenditures, and, as the Chair recollects the construction of this rule on many occasions, the retrenchment of expenditures must be such as reduces the amount carried by the bill. But whether that is true or not, it must at least appear that a reduction of expenditures is a necessary result. Now, that must appear in some way from the language of the amendment against which this point of order is made.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, does the Chair have any question on that point? Will he let me read the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. The statute that we propose to repeal is this:

The sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated and made a continuing appropriation for the survey of lands within the limits of the railroad land grant—

And so forth.

Now, the last paragraph of the Holman rule is as follows:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any commission authorized by law or the House members of any such commission who have jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures.

Now, we are proposing to repeal an appropriation of $100,000. It is presented by the committee having charge of the bill, and it retrenches expenditures by the amount of the repeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 7, strike out the figures "$735,000" and insert "$700,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the recommendation of $735,000 was upon the understanding that the continuing appropriation would be repealed. Since this provision is taken out of the bill this is to reduce the appropriation to the amount that was agreed upon.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and I ask unanimous consent that I may discuss this matter for 15 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a rather important measure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not care. I can not make any such concession as that.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman object to my discussing it for 10 minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does the gentleman wish to do?

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to discuss this general proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment I offer gives the amount the General Land Office requests.

Mr. MONDELL. I propose to vote with the gentleman on his amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not want to have an extended argument upon this amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is rather important.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object for the present. Let the gentleman take the floor for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, as I suggested a moment ago, it is rather discouraging, after endeavoring to remedy an unfortunate condition, to have some gentlemen terrified by departmental letters to a point where they see fit to stand in the way of a reform which has been long needed. I can not understand the position of gentlemen who prefer an indefinite appropriation which has never at any time been utilized to the extent of more than $45,000—generally to less than $35,000—to an appropriation of $735,000, of which all, or such portion as the department may see fit to use, would be available for the purpose in question, and that is the survey of railroad land-grant lands. Let us see where we are in this matter. Away back in 1895 Congress made a continuing appropriation of $100,000 for the survey of lands within railway land-grant limits. Whether Congress really expected that would survey those lands as rapidly as they should be surveyed, I do not know. At any rate, for years the lands within railroad land-grant limits were surveyed very, very slowly. As a matter of fact, they were surveyed only as fast as the railroads wanted them surveyed. There was a great deal of criticism. That criticism came to the western men—to the Committee on Public Lands. One of the reasons why more lands were not surveyed under this appropriation, it was claimed, was because the railroads would not put up their share of the money, they being compelled to pay one-half of the survey. So I introduced and we passed the act of 1895, and we expected under that act to compel the railway companies to put up all of the moneys that would be needed for the survey of any given area within which they owned half the land.

The comptroller interpreted that law to the effect they could only call upon the railroad companies for their half of the cost of a given survey. This was the result: The department would start in in the spring with the idea of surveying certain railway land-grant lands. They would call on the railroads to put up their share. The railroads in good time would do that. Survey parties were sent into the field. It took them the summer season to make the surveys, and it took them some time to write up their field notes. It took anywhere from 2 to 12 months for the plats to be made in the surveyor general's office. They came back here, and it took a month or two for the department to look them over. They then went to the comptroller, and it there took all the way from two to five months to pass upon them, and the comptroller held that until those accounts were completed, the survey accepted, and everything about the transaction closed no money was available out of continuing appropriation. The result was that the sum was not a $100,000 fund in fact. It was a $35,000 fund, and so the complaint was made because at that rate we would not get the lands within railroad land grants surveyed in the next 25 years. We sought a remedy. Everybody having to do with the matter, in an effort to get the red tape down there, shortened up and cut out. An effort was made three years ago to expedite these surveys. Forty-eight thousand dollars was used about the same time these funds were used for the survey of some lands in southern California, where the railroad company owned only one-third of the lands instead of one-half. The result was that the amount of the difference between the amount the railroad company paid and one-half of the survey was permanently lost to this fund, so that the fund is not $100,000, but about $81,000. Last year we authorized the Land Office to use a portion of this fund to pay clerks in the office here. I do not know how much they have used for that purpose. There is now pending in the legislative bill an item authorizing them to use $25,000 of this and another fund for the purpose of paying clerks here in Washington, and I understand that it will be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to see if we can not fix upon a time within which to close debate upon this question. I ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in 25 minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have 10 minutes of that time.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he make that 30 minutes. That will provide the other 5 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And that will give me none.

Mr. MANN. Then make it 35 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think 25 minutes is sufficient, and the gentlemen can say all they want to say in 5 minutes, but I will ask for 30 minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to insist upon having 10 minutes, and I shall not grant unanimous consent unless I may have that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will have to arrange that with the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 30 minutes, with the understanding that the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is to have 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the department became so thoroughly convinced of the unworkable character of this indefinite appropriation, of how utterly impossible it was to survey the railroad land-grant lands as rapidly as they ought to be surveyed—they became so convinced of the futility of continuing the conduct of this work under that sort of a law that they submitted with their estimates this year a provision for repeal, the very provision we have now before us, or which went out on the point of order. In submitting that they did not ask for an additional amount for surveys. But when the committee proceeds to repeal this provision of the law and make this whole appropriation available for this work we added $35,000 to the bill. I think we might have added more properly, but that is at least as much as they have heretofore used out of this fund in any year in the past except one, and we make available the entire fund for the purpose, $735,000. I have no desire to quarrel with the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He is a good official; he has been disturbed by members of his surveying corps, largely agitated over a question of clerks, which has been provided for elsewhere; he has written some Members that this year we are going to survey all creation. This year, when this appropriation is not only depleted by over $20,000 on account of the San Bernardino survey, but will be depleted $25,000 more in the appropriation which will be secured in the legislative bill. They have 28 parties in the field, the commissioner says, and it is suggested that he will take these parties out of the field unless the continuing appropriation is preserved. Now, I scarcely think the Commissioner of the General Land Office will take the surveying parties out of the field when he has $735,000 available to pay them, and I think it is hardly fair for the commissioner to make that kind of a suggestion after he himself has suggested that this reform ought to be had. I think the committee ought to be given an opportunity to carry it out; and if we can carry it out, we would survey these railroad land-grant lands three times as fast as they have been surveyed in the past. We are anxious to have this great West that ought to have been surveyed years ago surveyed, and the very gentlemen who are the most interested attempt to block the efforts we are making to put these surveying provisions all under one item, so that the commissioner can use his judgment and his discretion and can use this great fund—as much of it as he sees fit—for this purpose. Why continue to go through the miserable maze of red tape which it is necessary to go through now in order to utilize the continuing appropriation, at the end of which we get surveys of a few hundred thousand acres out of 15,000,000. It is my opinion the gentlemen will rue the day they have opposed this change.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] knows about public lands and he knows about surveys, and he ought not to come in here and try to get through an amendment cooked up in the Committee on Appropriations that will absolutely destroy the surveying and the development of the West. The Commissioner of the General Land Office comes forward with a letter, over his own signature, under date of June 11, 1914, and states what havoc this would make if adopted. Let me read the gentleman what he says:

> We are now in the midst of the surveying season. There are at present 28 line parties surveying within railroad land grants. If the proposed legislation is enacted, this work must be stopped, or very largely curtailed, with the resulting continued exemption of these lands from taxation.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not yield to the gentleman; the gentleman has had 15 or 20 minutes, and I have only 5.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Will the gentleman yield to me there?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman used some expression about the Committee on Appropriations cooking up an amendment. I want to ask the gentleman if that language was not identical with the language submitted by the Land Office itself?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not know about that. Anyway, it was over the protest of the Land Office in a long letter addressed to the chairman and in a long letter addressed to me saying——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. This is in verbatim language communicated by the Land Office.

Mr. FERRIS. It may be that. Anyway the Land Office in a letter to the Committee on Appropriations and in a letter to me, both of which I hold in my hand, say that the passage of this legislation will play havoc with surveys in the West. I want to ask the gentleman from Wyoming himself and the other western Members what a nice spectacle it would be at this time if he called out every surveying party in the West? No such thing ought to be countenanced a moment. The gentleman from Wyoming ought not to try to do such a thing.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not yield; the gentleman had 15 or 20 minutes, and I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood that the gentleman asked me in regard to something. Evidently the gentleman does not want to know anything; he does not desire an answer.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not yield to the gentleman, and I would like to be let alone until I can say a word further. I, of course, do not want to be discourteous, but I must preserve one or two of the five minutes for my own use.

The Chairman has justly and righteously, as I believe, held this item to be subject to a point of order, and it has been stricken out. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has just offered an amendment which strikes out the $35,000 which was in lieu of the $100,000. I think that is entirely appropriate. The Land Office does not need both appropriations and is not entitled to receive both. The thing that ought to happen has happened; the point of order has been sustained; the objectionable paragraph is stricken out. The gentleman has offered now an amendment to strike out the $35,000, so that the appropriation will be left precisely as it was last year.

There is no use in trying experiments on the General Land Office, and there is no use in playing pranks on the General Land Office—pranks that they do not want played; and the gentleman from Wyoming knows too much about public-land matters and about Land Office matters to bring in such a thing.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to incorporate a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to myself and one to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Both of them speak for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CONRY). The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by incorporating the letters named. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, June 11, 1914.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: In response to your inquiry by phone this morning, as to the probable effect of the provision contained in lines 1 to 12, inclusive, page 98, of the pending sundry civil bill, providing for the repeal of the $100,000 continuing appropriation for the survey of lands within railroad land grants, provided for by act of March 2, 1895, I beg to inclose herewith, for your information, copy of my letter of May 27, 1914, to the Hon. John J. Fitzgerald, chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, which quite fully explains the situation relative to this matter.

In addition to the matters stated in said letter, I beg to state that there is now in cash, either in the Treasury or in the hands of special disbursing agents, nearly $100,000 of moneys deposited by various railroad companies on the call of the Secretary of the Interior under the authority of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 834), available for use in conjunction with Government moneys made available under said act of March 2, 1895, supra, in accordance with the decisions of the comptroller, as explained in said inclosed letter. Addtional calls have been made on the railroads for sufficient to bring this amount up to $128,000.

There is also available on this date in cash for use, in the Treasury or in the hands of disbursing agents, Government's moneys appropriated under said act of March 2, 1895, the sum of approximately $70,000, subject to increase, reappropriation and further use, as provided in said act of March 2, 1895, so that Government moneys will doubtless be available for use in conjunction with all of the said railroad deposits, above referred to, as rapidly as same is needed for use in the field.

Referring to line 7, page 96, of the sundry civil appropriation bill, you will note that the total amount appropriated for surveys and resurveys of public lands has been increased from $700,000 to $735,000; this is with the understanding, as I am advised, that the amount added shall, by amendment on the floor (see exception, line 18, p. 96), be made available for surveys within railroad land grants, in lieu of funds now procured by means of said continuing appropriation act of March 2, 1895. All of the said $700,000 is needed to make surveys applied for by settlers and States under the first preference mentioned in the act (lines 8 to 10, p. 96).

Briefly, therefore, under existing conditions there is available for use for the surveys of lands within railroad land grants during the present season, or as rapidly as the work can be done, anywhere from $150,000 to $250,000, whereas if this proposed legislation is enacted the most that can be expended for this class of surveys during the fiscal year 1915 will be $70,000 (one-half railroad money), with a large balance of railroad money on hand, which can not be used, unless, of course, Congress materially increases the additional direct appropriation and makes same available for the expense of this class of surveys.

We are now in the midst of the surveying season; there are at present 28 line parties surveying within railroad land grants. If the proposed legislation is enacted, this work must be stopped, or very largely curtailed, with the resulting continued exemption of these lands from taxation.

While the committee doubtless considers that there are good and sufficient reasons for the recommendations made, in view of the importance of this legislation I beg to suggest your serious consideration of its advisability.

Very respectfully,

CLAY TALLMAN,
Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, May 27, 1914.

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FITZGERALD: At the verbal suggestion of Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, a member of your committee, who called on me yesterday with relation to the matter, I submit the following form of an item to repeal the provisions of the act making an appropriation for surveying the public lands within railroad land grants, generally known as "the continuing appropriation act":

"So much of the provisions of the act of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat., 395), as amended by the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 937), as provides an appropriation for the survey of lands within railroad land grants and the making of a continuing appropriation is hereby repealed: Provided, That surveys heretofore authorized by the Commissioner of the General Land Office may be completed and paid for in the manner provided by law prior to this act."

For the benefit of your committee I will briefly refer to the several acts of Congress requiring the railroads and their successors in interest to pay for the survey, selecting, and conveyance of the lands granted. The act of Congress approved July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 365), amending the act of July 1, 1862, providing a grant for the Union Pacific Railroad Co., contained this provision, section 21:

"And be it further enacted, That before any land granted by this act shall be conveyed to any company or party entitled thereto under this act there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or party in interest as the titles shall be required by said company."

The act of Congress approved July 15, 1870, making appropriation for the survey of the public lands within the limits of the land grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. provided:

"That before any land granted to said company by the United States shall be conveyed to any party entitled thereto under any of the acts incorporating or relating to said company there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or party in interest"—

Which provisions were followed by the enactment of the general act of July 31, 1876 (19 Stat., 121), providing:

"That before any land granted to any railroad company by the United States shall be conveyed to such company, or any persons entitled thereto under any of the acts incorporating or relating to said company, unless such company is exempted by law from the payment of such cost, there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or persons in interest."

It will be observed that the three acts are essentially similar, and that they provide for the payment by the companies or their successors in interest of amounts necessary for the cost of surveying, selecting, and patenting the lands granted. It will also be noted that there is no specific provision in any of said acts requiring that the cost of survey shall be divided equally between the Government and the companies; but as the lands granted were in every instance in alternate sections and not in solid blocks, the practice grew up of requiring the railroads to pay for only one-half the cost of surveying the entire area within the granted limits, upon the theory, I presume, that under this method the companies were required to pay for the survey of the lands actually granted; otherwise they would be required to pay not only for the survey of their lands but also for the survey of those belonging to the Government. I have not been able to find, in the limited time that I was able to devote to the examination of the matter, that the question has ever been definitely discussed in any decision rendered by this department; but I am advised that it has been the practice of this office, in all instances, to require of the railroads only that they pay for one-half the total cost of the survey of the lands lying within the granted limits. The Comptroller of the Treasury, under date of April 23, 1895 (Decisions of the Comptroller, vol. 1, p. 400), had under consideration the acts of August 18, 1894 (28 Stat., 395), and March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 937), and said, in speaking of the act of 1894:

"That clause did not, however, provide that there should be appropriated at the same time such reimbursements were made a sum equal and in addition to the amount so reimbursed. As only one-half the amount expended under the appropriation could be reimbursed by the railroad companies, it necessarily followed that the reappropriations would become smaller each time, and would eventually cease. * * * It was under these circumstances that Congress made the appropriation in the act of March 2, 1895."

The comptroller, continuing, pointed out that the act of 1895 differed from that of 1894 in that the former act contained the provision that—

"Whenever there shall have been reimbursed and paid into the Treasury of the United States by the respective companies or parties in interest any part of said appropriation expended for surveys within such grants, there shall be immediately available, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount equal to the amount so reimbursed, and the same shall be available for the survey of the public lands lying within the limits of the railroad land grants made by Congress until all of said lands shall have been surveyed."

and in the more recent decision, rendered June 29, 1912 (18 Dec. Comp., p. 1044), the acting comptroller said:

"The survey of railroad land grants necessarily involves the survey of such sections of the land as are retained by the Government, but the said act of 1910 provides only for the cost of the railroad's share, and expenditures on account of the Government's share must be under other authority of law."

In that decision the comptroller clearly recognizes that the acts of Congress requiring the payment by the companies only require such companies to pay for one-half the cost of surveying the lands within the granted limits. I take it, therefore, that under the practice of the Land Department and the decisions of the comptroller the companies are required to pay for only one-half of the cost of surveying the lands lying within the granted limits.

The act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 834), makes ample provision for the collection by the Government, in advance, of the amounts necessary to pay for the railroads' share of surveying the lands within the granted limits, and the acting comptroller, in the decision above cited, holds that the continuing appropriation act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., 937), may be used in conjunction with the act of June 25, 1910, or that the moneys appropriated by the continuing act of 1895 are available with those secured from the companies under the act of 1910 for the surveying of the railroad lands and those belonging to the Government within the granted limits. If, however, the Congress should repeal the provisions of the act of 1895, providing for the continuing appropriation, there would be no fund from which the Government could pay its part of the cost of the survey of such lands, and it would be vain to require the companies to make large deposits for their part of the cost when there was no money available to defray the Government's part of such cost. In other words, under existing conditions, unless the Congress provides, by specific appropriation, for the survey of the Government's portion of the lands, the act of June 25, 1910, would be rendered practically inoperative, and the companies would be permitted to go on, as they have for more than 40 years, without the payment of taxes for the support of municipal, county, and State institutions. In speaking of the practices by the railroad companies in avoiding the payment of taxes, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. v. Traill County (115 U. S., 600), used this language:

"We are aware of the use being made of this principle by the companies, who, having earned their lands, neglect to pay these costs in order to prevent taxation. The remedy lies with Congress and is of easy application. If that body will take steps to enforce its lien for these costs of survey, by sale of the lands or by forfeiture of title, the Treasury of the United States would soon be reimbursed for its expenses in making the surveys, and the States and Territories in which the lands lay be remitted to their appropriate rights of taxation. The courts can do no more than declare the law as it exists."

Responding to the suggestions made by the Supreme Court in the case above cited, Congress, on July 10, 1886, passed the act entitled "An act to provide for taxation of railroad land grants, and for other purposes." This act, in brief, provided that no lands granted to any railroad corporation by any act of Congress shall be exempt from taxation on account of a lien of the Government for the cost of surveying, etc., or because no patent has been issued, but it was further provided that the act should not apply to lands unsurveyed.

It would seem, therefore, that until the Government has surveyed the lands granted to the various companies, that such lands will not become subject to taxation; and the relief which the foregoing act purported to extend was theoretical rather than real, because no provision was made for the survey of the lands, and, as above suggested, the act was specifically declared to be inapplicable to unsurveyed lands. Apparently, the first attempt by Congress to remedy the evil was the appropriation of $125,000 for the survey of lands within the limits of railroad land grants made by the act of August 5, 1892 (27 Stat., 370). This act was followed by the act of August 18, 1894, supra, which the comptroller held ineffective because it failed to appropriate an amount equal to that reimbursed by the company. This latter defect was remedied by the continuing-appropriation act of 1895. I assume from the request of one member of your committee for a draft of repeal of this appropriation that your committee must have under consideration the question of the advisability of doing away with this continuing appropriation. I can not state too strongly the hope that your committee will not recommend the repeal of this continuing appropriation.

Most liberal grants were made to the various companies to aid them in the construction of their roads. In speaking of the grant made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., the Supreme court, in the case of said company v. Traill County, above cited, said:

"The United States made a magnificent grant to this company of lands equal in quantity to forty or fifty thousand square miles, an area as large as an average State of the Union."

Where the companies desire to place their lands on the market, they are enabled to secure the survey of such lands by complying with the provisions of the act of February 27, 1899 (30 Stat., 892); but, as above stated, if the continuing-appropriation act of 1895 is repealed, the Government will be without funds or means to secure or compel survey of lands which the company desires to hold for speculative purposes, and which they may keep indefinitely, exempt from taxation. In many sections of the West the Government has reserved considerable areas for public purposes. These lands, being owned by the Government, are not subject to taxation; and if in localities where such reservations are established the railroad companies, the largest holders of real property, are permitted to retain their lands exempt from taxation, the local authorities will be very much embarrassed in raising the revenues necessary to the support of their institutions.

It may be argued that the Government has not availed itself in a proper manner of the privileges conferred by the continuing appropriation act of 1895, but there are a number of reasons why this has not been done.

The practice has grown up of requiring the different railroad companies affected by the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910, to deposit a sum equivalent to the estimated cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the odd-numbered sections inuring to the companies, or about one-half of the total estimated cost of surveying the lands involved, the remainder of which was to be drawn from the continuing appropriation, which latter appropriation, in accordance with the act making it applicable, was to be reimbursed in the amount equal to that actually expended from the deposits made by the railroad company affected.

In adjudicating accounts under these interdependent relations, the reimbursement of the continuing appropriation has not heretofore been accomplished as rapidly as funds could be put into use, and consequently surveying activities under these joint appropriations have been restricted to considerable less than would seem to be indicated as possible of accomplishment by reference merely to the amount of the appropriation by the act of March 2, 1895, apportioned as has been necessary among the several land-grant States, according to their respective demands.

Steps are now being taken, however, with the purpose in view of bringing about an earlier reimbursement of the continuing appropriation than has heretofore been accomplished by pursuing a different method of submitting expense accounts of this class, the ultimate effect of which, it is believed, will be to permit the speedier rotation of funds to the end that larger areas of land may be surveyed each season than has heretofore been possible.

Prior to the passage of the act of June 25, 1910, which was practically coincident with the inauguration of the direct system of public-land surveys, previous to which the contract system obtained, delays of years were encountered in securing action under the contracts, and after the lands were finally surveyed it was left optional with the companies when they would apply for patent to make the payments necessary to reimburse the fund. It may be stated in a general way that the continuing-appropriation act was practically a dead letter until the present direct system of surveys was adopted and the act of June 25, 1910, was passed, under which the Government could demand payment from the companies in advance whenever, in the judgment of the commissioner, it was necessary or desirable that the survey of any particular area be executed.

It is estimated that there remains nearly 16,000,000 acres of unsurveyed land within the primary limits of the railroad grants, but, owing to the fact that only nonmineral odd-numbered sections not reserved at the time the rights of the road attached inured to the companies, it is estimated that the amount of unsurveyed land now inuring to the companies is about 5,000,000 acres; and while, at the present rate of surveying, it will take 10 years to complete such surveys I am confident that under the system of advancing the approval of accounts, arrangements for which have recently been made, funds may be made available much more rapidly than heretofore if the Congress does not interrupt such work by the repeal of the law, and the only law under which it is possible for the Government to proceed.

I may add that settlements have now been made so that there is now available for the present season's work more than double the amount of money that has been expended under these appropriation acts during any one year for the last five years; and if the plan above outlined for advancing accounts operates as anticipated, this latter amount will be very materially increased, if not doubled.

Considering the grave importance of this matter and the urgent necessity of prompt survey of the balance of the unsurveyed lands within railroad land grants, I most respectfully urge that the repealing act hereinabove referred to be not recommended.

Very respectfully,

CLAY TALLMAN, Commissioner.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, there are over 700,000 acres of granted lands in the State of Washington yet unsurveyed, and as the result of their not being surveyed are now untaxed.

It is a hard matter to explain to the average taxpayer in the State of Washington why it is that railroad granted lands should go untaxed while other lands of equal value are surveyed and their owners required to pay taxes. The fault rests somewhere, either with the Congress or with the Department of the Interior. If the Department of the Interior has had for the last 19 years $100,000 annually to be expended in the survey of railroad granted lands, the Department of the Interior ought to be held responsible for the conditions obtaining in the States of Washington, Idaho, Wyoming, and other Western States.

To illustrate the importance of this matter to the taxpayers in my State, I know of sections in the State of Washington that are unsurveyed and untaxed, lined up with and bordering on surveyed and taxed lands, worth probably $100,000. Some of these lands may be worth slightly more, and a great portion of it may be worth less. The feeling in the State of Washington is that somebody is to blame for making the United States Government a holding concern for the owners of these granted lands. I have here in my hand a map of King County, Wash. One-third of its area, I judge from a glance at the map, is unsurveyed and paying no taxes. It represents railroad-land grants.

If we are to accept the statement made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], any part of the $735,000 might be used, but the Commissioner of the Land Office insists that the limit would be $35,000 a year. We are informed by the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office that there has been expended only $34,000 last year for these surveys. Why did not the Commissioner of the General Land Office expend $100,000?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands that with the adoption of the provision as intended the entire $735,000 would be expended.

Mr. FALCONER. I understand the commissioner to say that it would be necessary to have $700,000 to carry on other work. That is his statement, made over his own signature, and this would leave only $35,000, as I stated above, for railway land-grant surveys, which is not sufficient. I am in favor of any amendment or any feature of the bill that will provide for the survey of these lands, and there is no man on the floor of the House who can consistently stand up and defend the Land Department during the last 19 years for not expending $100,000 for the survey of the lands. The result has been that millions of dollars that should have been paid into the Public Treasury up to this date are now in the pockets of the owners of these unsurveyed, untaxed lands, and all because this work has not been done.

There may be some excuse for the present Commissioner of the General Land Office and for the present Secretary of the Interior for not making the surveys during last year. It was their first year in office, and it takes some time to organize. But I want to submit the proposition to this House that no taxpayer in the State of Washington will defend the inactivity of previous administrations in the last 19 years for not having this money expended in the survey of railroad lands. Irrespective of party, there is no excuse for it, and you can not explain to the people of my State why these surveys have not been made. If the officials of the Land Department of this administration understand the feeling in the West they will spend every dollar available for this purpose. And I will say, in passing, if the gentleman will permit me, and I will yield in a minute, that the people of our State have much confidence in Secretary Lane, and we believe he will do it. This bill ought to carry a sufficient appropriation, and I urge the continued appropriation of the $100,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not the gentleman think he has done well in sending out 28 line parties? There is some justice in the position taken by gentlemen over there, because this is a half-and-half proposition between the Government and the railroads, and until 1910 we had no way of getting the railroads to pay their part.

Mr. FALCONER. Before 1910 there was a way by which the railroads could have been made to advance the money, and Congress did not compel them to do it. The work ought to have been done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. FALCONER. I ask for one minute more, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BRYAN. I will give the gentleman one minute of the time allotted to me.

Mr. FALCONER. Now, the railroads have put up $100,000, and it is on deposit. The only difficulty that can now stand in the way is this Congress and the department. Sir, if this appropriation is now made and the surveys are not then ordered and made, the Department of the Interior will continue to be in fault.

The people and the press out in my country have declared that the Government alone is responsible for the delay. The officials of the State are anxious to have these lands placed on the tax rolls; the railroads claim that they are anxious for the surveys, that these lands may come to patent. I hope the Congress will make a sufficient appropriation and that the Land Department under this administration, which seems to have a live Land Department, will be furnished with sufficient money to do this work.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands that if this point of order is sustained no increase of the amount will be obtainable?

Mr. FALCONER. If the present commissioner does not use more than his predecessor used, he will be subject to criticism. If the indefinite and continuing appropriation of $100,000 annually be retained, it appears to me that Commissioner Tallman will see that it is spent for the benefit of the country by placing these lands on the tax rolls.

Mr. MONDELL. He used $32,000 last year.

Mr. FALCONER. He should have used $100,000.

Mr. Chairman, the expenditure of $100,000 for survey of railroad land grants this fiscal year means that before another year rolls around all this amount and probably much more in taxes assessed will be paid to the county treasurers of the several States. There can be no possible excuse for continued phlegmatic action in this matter. I wish to insert correspondence and press items touching on this important subject. I have given much time to the subject. I urge the continuation of the larger appropriation.

OCTOBER 31, 1913.

Mr. A. A. JONES,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

DEAR MR. JONES: I have had a number of communications of recent date regarding conditions obtaining in the State of Washington wherein large timberland owners have been holding for the last 10 or 20 years large tracts of timberland in the State of Washington, upon which stands the finest kind of timber in the reserves or in unsurveyed territory. Protests have come urging that the Government should not continue longer to be a holding company for these timber owners in permitting them to have these vast tracts of timber enhancing in value, with all other timber, but having the advantage of paying no taxes.

For instance, there are 700,000 acres, more or less, in the State of Washington held by large timber holders, worth many millions of dollars, on which no taxes are assessed because of the fact that it is not surveyed land. This question has been discussed in every little schoolhouse debate and civic league organization in the State for the last several years, and of recent date the instance of the Northern Pacific Railroad giving to the press a statement that the fault is with the Government and not with the railroad; that the railroad would be very glad, indeed, to get action upon this, even though they had to pay taxes, has caused criticism to be directed toward the department in this what appears to be a matter of favoritism.

Much of this land is very valuable. There are quarter sections that would pay a tax of from $100 to $200 per annum. It makes a big difference to the people of the State of Washington. St. M. & M. scrip has been filed on lands all through our country as has other scrip on land adjoining surveyed lands. I personally know of a number of tracts of this kind up the north fork of the Skykomish, Snohomish County, Wash.

I have been asked to introduce a resolution asking for an investigation, but this will only result in some press notice to myself, and would not help any in results.

I believe in the new order of things; that the administration desires to straighten out some of the irregularities that seem to have attached to the department, and I sincerely hope that early action will be taken in the matter. If it is desired, I shall be glad to send some definite information to the department.

I have the honor to be,

Very sincerely, yours, ——— ———.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 14, 1913.

Hon. J. A. FALCONER,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FALCONER: I am in receipt of your letter dated October 31, 1913, reporting that you have a number of communications of recent date regarding the alleged holding by grantees, or owners, of large tracts of timberlands in the State of Washington which are not subject to taxation by reason of the fact that they are in reserve, or unsurveyed. Mention is made of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., and also of certain scrip locations by the St. Paul, Minnesota & Manitoba Railroad Co., and you express the hope that early action will be taken in bringing about the survey of these lands.

In reply I have to state, upon information furnished me by the General Land Office, that in the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. the survey of all the unsurveyed lands that will inure to it within the primary limits of its grants was made possible by the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., 834), which was for the purpose of enabling this department—

"* * * to complete the adjustment of land grants made by Congress and to aid in the construction of railroads, and to subject the lands granted to taxation by States, Territories, and municipal authorities, and railroad corporations required by law to pay the cost of surveying, selecting, or conveying any lands granted to such company or corporation * * *."

Under this authority the company was called upon in 1911 to deposit the sum of $25,981.55, being its estimated share of the cost of making these surveys, and with a like amount advanced from the appropriation of March 2, 1895 (28 Stats., 937), the field work has been prosecuted just as vigorously as the mountainous character of the country and the availability of competent surveyors will permit. At the present time the records of the General Land Office show that the surveys of 18 of these townships have been executed in the field, 5 of which are accepted and the triplicate plats thereof are on file in the local land office. With the exception of the said act of June 25, 1910, the General Land Office possesses no legal authority to bring about the survey of unsurveyed lands that may or may not be appropriated under scrip location or otherwise for the prime purpose of subjecting them to taxation. The regular appropriation for the survey of the public lands, under which the survey work is generally carried on, provides:

"That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States" under various acts; "and other surveys shall include lands adapted to agriculture and lands deemed advisable to survey on account of availability for irrigation or dry farming, lines of reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations."

The demands arising under the preference class referred to involve practically this entire appropriation, and as the lands legally held by the interests referred to by you, including those covered by the St. Paul, Minnesota & Manitoba scrip are, by the very fact that they are thus appropriated, not of the preference class. They must properly await their survey by other legal means, the initiative of which does not rest with this department.

The fact that there are but 670,000 acres of unsurveyed unappropriated land outside existing reservations in the State of Washington suggests that possibly the 700,000 acres, more or less, referred to as being held by timber interests, worth many millions of dollars, on which no taxes are assessed because of the fact that they are unsurveyed, are probably largely in some form of reservation, most likely national forests, in which case the survey of such lands can only be secured under the condition that they are occupied by bona fide settlers, whose residence antedated the creation of the reservation.

From the foregoing you will readily see that the General Land Office has been, and is, actively engaged in the survey of all unsurveyed lands in the State of Washington that it has legal authority to execute, and that lands left unsurveyed are ineligible under existing laws and regulations.

Very respectfully,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

EVERETT, WASH., October 3, 1913.

Hon. J. A. FALCONER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of recent date regarding ownership of unsurveyed lands in this county duly received. In reply I regret to state that there are no records whatever in my possession that would give you the information that you desire. The records in the assessor's office show the ownership of every foot of surveyed lands in the county; outside of that there is nothing to indicate any ownership. I believe that such corporations as the Weyerhaeuser, the Northern Pacific Railroad, etc., have such data, but am at a loss to know how to obtain it. I should think the Department of the Interior has all such information and should readily furnish it. As I understand the situation as it stands at present, the only salvation would be to have such lands surveyed so that they may be entered on the assessor's books (tax rolls) and become subject to taxation, or enact a clause to our revenue laws declaring such lands to be subject to taxation though unsurveyed. Am sorry that I am not able to give you some information on this matter. I am in utter darkness as to the ownership of a foot of land in this county outside of what is surveyed. If at any time in the future I may learn of some way that such information may be obtained, I shall certainly let you know of it at once.

Regretting my inability to furnish you with the desired information at this time, I beg leave to remain,

Yours, very truly,

T. D. DAVIES,
County Assessor.

[From the Seattle Sun, Tuesday, September 23, 1913.]

NORTHERN PACIFIC SAYS UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE IS TO BLAME—DELAY IN SURVEYING PRIMARY GRANT ACREAGE CHARGED BY RAILWAY AND BY TAX ASSESSOR TO RED TAPE.

Although a popular impression prevails that the thousands of unsurveyed, and hence untaxed, acres in the primary grant of the Northern Pacific in this State and county remain so largely through the machinations of the railway, reports of assessors are that the United States Land Office principally is to blame.

County Assessor A. E. Parish has on file in his office copies of letters written to the Land Office by high officials of the Northern Pacific. In these messages the text always was the same—efforts to get the department to hurry the surveys of the Northern Pacific lands, especially in Washington.

In a letter to Howard Elliot, then president of the road, Thomas Cooper, land commissioner of the Northern Pacific, urged the executive to hurry the Government in surveying the lands.

WANT IT SURVEYED.

Cooper wrote: "Instead of trying to escape taxation by delaying surveys, the company has been begging the department for years to hasten surveys, recognizing that the traffic benefits resulting from development following survey was infinitely greater than the tax burden."

Officials of the Northern Pacific assert it is entirely to their interest to have the tracts surveyed as soon as possible, but that the work of the Land Department is so painfully slow they have given up hope of getting it all platted within the next 15 years. They say some requests for surveys made in the past were not acted on by the Government until 10 years after they had been filed.

The county assessors' convention of Washington used to admonish the Northern Pacific at every annual meeting because of its unsurveyed condition. Now resolutions are adopted each year prodding the Land Department for the delays, not the railway. At the last meeting the president was authorized to keep in touch with the Government with a view of hastening the surveys. It is considered probable a similar action will be taken this year. Some persons suggest that if the Government did not put its surveying parties in the field so late in the summer they could accomplish more.

AMOUNT NOT ESTIMATED.

"Looking at the proposition on its face," remarked A. E. Parish, this county's assessor, "one would think the Northern Pacific simply blocked things so it wouldn't have to pay taxes. But a deeper insight dispels this notion. I have investigated the thing thoroughly and can come to but one conclusion—the Northern Pacific is as anxious to get its land surveyed as we are.

"The trouble is all with the Government. It takes time and patience to get our National Land Department to take action on anything. However, it is only fair to say it is improving in this respect. The surveys are being done more quickly. May this tendency increase.

"There is a great amount of railway land in this State untaxed because it's unsurveyed, but not all of it is valuable. A considerable amount of it consists of mountain peaks and rugged cliffs.

"The assessors of the State hope conditions will improve steadily. This county is missing a big tax revenue all right because of the unplatted Northern Pacific land. But some of the unsurveyed territory is wild, rocky land of little value. Just how big a revenue the county would get as a result of all railway land being platted it is not possible to estimate."

RAILROAD LANDS NOT TAXED.

The county commissioners of Chehalis County are complaining because of the large amount of Northern Pacific lands in that county which escape all taxation because, while surveyed, the surveys have never been accepted and the patents issued to the company. These lands are included within the limits of the forest reserve, which explains why the surveys have not been accepted.

In an address on Friday to the Washington State Tax Reform League, T. D. Rockefeller, former State tax commissioner, touched on the same subject and informed his hearers that there were between 600,000 and 700,000 acres of such railroad lands which were escaping all taxation because unpatented, the patents being withheld until after surveys were made, and the surveys not being made for reasons best known to the authorities at Washington City.

The title to these lands vested in the company immediately upon the passage of the land-grant act, nearly 50 years ago. The title of the company was placed beyond question by the completion of its line, some 30 years ago. But millions of dollars' worth of the company's lands have never paid a cent of taxes to the State or county for all these years. They have not paid taxes because no patents issue until the lands are surveyed.

The responsibility is not with the company, for years ago it paid to the General Government the estimated cost of surveying these lands. But the department has never authorized the surveys. The reason is believed to be that the progress of surveys has been blocked largely by the political "conservationists." If surveys were extended, the State could identify and recover its own 600,000 acres of school lands tied up in the forest reservations.

Whatever the agency which has blocked these surveys in the past, it would seem that the Washington delegation in Congress should interest itself in having surveys made immediately, that these lands should no longer escape taxation.

MARCH 25, 1914.

Hon. ERNEST LISTER,
Governor State of Washington, Olympia, Wash.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I have had up with the Department of the Interior the matter of unsurveyed lands in our State that do not pay taxes. I have talked with Mr. A. A. Jones, assistant, and with the Secretary direct, urging them to make recommendations to the Finance Committee and insist on an appropriation sufficient to survey all unsurveyed lands in the State of Washington covered by scrip or otherwise privately owned, for the purpose of assessing and collecting taxes aginst same.

I wish that I might get all information possible from the land commissioner and any suggestions worth while from the other State officers. I will appreciate it very much if you will have same forwarded to me. The surveyor general might be able to give some information relative to the estimated cost of such a survey per township.

Most sincerely,

J. A. FALCONER.

STATE OF WASHINGTON,
OFFICE OF GOVERNOR,
Olympia, April 3, 1914.

Hon. J. A. FALCONER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FALCONER: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 25 in relation to the action that has been taken with a view to having lands in the State of Washington that would be subject to taxation, if surveyed, surveyed at an early date.

I took this matter up with the Department of the Interior personally in December, and am in receipt of advices from the department indicating its willingness to cooperate in every possible way in bringing about survey of these lands as rapidly as possible, so that they may be placed on the tax rolls of the State and a revenue therefrom made to accrue to the State.

By my direction, the State tax commission is now working with the assessors of 15 counties in which are lieu and scrip lands which would be subject to taxation, if surveyed, with a view to obtaining the description of these lands. As soon as the list is completed the same will be placed in the hands of the Interior Department with a request that attention be given these lands first

I will be pleased to see that you are furnished with a copy of the list when completed, and desire to thank you for your interest.

Sincerely, yours,

ERNEST LISTER, Governor.

JUNE 17, 1914.

Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LANE: I find that an exception is made in the sundry civil bill (H. R. 17041), page 96, to the appropriation in the matter of railroad land grants.

I have had this matter up with your department frequently during the past year.

Acreage approaching 800,000 in area of valuable land in the State of Washington has for many years escaped taxation because of the fact that the survey has not been made.

The people of the State will accept no excuse for further delay in this matter.

This bill ought to provide for this survey by appropriating sufficient funds to do the work, and if further legislation is required to provide that the cost be assessed against the lands it should certainly be enacted.

We will doubtless continue on this bill Saturday next, and in behalf of the people of the State of Washington, I sincerely hope that your department will look into the matter. I have the honor to be,

Very sincerely,

J. A. FALCONER.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I held a conversation with Secretary Lane and the commissioner's office on this subject Saturday last, and I know they desire this appropriation, and have a full appreciation of the significance of making the surveys.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has referred to my position on this question in a way that calls upon me to make a further statement. I am rather amazed at the position that the gentleman from Wyoming has taken upon this question, because he has almost always followed a course that was meant for the best interests of all of our Western States. Here, however, the very fact that the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to strike down this appropriation of $735,000 to $700,000 carries with it a complete refutation of everything that the gentleman from Wyoming has said and substantiates that which I have said. In other words, the committee here now undertake to throw off $35,000, and demonstrates that under the law as it would have been if the amendment had prevailed that was stricken out on my point of order, that only $35,000 could have been expended in lieu of that for which $100,000 may be expended at this time, in view of the fact that my contention has prevailed.

Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I am vitally interested in this question. I come from a State that has a vast area of lands embraced within the railroad primary land grants. I am receiving letters from county commissioners of my State telling me that my State alone is losing $75,000 of taxes every year because of the fact that land held either by railroad companies or those concerns that own the lands as a result of these grants are escaping taxation. If these lands can be surveyed, then they will be available for taxation, and under the law, notwithstanding the fact that a grant has been made to a railroad, even notwithstanding the fact that the railroad has complied with conditions of the law and has built its railroad and has received the grant, it may not be subject to taxation upon its lands until the lands themselves shall be surveyed.

The department did make a recommendation, as I understand it, to which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] refers, that the old law be repealed; and if this particular bill could have passed several months ago, before the organization of the surveying parties, before they were placed in the field, and if instead of $35,000 there had been included an appropriation of $100,000 for this particular work, then I can see no good that could come from insisting on the old law, but rather I would have given my support to the new proposition. But, members of the committee, this is the condition that is confronting us. Already there are 28 surveying parties in the field. Ten of these surveying parties are in my own State, surveying or beginning the survey of something like half a million acres of land within the primary grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad; and in view of the lateness of the time when this bill will be passed, in view of all the considerations, these surveying parties being in the field, and all that, the department itself is opposed to the particular clause that went out on my point of order.

The gentleman has referred to me as possibly not being familiar with the conditions. I am familiar with the conditions, and if the correspondence of many of my people who themselves are struggling under the increased burden of taxation because of these lands not paying their portion of taxation can have any effect upon me, I ought to be familiar, because I am receiving letters and petitions from them urging speedy relief from this burden through the survey of these lands. Not only that, but I am familiar with the situation through having spent many hours of my time in various offices of the Department of the Interior to do what I could to help to direct the survey and impress upon the department the importance of the survey of these grant lands within my State. In view of what has been said, I want to read a letter addressed to me by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I purposed to insert a copy of a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee, but that has been inserted upon request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. In the letter to me the Commissioner of the General Land Office says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, June 11, 1914.

Hon. BURTON L. FRENCH,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FRENCH: Relative to the matter of surveys of land within the limits of railroad land grants, about which you called on me a number of times during the past few months, and also concerning which members of your State land board made inquiry in company with you, I beg to call your attention to lines 1 to 12, inclusive, page 98, of the pending sundry civil bill, for the repeal of the $100,000 continuing appropriation for the survey of railroad land grants provided for by the act of March 2, 1895. For your information I inclose herewith copy of my letter of May 27, 1914, to the Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD, chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations, on the question of the advisability of this repeal.

In addition to the matters stated in said letter, I beg to state that there is now in cash, either in the Treasury or in the hands of special disbursing agents, nearly $100,000 of moneys deposited by various railroad companies on the call of the Secretary of the Interior, under the authority of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 834), available for use in conjunction with Government moneys made available under said act of March 2, 1895, supra, in accordance with the decisions of the comptroller, as explained in said inclosed letter. Additional calls have been made on the railroads for sufficient to bring this amount up to $128,000.

There is also available on this date in cash for use in the Treasury or in the hands of disbursing agents, Government moneys appropriated under said act of March 2, 1895, the sum of approximately $70,000, subject to increase, reappropriation, and further use, as provided in said act of March 2, 1895, so that Government moneys will doubtless be available for use in conjunction with all of the said railroad deposits above referred to as rapidly as same is needed for use in the field.

Referring to line 7, page 96, of the sundry civil appropriation bill, you will note that the total amount appropriated for surveys and resurveys of public lands has been increased from $700,000 to $735,000; this is with the understanding, as I am advised, that the amount added shall by amendment on the floor (see exception line 18, p. 96) be made available for surveys within railroad land grants, in lieu of funds now procured by means of said continuing appropriation act of March 2, 1895. All of the said $700,000 is needed to make surveys applied for by settlers and States under the first preference mentioned in the act (lines 8 to 10, p. 96).

Briefly, therefore, under existing conditions there is available for use for the survey of lands within railroad land grants during the present season, or as rapidly as the work can be done, anywhere from $150,000 to $250,000; whereas, if this proposed legislation is enacted, the most that can be expended for this class of surveys during the fiscal year 1915 will be $70,000 (one-half railroad money), with a large balance of railroad money on hand which can not be used.

We are now in the midst of the surveying season. There are at present 28 line parties surveying within railroad land grants. If the proposed legislation is enacted, this work must be stopped or very largely curtailed, with the resulting continued exemption of these lands from taxation.

While the committee doubtless considers that there are good and sufficient reasons for the recommendations made, in view of the importance of this legislation, I beg to suggest your serious consideration of its advisability.

Very respectfully,

CLAY TALLMAN,
Commissioner.

Listen to the words of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He declares he will need $700,000 of the $735,000 for other purposes.

Yet the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has said that there would be available nearly three-quarters of a million dollars that could be used for this purpose if the amendment could prevail. If all the moneys appropriated could be diverted to this one purpose, then his statement would be correct; but he knows that the preference right of the settlers, that the preference right of the States under the present law, and the preference claims upon that fund in other ways make it impossible for $700,000 of that $735,000 to be used for this purpose at all, and that instead of three-quarters of a million dollars there would be a paltry $35,000 that could be used for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment that the chairman of the committee has offered. It seeks to strike down $35,000 from the amount that could be expended for the survey of the lands generally.

I shall offer another amendment, on page 96, line 13, to insert, after the word "ninety," the words "surveying public lands included within the primary limits of railway land grants."

If that can be inserted into this first provision, then we will have the right to use any part of the $700,000 that in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior he may believe can be used for the purpose of surveying any of these lands, the Government owning the alternate sections within the primary grant of the railroads. If this amendment be adopted, it will permit the use of the $35,000 in addition to that which is now available in the irreducible fund. If the amendment does not prevail, then I hope that this amendment may be added in order that the $35,000 may be made available for the further survey of these lands. [Applause.]

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, it has not always been the railroads that were to blame in this case, according to the opinion of many who ought to be in position to know. They claim that they have repeatedly put up the money in order to get these surveys made, and that there has been fault here at Washington. Of course I am not going to favor striking down any portion of the appropriation or cutting out $35,000 when the money is needed as badly as it is in connection with this service. Here is the claim of the railway company in reference to the deposit they have made on behalf of this service. I read from a letter from Thomas Cooper, land commissioner, of St. Paul, Minn., to Mr. Howard Elliot, dated St. Paul, Minn., December 6, 1909, as published in the pamphlet which I hold, being the proceedings of the fourteenth annual convention of the county assessors of the State of Washington. As to whether the company is trying to get the remainder of its land grant surveyed, note the following:

We have made application under various acts for the survey of 15,626,161 acres, and have advanced to cover the cost of survey $619,533.60. There is unsurveyed at this date of the total area for which we have made application 6,549,480 acres—odd and even numbered sections—and the company has a credit at this date for moneys advanced of $142,798

They say that they have been depositing money for the survey of this land on the ground that the increased settlement, the use of the land by settlers, would increase business, and that they would be glad to pay the taxes in order to get the land on the market, where it could be settled and brought into use and cultivation.

Then there is this situation that is absolutely appalling: In many cases the settlers have taken pot luck about locating on the lands, believing that they were on the alternate section owned by the Government and on land that they could later homestead, and yet after the surveys, as they come in, it is discovered that they are on the railroad land, just across the line. Now, there are a large number of settlers out there who settled in good faith, believing that they were settling on land under the homestead laws. But they find that it is railroad land and they can not get the railroad to relinquish, and so they are subject to an order to vacate. They will have to abandon their little homes and lose the improvements they have made and the cultivation that they have through their own efforts promoted. They have to abandon all that and lose their investment.

If there is any place where the Government money can be expended for a legitimate purpose, in a legitimate way, where there would be an adequate return, many dollars for one, it is in the surveys of these railroad lands. It not only brings taxes to the State but revenue to the Government. I hope there will be no disposition to cut out this $35,000, and I further hope that the department in considering this situation will push forward and send out more of their surveying parties, spend more of its money for the purpose of surveying this land and putting it in a position where it can be settled, and in a position where it can be placed on the tax rolls so that the railroads will do their part and the settlers will do theirs.

I have had considerable correspondence with the department concerning this proposition. I am sure the fall-down of the Federal authority in the matter of these surveys is inexcusable. Objections are often made to Government ownership and administration on just such grounds. It is a fact that a private corporation would have managed to get the taxes from those lands. The entire chapter is one of inexcusable neglect. I believe the present administration will be free from blame in this if a new policy is really instituted and the lands go on the tax rolls and into settlement and use, for it must be remembered that the alternate section belonging to the Government can not be located for settlement and use until it is surveyed.

Concerning the unfortunate position of many who are on these lands as settlers, believing they would have the right of homestead entry, I am compelled to say that I believe the Government should stand back of these people and insure them against loss. The record shows that these people were assured by circulars, which any reasonable man would rely upon, that they might settle on these lands, and if it should later be discovered that they were on railroad lands that they would be protected, and that the railroad would be required to relinquish their claim. A circular was issued containing the following:

PARAGRAPH 8.

The act makes special provision for instances where, after January 1, 1898, a qualified person in good faith makes settlement, with a view to homestead entry, upon unsurveyed lands within the primary limits of said grant, which upon survey are found to be within an odd-numbered section to which the right of the railroad company has attached by the definite location of its line of road. The purpose of this provision is to afford relief to those who make such settlement before the identification by survey of the lands to which the railroad claimant is entitled. Such settlement claim must be continued and the right of the settler asserted after survey by an application at the local land office, to make homestead entry of the lands settled upon, accompanied by proof of such settlement, and the continued maintenance of the claim. These claimants are not accorded the privilege of taking other lands in lieu of those settled upon, but if the proof submitted is deemed satisfactory the railroad claimant will be requested to relinquish the land embraced in said claims and to take other lands. All the provisions of these regulations are applicable to these lands excepting those pertaining to relinquishments by individual claimants.

Section 23 of said circular provides:

From time to time, and as soon as conveniently may be done, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall prepare and submit to the Secretary of the Interior duplicate lists describing, according to the smallest legal subdivision, the lands to which there are conflicting claims as described in these regulations, and which the individual claimants have elected to hold; and upon the approval of any such list by the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office will retain one copy thereof in his office and will transmit the other copy thereof to the railroad claimant, with the request that it relinquish its claim to the lands therein described. Every list will be deemed conclusive against the railroad claimant to the extent that it will be required, within 60 days after receipt thereof, to execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a proper relinquishment to the United States of all the lands in said list, or to make satisfactory showing that those not relinquished have been sold or contracted to be sold, or are used or needed for railroad purposes, or are valuable for stone, iron, or coal.

On April 16, 1907, the Interior Department, acting through Secretary Ballinger, wrote a letter that gave these men further reason for feeling secure in their position, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 16, 1907.

Dr. E. E. BECKETT,
355–357 Lumber Exchange, Seattle, Wash.

SIR: Answering your letter of March 16, 1907, respecting settlement of your brother on northwest quarter section 17, township 26 north, range 11 east, Washington, I advise you that said tract is unsurveyed land within the primary limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad grant, upon definite location of December 8, 1884, at which date its right vested; that the temporary withdrawal of the land March 18, 1905, for forest reserve did not affect the company's right; and that the land was released from said reservation July 6, 1905.

Therefore, if your brother settled upon the land since the definite location of the road, and prior to the survey in the field of the land in question, he may, when the plat of the survey becomes filed in the local land office, submit his homestead application with election under act of July 1, 1898, to retain the land (forms of which will be furnished by the district officers on request), upon which, if found correct, the railroad company will be requested to relinquish its rights to the land.

Very respectfully,

R. A. BALLINGER, Commissioner.

I have been deluged with letters and resolutions on behalf of these men, and I would be glad to help them. Various suggestions have been offered; but I see nothing in the way of relief for them except a plain appropriation of the necessary sum by Congress to save them from loss. The following affidavit sets forth in detail some of the facts involved in this matter:

STATE OF WASHINGTON, County of King, ss:

I, G. A. Schultheiss, being duly sworn, on oath depose and say that I am a citizen of the United States, of lawful age, and my post-office address is Baring, Wash., and qualified to make homestead entry. I did on the 22d day of May, 1908, make homestead entry on unsurveyed land, which since survey has been described as the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter and lots 7, 8, 9, of section 1, township 26 north, range 10 east, Washington Meridian. That before making settlement on said land, about the latter part of March, 1908, I called to see Joseph Gregory, a land attorney of Seattle, Wash., and I was handed a decision by said Gregory, and was informed by him that the decision was the latest decision of the highest court, and that this decision held that when a settler made settlement on unsurveyed land within the limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. and that when the land was surveyed and found to be railroad land, that it was mandatory for the railroad company to accept scrip in lieu of the land settled upon; and at that time said Gregory went with me to the land office and showed the aforementioned decision to Frank Twitchell, receiver of the United States Land Office at Seattle, Wash., and at that time said Gregory and Twitchell had some discussion whether the decision applied to the land I was contemplating making settlement upon; and after looking at said decision said Twitchell informed me that there was no such thing as unsurveyed railroad land, and that it all belonged to the Government until patented, and that anybody settling on such land prior to survey would have a prior right over t railroad company. I was given the circular of the General Land Office, approved February 14, 1889, containing regulations under the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stats., 597–620), and I thereafter read said circular most carefully, paying particular attention to the interpretation placed upon said act in said circular by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I particularly noted paragraph "B," and I believed that the interpretation placed upon said act in said circular to be the law, and I relied on this circular and believed I had a right to make settlement on said land, and that I would eventually obtain entry of said land when open for entry; and after I settled on the land I was in the land office several times and talked with Henry Smith, register of the land office at Seattle, and I was informed by him that the land on which I had settled was within the grant of the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; and said Smith informed me that there had never been a case to his knowledge where the railroad company had refused to relinquish such land in favor of a settler when requested to do so by the Government, and I believed in and relied on the circular of February 14, 1899, and the advice given to me by Joseph Gregory, the attorney, and the information received from the register and receiver of the land office at Seattle, in making settlement upon and continuing my residence and improvement of the land above mentioned.

Since the date of the settlement I have made said land my home and have lived upon the land continuously, and have constructed improvements thereon of the value of about $1,400; that my improvements consist of a house 18 by 24 feet, woodshed 18 by 20 feet, root house 8 by 10 feet, 36 apple trees, berry bushes of all kinds, and I built about 1 mile of trail and have 1 acre cleared.

After the land was surveyed and open for entry I made homestead application to enter said land, and my entry was rejected by the register and receiver of the land office at Seattle, and I perfected my appeal, and the Department of the Interior has made demand on the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. to relinquish said land in my favor, which said company has declined to do, and now my entry is held for rejection, and I have lost all my time, toil, and money in attempting to acquire this land, and now find myself practically destitute because of the erroneous advice, misinformation, and misinterpretation of the law received as set forth by me herein.

G. A. SCHULTHEISS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of May, A. D. 1913.

J. E. ALLISON,
Notary Public in and for the State of Washington, residing at Seattle.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BRYAN) there were—ayes 33, noes 19.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] I understood to offer some amendment on page 96, lines 18 and 19. I did not hear all the proposed amendments, but it was to strike out the words "except the railroad land grant," and so forth.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not propose to offer that amendment, in view of the fact that the paragraph repealing the indefinite appropriation of $100,000 has gone out of the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was inquiring whether the agreement had been acted on.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Oregon that the amendment was not offered.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 13, after the word "ninety," insert:
"To surveying public lands included within the primary limit of railway land grants.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman. I make a point of order against that: there is no authority for the survey.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have discussed the entire question in connection with the other matter, and the gentleman from Idaho had 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement was that all debate on the paragraph should be concluded at 20 minutes of 4 o'clock, and the order is sustained.

Mr. BRYAN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 96, line 9, after the word "settlers," insert:
"Thereafter in surveying railroad land grants."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order that it is not authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Abandoned reservations: For necessary expenses of survey, appraisal, and sale of abandoned military reservations transferred to the control of the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and any law prior thereto, including a custodian of the ruin of Casa Grande, $10,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The paragraph has to do with surveying abandoned reservations, and therefore involves the entire question of surveys. Before we leave the matter that has just been discussed, I want to say a word. As far as I have had anything to do with the matter, it has been with a view of aiding the gentleman from the Northwest and Members to get their lands within land-grant limits surveyed.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. For a question.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman regard his vote against the $35,000 cut out by the amendment of the gentleman from New York as an aid to us?

Mr. MONDELL. Not a penny of that could be used for the survey of land-grant lands.

Mr. BRYAN. I can not understand why cutting it down helps us.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not help you to have that item increased, because not a dollar can be used for surveys within land grants so long as the continuing appropriation is in force. As long as it is on the statute books you can not use any part of this great fund for the survey of such lands. It was with the view of making all these funds available for land-grant surveys that we propose what the department itself suggested repealing—that old, obsolete, archaic law.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield. I have only five minutes. Gentlemen have talked about the reference of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his letter to the continuing appropriation as a $100,000 appropriation. It is not a $100,000 appropriation. It was depleted by the San Bernardino survey several years ago, so that it is only eighty-odd thousand dollars, and it will be further depleted by the provision of law for $25,000 for clerk hire in the city; so it will leave but $47,000, at the best, that can be utilized, and not another dollar of all these great sums can be used for that purpose. This is the ridiculous position in which we find ourselves. No matter how badly settlers may want to have their lands surveyed within the land-grant limits, they do not come within the preferred class at all, and the gentlemen from the Northwest refuse to allow us to put them in the preferred class.

I am not surprised the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] wanted an amendment under which, in addition to keeping this old appropriation that has been of so little value on the statute books, he wanted to make the other appropriation available for land-grant lands, an appropriation which the commissioner himself says he needs for other surveys.

There are one or two curious statements in the commissioner's letter, a letter which, I grant you, puts the gentlemen from the Northwest in an embarrassing position, and I doubt the propriety of writing letters of that kind to Members of Congress. The position taken is, in effect, that while it is true they have not surveyed much of this land in the past, they are going to do it now, and have many parties in the field, which they will take out if we do not do what they want. The commissioner would not, in my opinion, take these parties out of the field with $735,000 available with which to pay them.

Mr. FRENCH rose.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield. He said that $35,000, he understood, was added with the expectation of providing that only this sum could be used for the purpose of surveying land-grant lands. There was no such purpose and there never has been any such purpose at any time. The commissioner is simply misinformed and mistaken in regard to it. We propose to put this item in in such form that all these funds would be available for the survey of land-grant lands. In 1910 I endeavored to make that $100,000 of some real value in the survey of these lands, and it was hoped that by repealing this old, miserable, inadequate, lame, and halting appropriation, largely depleted, and putting the land-grant lands on the same basis as all other lands we could proceed more rapidly with the survey of the 15,000,000 acres of these lands that ought to be surveyed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FRENCH rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to any further discussion of that proposition.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. FRENCH. Is there an amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. There was an amendment pending, but the pro forma amendment, as the Chair understood, was withdrawn.

Mr. FRENCH. I will move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman offers an amendment and then withdraws it, does that preclude another gentleman from offering an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. MANN. Then, I take it, the amendment is in order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. All I want to say is this, in justice to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I took up the matter with him, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office replied to me. In view of the reference to the propriety of officers of the departments writing letters, this statement is due the Commissioner of the General Land Office. This is a matter that I have had up with him repeatedly, and with regard to which I called on him specifically for information.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not the only Member of Congress who received those letters. We all received them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if the Commissioner of the General Land Office or his assistant had taken the trouble to be in the city at the time this matter was under discussion, he would not have found it necessary to resort to the impertinent business of writing letters grossly misstating the fact and misrepresenting the action of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $350,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee relative to the distribution of this fund for topographic surveys among the several States. I do this because of a letter which I have received from the State geologist of our State. He is a very competent man, and I would like to read to the chairman a portion of the letter which bears on this question. He says:

I inclose herein a copy of a bill which is now before the Committee of the House on Expenditures in the Interior Department—

I do not remember what that bill is. He continues—

This bill seeks to provide an equitable distribution of expenditures for topographic and hydrographic surveys among the several States. Michigan has never received its share of expenditures for topographic surveys. Indeed, there are only four other States in the Union which have so little of this work as has the State of Michigan. I do not believe there has been any conscious discrimination against Michigan by the authorities of the United States Geological Survey, but the unequal, and, in my opinion, inequitable distribution of topographic and hydrographic work under the control of the director is matter for the attention of Congress.

I notice from the hearings that there is a very wide latitude in the amount of money expended in the various portions of the country. For instance, I notice on page 876 of the hearings that last year one State alone received $44,413, about one-sixth of the entire appropriation, and running back as far as 1908 that same State has received in all about $200,000 for topographic surveys.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What State was that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The State of California. I have no doubt that there is some special reason why that has been done, but it seems to me that perhaps some explanation ought to be made why it is that such a wide latitude exists in the amount apportioned to the various States.

Mr. FALCONER. Is there any reason why there should be any amount of money expended in the State of Michigan for hydrographic surveys?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am talking about topographic surveys.

Mr. MANN. There is a very great reason why money should be expended for hydrographic surveys in the State of Michigan.

Mr. FALCONER. It occurs to me not so much as where there is vast water power.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. So far as the water power of the State of Michigan is concerned, we have 12 great rivers—6 on the west side and 6 on the east—which, when developed, will furnish enough electric power to turn every wheel in the Middle West.

Mr. MANN. Not to mention the Soo.

Mr. FALCONER. Permit me to say to the gentleman that the Columbia River with her tributaries is capable of furnishing one-third of the entire water power of the United States under the best authority given us by the departments of the United States Government, and Michigan, while it does well, is not in a class with Idaho, Montana, Washington, Oregon, or California.

Mr. MANN. Washington water power is in reality; the other is in a dream.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does the gentleman think one-sixth of this appropriation should be expended in a single State?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not——

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I desire to offer an amendment. Yes: I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman be willing to fuse and merge the river and harbor appropriation of the State of Michigan with other States and compound the two appropriations for rivers and harbors and this geological appropriation?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Our rivers and harbors contribute to the general welfare of the country.

Mr. SLOAN. I presume this does, too; but would the gentleman be willing to merge the two?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am only speaking of this particular appropriation. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk an amendment which I desire to offer to this section. I will say before the amendment is read that this is legislation suggested by the State geologist of Michigan, and he says in his letter that the proposed legislation meets the approval of the State geologists of the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The State geologists are very kind to be willing to take these funds from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I would like to inquire further from the chairman what is the practice as to requiring the different States to put up an equal amount before any funds can be had from the Federal Government? Is that a uniform practice, or simply insisted upon in certain instances?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sixty per cent of the appropriation is now expended in public-land States. I am one of those who believe it should all be expended there. In States that are not public-land States, under the guise of doing some Federal work, the Geological Survey makes arrangements with the State officials to make equal contributions. I think the State of New York put up $8,000 to match that $8,000 to do work which in my opinion more properly should be paid for entirely by the State of New York. This work is being done in Michigan, where Michigan contributes $3,000 in order to get $3,000 out of the Federal Treasury, so that the work shall be done under the supervision of the Geological Survey instead of by the State of Michigan. After we have finished surveying the public lands, the public domain of the States, it is time enough to go into these other outside matters. This committee has endeavored to break up and prevent abuses which existed under this appropriation. Some years ago surveys were made primarily, if not entirely, for the use of a corporation that desired to build an electric railway. In one city in the country there was a topographical survey made for the purpose of adjusting and arranging its sewer system. Every municipality and every State in the country is perfectly willing to have the Geological Survey do all the surveying that is essential for the States and municipalities to perform their proper functions, just as many corporations that desire to utilize water power on some streams over which the Federal Government has no jurisdiction are very happy to have the expenses of determining what power can be generated borne by the United States.

I have no doubt that the State geologist—the one in Michigan and probably the one in New York and those in every other State where there is no public domain—have their greedy eyes fastened upon this appropriation. They probably would be very happy to have it all spent in their respective States, but these States are not infant industries. The gentleman represents a prosperous and wealthy State, well able to perform the things that belong to it. He should write the State geologist and tell him that Michigan is not a beggar knocking at the doors of the Federal Treasury. It is perfectly able and its resources are ample to enable it to do all the functions that belong to that State, and it should have no desire to have the Federal Government encroach upon its domain.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. What does the gentleman say of the State of California. Is it in the beggar class with $44,000 out of this appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Thirty thousand dollars of it was public-land business and $13,000 was for the cooperative work against which California matches $17,000, a better proportion than either in New York or Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course that is one year, but during the past six years it has aggregated $200,000 for California.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true; but there are public lands there and Michigan has no public lands.

Mr. BRYAN. Michigan spent $2,000 and California spent $17,600 and Washington spent $13,760; Michigan does not belong in the same class.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Michigan would not spend any if she could prevent, but would like the Federal Government to do all the work and bear all the expense.

Mr. BRYAN. There are nothing but stump lands in Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, no; but what I was endeavoring to find out is whether the fund was equitably distributed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 16, page 99, after the figures "$350,000," by inserting the following:

"Provided, That hereafter all the appropriations for the United States Geological Survey for topographical surveys in the various portions of the United States, for hydraulic surveys, for gauging the streams and the determination of the water resources, and for the reproduction and publications of the results of all such work, except as may be otherwise specifically allotted by law, shall be expended in accordance with a general regulation, approved by the Secretary of the Interior, which shall provide (1) that a sufficient sum shall first be set aside for general administrative expenses, purchase of instruments, maps of interstate areas or others necessary for studies of fundamental problems not local in character, and for expenditures at the discretion of the Secretary to meet emergencies and contingencies; (2) that the balance available for local field surveys shall be divided for expenditure in all States according to an average of two factors: First, the ratio of State to National population, and, second, the ratio of unmapped area in each State to the total unmapped area in the United States: Provided, however, That in computing this ratio it shall be the intent to exclude all public lands, national forests, national parks, and Alaska so far as classification is practicable, and provided (3) that an additional equitable allotment shall be made to each State on the basis of the amount of unmapped public lands therein contained, and (4) a second additional fair allotment shall be made to those States which by legislative enactment or otherwise contribute funds for cooperative work in topographic and hydraulic surveys, or which through State organizations make like surveys which are accentable to the Secretary of the Interior and available for the use of the United States Geological Survey. The said general regulation shall, furthermore, provide that (5) in States in which 100 per cent of the area has been topographically mapped with a reasonable degree of accuracy the pro rata allotment shall apply for resurveys only to the extent that the State contributes at least an equal amount; (6) that in any State in which the annual pro rata allotment may be too small for economical work surveys shall be made only when credited allotments, and any State funds provided under cooperative agreement have accumulated to the amount necessary for economical expenditure; (7) that the choice of the area to be mapped in each State and the scale to be employed therein shall be based upon consideration of its harmony with the plan for a general map of the whole United States, warranted expense, and its use for geologic investigations and for local needs; (8) that in States in which there are or may be provided administrative officers charged by law with the direction of the cooperative surveys, these officials shall be consulted, and in the event that said State official requests the construction of maps of a larger scale or greater detail than in the opinion of the Secretary is consistent with the plan of a general topographic map of the entire country, such maps may nevertheless be constructed provided the cooperating State pays the extra expense due to their unusual and special character."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that. It is clearly subject to a point of order, and it is occupying the valuable time of the committee to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Let the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to its being printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For geologic surveys in the various portions of the United States, $300,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$300,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000," on page 99, line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 99, line 18, by striking out "$300,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$400,000."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the proposed increase merely brings the appropriation up to the estimate of the department, and even then it would scarcely be in keeping with the increase of business that has been piled onto the Geological Survey.

For instance, there was a time when land was land, and the homesteader, when he went out upon the land, had only to go to the district land office and file on it; but these conditions no longer prevail. Now, when a man seeks to enter a tract of land he first has to determine whether it is mineral or nonmineral, whether it is timbered or nontimbered, whether it is irrigable or nonirrigable land, whether it has or has not power sites, and so forth. The result is that the homesteader has to wait such a time as the Geological Survey can send their men out there and determine the character of the land.

It is poor economy to keep the homesteader waiting until the Geological Survey can get money enough to go out and make the necessary investigation. I appreciate the work of the Committee on Appropriations to pare down expenses and carve estimates, but recently in the West, and in fact in the whole United States, there has been a complete change of sentiment with reference to the methods of entering public lands. For instance, Government inspectors now have to go out and look at each individual tract of land to see to it that valuable coal deposits are not taken up by some homesteader, and, further, to see to it that somebody does not take up 320 acres of land for an enlarged homestead that has water power on it, or coal on it, or timber on it, or other minerals. The conservation people of the country insist that these lands shall be examined, and the Geological Survey has made a strenuous effort to keep in touch with the public sentiment along that line. But they can not do it unless you give them money enough to do the work. A constant pressure is exerted and a constant stream of complaints has come in from chambers of commerce, from homestead settlers' organizations, and from individual homesteaders to the Committee on the Public Lands, asking us to do something about it. The Committee on the Public Lands has no power to appropriate for these surveys. It has no power of appropriation. The only means of the Geological Survey to secure this money is first to suggest to the Interior Department the propriety of estimating for the money they need to run their department.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. In addition to the work thrown upon the Geological Survey, do they not also have to make reports on the flow of water in canals under the desert-land entries?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; but the item for that comes in a little later—further over. The homestead act of 1909, which enlarged the size of the homestead from 160 acres to 320 acres, provides that the land is not enterable at all under the law if it is irrigable from any known source of supply, so that the Geological Survey has to send men out in each instance to determine the character of the land and determine whether there is mineral or timber on it or whether it is irrigable. These facts must be determined, and the department can not do it without money.

I dislike to offer amendments increasing the amounts of appropriation bills, but the department for four or five years has estimated increases for these purposes, and their work has constantly piled up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department estimated for only $300,000 in 1913 and 1914.

Mr. FERRIS. I have the figures somewhere. But if the gentleman has the figures correct, I will accept them. Anyway, they estimated for $450,000 in 1913 and you turned them down and gave them only $300,000. This year, in 1914, the Geological Survey asked for $450,000 and the Secretary's office cut the estimate down to $400,000. The estimate as it reached you was for $400,000 and you gave them $300,000. They need the amount of their estimate and deserve it.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman say that the Geological Survey asked for $450,000?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and the Secretary cut it down to $400,000.

Mr. GARNER. Did they ask for $400,000 this year?

Mr. FERRIS. They asked for $450,000 this year and for $400,000 last year. The department asks for what they feel themselves entitled to and what they actually need. The Committee on Appropriations comes in here with a report cutting them down and paying no attention to their necessities. Other committees, that have given long and extended attention to matters related to public lands and who have examined the matter closely, never know until the bill is reported what has been given. I and other members of the Committee on Public Lands sought to present to the Committee on Appropriations what ought to be done in this regard, but we were not successful in that endeavor, and so the only thing we can do is to come here and ask the House to do what ought to be done, and that is to give the Geological Survey enough money so that they can perform the duties imposed upon them by existing law.

There are many other things that can be said, but committees of settlers and committees of chambers of commerce all over the country are asking that this work be done. It is not a large matter. It is what deserves to be done. We spend millions for all sorts of things, but when it comes to real work and real srevice the economy howl is heard from afar.

People engaged and interested in conservation of natural resources are making appeals to the Geological Survey to go on and make these investigations, which the survey can not do unless you give it money. I think it is a poor sort of economy to impose upon a department a duty and then withhold from that department the money it needs in the performance of that duty.

I know the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will in a moment say that these departments ask for more than they are entitled to, and more than they ought to have; but I come back at him and say that after eight years' service on the Committee on Public Lands, and after an intimate acquaintance with the affairs along that line, I know that they do need the money, and the appeals that come to me every day will disclose that fact.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. KENT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it the part of common sense that our Government should know what its own assets are? That is what I understand is the thing that the Geological Survey is to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Oklahoma may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. I may not use it all.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would take time now to tell what they do with this money.

Mr. FERRIS. I can do so in a word. In 1909 the Congress passed this enlarged-homestead bill. That bill provides that lands of a certain character can be entered under the 320-acre law. In other words, they must know whether the lands are nonirrigable from any known source of water supply. The Geological Survey has to go out and determine whether any irrigation is possible from either a subterranean or surface flow of water. It has also to determine whether there is any coal on the land, whether there is any other mineral on the land, whether there is any water power on the land. If so, it is not subject to any form of homestead entry. That is a part of what they do. In addition to that, they go through the other States, and, as has been suggested here and has been shown by the hearings, it is their plan to make topographical and other geological observations to determine whether there is oil, gas, or mineral in any part of the country, in order to let the people know what the country actually has within it. This is work in the public interest. It is good sense to know what is going on with our resources.

Mr. MANN. Is that so where the land has not been withdrawn on account of these objects?

Mr. FERRIS. Absolutely. For example——

Mr. MANN. I mean before it is withdrawn, is that so?

Mr. FERRIS. Absolutely. For instance if to-morrow a homesteader in the State of Montana should apply to the Land Office for an enlarged homestead, the application would not be allowed, but it would be sent to the General Land Office here in Washington and by that office sent to the Geological Survey, and the Geological Survey must have their expert men with expert knowledge go there and determine what that land is, whether it is coal or noncoal, irrigable or nonirrigable, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. If the Geological Survey know that there is no stream within 40 miles, that there is no coal in that neighborhood, and no oil in that part of the country, do they still have to send somebody out there on the ground to see if that is the case?

Mr. FERRIS. The fact that there is no surface indication does not necessarily mean that there is nothing of the kind there.

Mr. MANN. My question was a fair one. Do they have to send out somebody under such circumstances?

Mr. FERRIS. They do.

Mr. MANN. I should think the gentleman's committee would reform that.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think it ought to be reformed. There was a time when a man could step up to the Land Office and file on land, whether it was agricultural land or whether it was mineral land. That was a mistake then, and it will not be remedied unless we make it possible to correct it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated that that was true as to every individual homestead application.

Mr. FERRIS. Every enlarged homestead application; yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield just a moment? I think the chairman of the Public Lands Committee [Mr. FERRIS] did not fully understand the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. The question was a very plain, simple one.

Mr. FRENCH. It often happens that the department has sufficient data, so that an application can be acted upon promptly, without requiring a specific examination for that particular case.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course, if they have topographical maps and data, or special agents' reports, then they do not have to send somebody there to do the work a second time, but I am assuming that when land has never been examined at all they ought to examine it. Water-power sites have crept away from us, coal lands have slipped through the fingers of the Government, mineral lands have been lost to the Government just because we did not give the Geological Survey enough money to go and find out what the land actually was.

But that is not all. If the public was not interested, the homesteaders themselves are interested, because they are held up for weeks, months, and years awaiting a time when the Federal Government can determine whether the land is subject to entry or not. That condition ought not to continue longer. This bill has been carved down about $23,000,000 below the estimates, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will accept this amendment and let the Geological Survey have what they are entitled to in order to go on with their work.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Is it not the policy of the Government to make topographical maps of the entire United States?

Mr. FERRIS. It is, as far as they can.

Mr. GARNER. If we give them additional money, can they not do that more rapidly?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And if it is an advantage to have this work done, why not let them go on and do it as fast as possible?

Mr. FERRIS. I presume we could not do it all in one year, but this is only asking that the bald, bare, naked estimates be given.

When this work began in 1906, from then until 1909 the work did not amount to anything, but the public pulse of the country has grown until the demands are such that the land must be examined, and we must know what it is before we let it go. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised that the members of the Committee on the Public Lands, who have taken such an interest in this appropriation, did not go to the trouble of finding how the money was being spent. If they had inquired into the question of how the money appropriated was being expended, perhaps their grievance would have been with the Director of the Geological Survey rather than with the members of the Committee on Appropriations. The sum of $300,000 has been appropriated for this purpose each year since 1911. In 1910 the appropriation was $225,000, and then back for some years it was $200,000.

In addition to the $300,000 carried in this item, the Director of the Geological Survey receives $35,000 from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to make the classifications requested under certain provisions of the law. Up to about four years ago between 60 and 70 per cent of this money was expended outside of the public domain of the United States. It was not expended in ascertaining the character of the public domain or the resources of the Federal Government, but it was expended in making surveys of certain private property for the benefit of great corporations and large interests. Certain members of the Committee on Appropriations, including myself, inquired vigorously into the matter. As a result, we have now succeeded in having arrangements made by which 60 per cent of the amount appropriated is spent on the public domain. If the entire 100 per cent were so expended, there would be no difficulty whatever. During the course of the investigation I asked the Director of the Geological Survey:

Where are your investigations made now? Are all of them on the public domain?

Mr. SMITH. They are distributed all over the United States, but the larger part of the appropriation is expended in the public-land States. About 60 per cent of the appropriation is allotted to geologic work in the public-land States.

The CHAIRMAN. Where is the 40 per cent spent and on what kind of work? How did you get that arrangement of 60 per cent and 40 per cent?

Mr. SMITH. Some years ago the percentage spent in the Eastern States was rather larger than what was spent in the Western States, and I have been influenced by the members of the Appropriations Committee to increase the percentage year by year.

The CHAIRMAN. The men from the Eastern States believe this money ought to be spent on the public domain?

Mr. SMITH. The four men who largely influenced the change in policy were Representatives from Iowa, Minnesota, Kentucky, and New York.

These gentlemen were Judge Smith, of Iowa; Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota; Mr. SHERLEY, of Kentucky; and myself. The Committee on Public Lands never was interested, never knew, never had any knowledge of the manner in which these appropriations were being expended. They were expended for the investigation of resources of the anthracite region in Pennsylvania, or private holdings in Tennessee and Kentucky, and to ascertain other resources in the Eastern States for the benefit of private individuals. Because the Director of the Geological Survey could not have the appropriation increased this year, he had declined to increase the recommendation from $300,000 to $400,000 and said that the committee was attempting to prevent the proper investigation of the resources of the United States and the classification of the public domain.

I desire to compel the Director of the Geological Survey to spend this money where the law contemplates that it should be spent, spent on the public domain and not upon private property for the benefit of individuals. If this appropriation be increased, it may increase the amount spent on the public domain, but we will continue the same percentage—40 per cent of $300,000—for the benefit of private interests. I think they should pay for their own investigations. I believe great corporations owning great land holdings, believing that they possess great mineral wealth, should pay for their own investigations of these lands and not have it done at the expense of the Federal Government. If the gentlemen on the Committee on the Public Lands will cooperate with the Committee on Appropriations, this entire $300,000, in addition to the $35,000 paid from the appropriation for the survey of public lands, will be spent on the public domain for the benefit of the homesteader seeking to get his homestead, and will not be spent in the interest of great corporations who are desirous of having their properties investigated and reported upon by officials of the United States at the expense of the United States, so that they may be exploited for their own profit.

These are the facts. I have no desire to prevent these classifications and investigations, but I know what this committee has been struggling against for years. It has been struggling to shake off the grip and the influence and the power of these great interests that have been able to have diverted more than 50 per cent of this appropriation for the investigation of private property, or for investigations not contemplated by the law. If it be made to appear in no uncertain terms that this money must be expended, first, primarily, on the public domain in the interest of the settlers on public lands, there will be ample funds for those who want the lands surveyed, and the private holdings will have to have their surveys made at their own expense.

I hope the committee will not adopt this amendment; to do so will be to encourage the practice that has been followed in the past. We wish to break it up. It is a vicious practice and ought not to be tolerated. The money appropriated for this purpose should be spent where it belongs, upon the public domain. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has said, I want to call attention of the committee to the fact that in addition to the examination required of the desert-land entries to determine whether or not there are any minerals, it is the duty to-day, and every final proof requires an investigation in the field of whether or not there are water rights belonging to their lands. They investigate the articles of incorporation. There have been cases pending for five years in which the Geological Survey has gone over it to determine whether or not there are any interests there that should be protected and whether or not the water right belongs to the individual claimant.

In addition to that, the Geological Survey has to go out and determine the character of the land where men are seeking reservoir sites. Men have been held up for three or four years because there was no opportunity for the Geological Survey to go out and make an examination and report to the General Land Office so that they could determine the matter, and they have been held up.

There is a case at hand where a man came to Washington a short time ago, and his claim had been held up three years. There was plenty of water, plenty of land—over 1,000 acres plowed; no water to put on it, because they would not permit him to put in a dam to hold the flood water, which was running to waste, because there was no examination made by the Geological Survey. This man had to go out and expend from $10,000 to $15,000 to buy hay over the country, when he could have raised it on his own ground and improved and developed the country. It was only during the last two or three weeks that he got the thing through.

Now, that thing occurs every day in relation to coal lands. Investigations must be made by the Geological Survey, and land that was sold for $10 an acre a few years ago has brought this Government in one instance in Wyoming nearly a million dollars. After a long investigation surveys in the oil fields of Wyoming and California are being made use of in the Attorney General's Office to the end that the Government interests may be protected and may be maintained so that its vast wealth in oil shall not be turned over to the Southern Pacific, the Santa Fe, and to private individuals that are desirous of gathering up all the oil lands in the country.

It is the same way in regard to the phosphates. This department needs money to make further examination and surveys. The same is true in regard to sodium. Now, I want to tell you that there is nothing that has retarded the general improvement of the public domain in the West as this waiting for examinations—for the want of money to make them, final proofs under the desert land law, applications to have reservoir sites, those desirous of obtaining coal lands legitimately, those who are legitimately trying to get oil lands—than the fact that there is an insufficient amount of money to make the first examination after the people have made applications and expended money, and have irrigated the land in certain instances, so that they may have an opportunity to obtain their patent.

Take one instance in northern California. That is a sample. Men went out and built a large ditch, costing in the neighborhood of $100,000. They got the water on the land, and then some four years later the Government claimed that the water was not of proper quality to irrigate the land. These men were held up during this time, and they have not even had their certificates of purchase issued, let alone their patents.

When the classification of the public lands by the Geological Survey began in 1906 the appropriation items under which the work was then and is now mostly done aggregated $410,000. These two items, both for the current year and as reported by the committee in the pending sundry civil bill, amount to $450,000, a net increase of only $40,000 since 1906. In the past seven or eight years the whole public-land policy has changed. Coal lands belonging to the United States are now sold as coal lands at prices varying with the tonnage and quality of the coal itself. No longer are these valuable lands allowed to be stripped by the Coal Trust or homesteaded by the dummies of those corporations.

In carrying out this new policy each Secretary of the Interior has made larger calls upon the Geological Survey to report on the facts. These facts must be learned in the field by trained engineers. The results of this change in the public-lands policy are large and important; many thousands of acres of coal lands fraudulently entered by the corporation have been restored to the public domain by the General Land Office and Department of Justice, and large damages assessed for coal already mined, on the basis of Geological Survey reports as to the tonnage involved. Suits also are pending against the Southern Pacific for California oil lands, and here again the field data of the Geological Survey have been largely used by the representatives of the Department of Justice.

In the matter of coal-land valuation the cost, including all field surveys and office work, amounts to only a few cents an acre, yet in one Wyoming sale the difference between the selling price per acre under the new valuation policy and $20 an acre, the legal minimum, amounted to a quarter of a million dollars—an appreciable contribution to the reclamation fund, which, however, did not raise the price of the coal to the consumer a single cent. Thus these coal-land surveys are in reality revenue producing, and illustrate the kind of business policy that any private landowner would adopt.

The coal-land work on the public domain is only part of the new burden placed upon the Geological Survey. Other new laws, the enlarged homestead act of 1909 and the withdrawal act of 1910, require action by the Secretary of the Interior and the President, necessitating recommendations by the Director of the Geological Survey based on facts gained through field examinations by geologic and hydraulic engineers. The designations of nonirrigable lands properly opened to 320-acre homestead entries were made in 1909 and 1910 largely on the basis of field data collected by the Geological Survey in its general investigations in the Western States during many years previous. Now, the demand for these designations, a demand that comes directly from the settlers in the West, is increasing by leaps and bounds, and the Geological Survey finds itself unable to keep pace, or at least to materially cut down the arrears in petitions already accumulated. Naturally the petitions that remain unacted upon are largely those that must wait for more field information, and the Geological Survey needs more money to enable it to put engineers in the field to visit each of the localities where these settlers are asking for an opportunity to enter the lands that they believe come under the terms of the enlarged-homestead act. Since last July 182 such petitions have been received from California and only 116 acted upon, yet the survey is now acting upon nearly twice as many petitions per month as it did a year ago. Congress has written into this law the requirement of a classification. In 1909 the item for water-resource investigations under which this field work is largely done was increased $50,000, but even now it is $50,000 below the $200,000 appropriation made by Congress for 1906 and the three years immediately preceding.

So also with the various irrigation and other right-of-way acts, the Carey Act, and the desert-land act; the accumulated work represents applications by the public, reports on which are needed by the administrative officer of the department, as pointed out to the Appropriations Committee. (See hearings, p. 906.) The pending water-power cases involve over a third of a million horsepower and 400 miles of transmission lines. Has not the West a right to ask prompt action on such matters? There is every reason, however, to believe that the Geological Survey can not move faster without a larger field force.

The mineral-land examinations under the item of geologic surveys are no less important. Millions of acres of the Nation's richest mineral lands await classification by the Geological Survey, not only coal and petroleum lands, but the hardly less important areas of phosphate rock, upon the utilization of which the largest agricultural development of the West will soon depend. This geologic field force needs to be expanded rather than reduced, but unless the appropriation is increased this year there must be an actual reduction by reason of the termination of a transfer of appropriation from the General Land Office for coal-land work. See hearings before the Appropriation Committee, page 887.

The Western States also need prompt reports on their mining districts, and in California there is good reason to believe that both in metals and oil the treasures of the earth are not yet all discovered. The limitation of work by the Federal bureau gives just that much advantage to the big corporations who have their geologists and their engineers serving them to a larger degree each year. The technical bureaus of the Government are in reality the special servants of the general mass of citizens who can not afford to employ experts in private practice, but must depend necessarily on the Federal bureaus for authoritative information.

While the most urgent need of increase in field activities of the Geological Survey is in the West, it is important also that more work be taken up in the Eastern States. This is mentioned in a note in the estimates of appropriations. The demand for resumption of the stream-gauging work in the Southeastern States has been requested by many of the Congressmen from those States and the work is much needed. A similar statement might be made regarding the demand for geologic work in the States of Oklahoma, Texas, and Louisiana, further development of these oil resources being in reality of national importance rather than of merely sectional interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I favor the amendment of the gentleman from California.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Has not debate on the amendment closed? Debate can be but five minutes under the five-minute rule. The gentleman favors the amendment, and debate on that is exhausted, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Connecticut that he supposes that if the gentleman were not allowed to proceed he would move to strike out the last word. The Chair thought that in the interest of orderly procedure and with a view of expediting the consideration of this bill the gentleman might proceed, so far as the Chair was concerned.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word so as to get by the objection of the gentleman from Connecticut. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a few moments ago asked the gentleman from Oklahoma whether or not this money was being expended, and, if so, how it was being expended. That question occurs to the average man who knows anything about the land question, and it is a perplexing problem to the man who would settle on land. It does seem that very little of this money has been expended judiciously or for the advantage of the public, and yet I believe that the amendment should be adopted. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], chairman of the committee, laid great stress upon the fact that we ought not to expend 40 per cent or any per cent of this money for private individuals or corporations, that it should be expended on the public lands. It occurs to me, and I think it does to a good many men on the floor, that private corporations do not wait for the United States Government to go out and make a survey of a water power anywhere.

The Great Northern Railroad Co., as an example, at Chelan Falls, Lake Chelan, Wash., developed a magnificent water power and did not wait for the United States Government to get data to guide it. That is to the credit and enterprise of that company. No one blames the Great Northern or any other company. We admire their thrift and enterprise, but I believe we should expend a reasonable amount for the purpose of ascertaining the resources of the country and classifying them.

There is a conspicuous lack of knowledge on the matter of land classification in the West, and it causes much distress. A man files on a piece of land as a homestead. After he has filed on it some prospector comes along and finds a little quartz vein on the land and presents himself at the land office and enters a contest, and then the homesteader has to go to the local office, and after hearings and a decision the case is carried to the Land Department in Washington, and perhaps after several years of contest the homesteader defeats the contester and settles again to his everyday task of improving his holdings, when he is again interrupted by an order withdrawing his land for water-power purposes, resulting in another long grind before the several branches of the department.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FALCONER. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Is not that rather the fault of the law than the lack of appropriations?

Mr. FALCONER. You can not get——

Mr. HOWARD. Is there not some way to determine these contests?

Mr. FALCONER. The idea is to prevent contests by having a more thorough classification. The department ought to know in the outset whether land is agricultural, timber, or mineral land. Thousands of acres of the finest timberland in the country have been taken up under false assumption—and they proved it to the satisfaction of the Government—that it is mineral land. Give the appropriation to the department to do the work and hold the department responsible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. FALCONER was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if I can not arrange some time within which to conclude the debate upon this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we would like 15 minutes over here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well. I will ask unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have two or three minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 33 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, I believe the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], was to a certain extent unfair. We can seldom accuse him of unfairness, but he intimated that all of this money that was spent in nonpublic-land States was spent for the benefit of large corporations and monopolies.

Now, as a matter of fact, it is to the interests of our entire country to have a knowledge of the topography, the physical geography, and the mineral resources in all the States, even where all lands are in private ownership. This is for the benefit of every one and especially for the small man's benefit. The large corporations mentioned by the gentleman from New York can afford to pay, but the small fellows can not. The Government, at a small expense, can do what would in the aggregate of private expenditure be a vast expense and almost impossible of accomplishment. As far as the big corporations are concerned, they naturally pay for their own examinations, but small owners, who are equally interested in knowing what underlies, can not afford to pay for topographical work or for a geological survey, however rudimentary.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I listened to the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] with a great deal of interest, and I would like to hear the gentleman from California explain what benefit there is for a Government survey made geologically of the anthracite coal fields owned by the big interests in Pennsylvania?

Mr. KENT. I should say I think there is no proper interest in doing it except in a general way, except in such terms as would go to show the total resources of the country, what it will produce, and how it should be handled and taxed; but in my opinion the greater portion of the work should be done in the public-land States. There is no doubt there is necessity for certain work to be done in other States. We are expending money now teaching the farmers how to raise hogs, how to protect those hogs from hog cholera; we are sending out farmers' bulletins on all manner of farm topics. Why are we not justified in making topographical surveys, which work—for instance, in the matter of drainage and erosion—leads to the proper use of land that is in private hands, just as we protect hogs and cattle that are in private hands by the furnishing of reliable and disinterested information?

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENT. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to ask the gentleman one thing. Down here in Mississippi, Mr. Smith stated:

> In the drainage work the most detailed work in the East has been done in the State of Mississippi, in the Yazoo Delta, where we met the request of the State for a cooperative survey that cost something like $50 a square mile, and we put up about fifteen and the State between two and three times as much.

Here we have money spent on private lands, but is not that a private work, and is not that money well spent?

Mr. KENT. I believe so. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in this appropriation and the proposed increase solely from the standpoint of its use on the public lands. In that part of the State in which I live there is a mineralized belt that runs from the southwestern to the northeastern corner. It is about 50 miles wide. The mineral does not appear in every part of the belt, but the mineral is scattered all through that section. There are some of the very best agricultural lands that are now open to entry by homesteaders in that section. People come to this locality from every State in the Union seeking homes on the public lands. Agricultural lands are found scattered throughout this belt. For instance, here is a little elevation with a little stream running through that, with a number of streams branching out from it. It is a very well-watered section and this land will make good homes. Immediately after settlers have made their applications to make entry they are met with the proposition that their entry can not be allowed by reason of the fact that the land in some parts of that section is mineral land. They must wait, having their application in suspense, until the department here in Washington has had time and has found the money to send out some persons to investigate that and other entries in the locality. If the entries numbered 10 or 100 it would be a matter of comparatively small moment, but in this section they number many hundreds and thousands, and the settlers are there on the land at an expense, not knowing whether they ought to invest the money brought with them in clearing up the land, in building houses and barns, and making various improvements, and in breaking up the soil and trying to make a crop. They do not know whether, after having expended every dollar they brought with them, it may be decided that the land is mineral and they have no right to enter it. The time between the time a man goes on the land with his wife and children and the time he knows whether he can make a home on it ought to be the least time possible.

He ought not to be held there in suspense. The surface of many of these lands is agricultural land, but down underneath the surface in this belt there may be coal; there are gold and silver and copper. The veins may come in from some surrounding district and run down deep under the soil. But still it may be regarded as so valuable for mining that the land ought to be reserved as mineral land instead of being entered as agricultural land. If the homesteader is to be kept off his land, if the proposing settler is to be denied the land, he ought to know it before he has bankrupted himself in improving the land.

I have taken up the matter with the department time after time, and my files are full of letters of this kind. The homesteaders say, "We are on the land. We have waited two or three years. We do not know whether we can get the land or not. We had $500 or $1,000 or $2,000 when we came into the State. It has largely been consumed on subsistence during this period of waiting." I have sent letters of that kind over to the Geological Survey with a request for an answer. They say it is a matter that they will look into; that they will investigate it as soon as they have men and money to do it.

I have had hundreds of letters like that in the course of my service here, and there are people who have waited two or three or four or five or six or seven years, and their entries are still undetermined. The $100,000 additional that we ask is a moderate sum. Many of these people who went out there and spent half the money that they brought with them, or a greater proportion, finding the delays there so costly, have left that part of the country and have gone into Canada, where they can more speedily determine the question of their right to enter the lands they have selected. They are people of the best blood and brain and brawn, from all sections of the United States; some of them from New York State, and some from South Carolina, and some from Georgia and Illinois and Iowa and Kansas and Nebraska and all the Middle States of the West; and they are there waiting in suspense to know whether that piece of land can be taken by them as a homestead, or whether they will be denied the right to enter it.

I appeal to the House that this is a case of spending money on public land for a public purpose, for work that must be done some time, and it seems to me right and just that it should be done as speedily as possible, so that the poor men who have comparatively small sums of money may be able to use their money on the development of the land and not be kept waiting until it is exhausted on subsistence, and they find themselves without either land or resources. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, there were two statements made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] which, I think, are desirable to notice. One was that the department, in making its estimates, estimated $300,000 as a sufficient sum to cover the work indicated by this item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say that. I said the estimate was $400,000.

Mr. WATKINS. Then I stand corrected, Mr. Chairman, because I have in my hand a document which shows a necessity for the $400,000. It comes from the Geological Survey. Then the department has estimated this amount of $400,000. The Committee of the Whole is now asked to vote upon the proposition as to whether the Committee on Appropriations shall be sustained in its recommendation that the estimate be cut 25 per cent and reduced down to $300,000.

If it is a fact that the department does not need the $400,000, then as a matter of economy it is our duty to vote for $300,000, as carried in the bill. But if the facts justify the department in asking for the $400,000, then it is our duty to respond to that demand.

The other statement made by the gentleman from New York—and I hope I am not misquoting him on that proposition—was that these investigations were often made, or at least were sometimes made, for powerful individuals and corporations, to the exclusion or detriment of the small holders and the Government. On that question I submit a few facts. In the northwestern part of the State of Louisiana, in the fourth congressional district, which I have the honor to represent, there is one of the largest oil and gas fields in this country. When the first indications pointed to the fact that there were deposits of oil there and gas was discovered in small quantities, the Geological Survey made an investigation on a small scale, and as a result of that investigation millions on top of millions of dollars has been added to the revenues of the people of that section of the country, and incidentally to the revenues of the Government itself, because there were large quantities of public land at that time in that section.

The small landowners, however, were not able on their own account to employ experts to go there. The rich corporations, the great oil companies of this country, went in there to develop those fields, paying their experts $20, $25, $50, and sometimes $100 a day, and they were enabled to a large extent to monopolize these holdings in these oil lands. In a short time, however, the President, by Executive proclamation, prevented the settlement of these lands by homestead entry, and they have been tied up for the last five or six years, so that no settler can enter upon the lands for homestead entry in the whole northwestern part of the State of Louisiana.

If this appropriation were made, the Chief of the Geological Survey could send out his experts there and ascertain on what particular sections, quarter sections, and sixteenth sections these oil indications are, and in this way enable the citizens there who want to settle up these lands to make homestead entries, which they have been debarred from doing during the continuation of that Executive order.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether the Geological Survey claims to be able to locate the places where oil is to be found?

Mr. WATKINS. They give indications pointing to certain facts, which enable experts to determine approximately the locality—not definitely or explicitly, but with that degree of certainty which will enable parties to go ahead with their prospects and make investigations; and enormous amounts of oil and gas have been developed from the cursory and superficial surveys made in this section years ago.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman give the committee any place where they have ever done that?

Mr. WATKINS. I am just giving you that illustration right now. Since that time large fields have been discovered which were not covered by this survey.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I trust this amendment will be adopted. With reference to the suggestion that has been made, that the operations of the survey upon private lands are in the interest of large corporations, I wish to say that the truth is exactly the opposite. We ought to provide facilities for the Geological Survey to work upon privately owned lands as well as publicly owned lands, because the benefits of the Geological Survey is not to the great monopolies and trusts, that can employ their own engineers and make their own investigations, but it comes to the little corporation and the little man, who can not employ these $100-a-day men. And when there is development in a certain field it is of great public interest to know the extent of that field and the amount of its resources; and it is right here that the Geological Survey is rendering a great public service on privately owned lands as well as publicly owned lands.

As to the publicly owned lands, Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting all winter as a member of the Committee on the Public Lands, and during this session of Congress that committee has dealt with almost every phase of our mineral resources. During the sittings of that committee we have had before us almost every day the Director of the Geological Survey, Dr. Smith. During all of that time Dr. Smith has shown by his attitude that there is no truth in the intimation that the survey favors large interests, because there has been no man before that committee who has been more earnest or more desirous for the public welfare and the conservation of our national resources still owned by the United States than the Director of the Geological Survey.

As to the many matters that this committee has considered, upon which it has reported bills to this House which are now upon the calendar and will shortly be voted upon, I hope, so far as these matters are concerned, if we have been justified in the past in the expenditures we have made for the Geological Survey—and we have—the work now before the survey would justify not only this increase, but a much larger increase. Therefore, upon both grounds—upon the ground of the necessity of this expenditure upon publicly owned lands and upon the ground of the necessity of this expenditure upon privately owned lands—they are all in the public interest, and this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I can not support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma. I should be willing to increase the item by $50,000, but I do not think a condition exists and I do not think any statements were made before the committee justifying so large an increase as is proposed. There should beyond question be an increase of this item by $35,000. It is necessary to do that in order to keep the appropriation in the same amount that it is at the present time, by reason of the fact that at the present time and for a number of years past the General Land Office has been turning over to the Geological Survey out of its appropriation for the survey of public lands the sum of $35,000. My understanding is that the commissioner has informed the Director of the Geological Survey that he will not make that apportionment the coming fiscal year, and I think he ought not to. I do not believe he is justified or ever was justified in doing it.

Now, this item should be increased by at least $35,000, somewhere between $35,000 and $50,000, in order to retain the item in as large an amount as is now available. It is true that if all the work that gentlemen have outlined and suggested and referred to as needing to be done in the West were done under this item, then it should be increased not $100,000, but $200,000 or $300,000.

The fact is that the ordinary examination of lands of settlers is never made under this item of expenditure. Such examinations are made in the main under the item carried in the bill on page 94, "depredations on the public domain," and so forth, "$475,000." But the Geological Survey has a largely increased and increasing work in the matter of general classifications which is done under this item. At my request and suggestion there was given, and is found on page 899 of our hearings, a statement showing the classified expenditures under this appropriation, showing that 30 per cent approximately of the entire appropriation is used directly and exclusively for land classification. That being the case, it shows there is a very considerable increase in the work of the bureau under this head in the last few years. Work that is done exclusively by the survey under this appropriation includes classification under the enlarged homestead act, classification that will be enlarged and increased if the homestead bill now reported from the Committee on Public Lands becomes a law. All coal classifications are made under this appropriation. So that while all of the work which gentlemen have referred to is not done under this appropriation, a very large amount of very important work is done, and the appropriation ought to be retained at least in the amount which is now available. Unless we increase the item by $35,000 the bureau will not have as much the coming fiscal year as it has available this year.

Should the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma not be carried, I expect to offer an amendment increasing the item by $50,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The gentleman from Wyoming very properly calls attention to the fact that if this item be not increased at all the Geological Survey will have $35,000 less this year than it had last year, owing to the fact that the General Land Office has been loaning $35,000 to the Geological Survey, which they will no longer do and can not do. If my amendment is adopted, therefore, it would only give them $65,000 more than they now have. The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, in some remarks indicated that the funds in the past had been used for the benefit of private lands. I take it from looking over the hearings that some members of the committee were in favor of that. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] goes on to show—I will not take the time to read it—that sometimes it is very important for the Government to know what is on private land.

The gentleman from New York indicates that some money has been used for the benefit of corporations. I do not know what he refers to or means, but I undertake to say that the Director of the Geological Survey has never expended a cent except for the public interests. He has been before our committee for two months helping us to get out some important legislation, and every time the public interest was at stake he took his position on that side and against the other side. I am sure that a man who is so faithful in helping to prepare bills relating to the public interest would be faithful in the expenditure of this money. I do not think it is right to criticize an officer who has for years and years faithfully and patriotically administered the affairs of his department, to say that because he may or may not have investigated some lands in the anthracite-coal district that thereby it was wrong. Probably it was for the purpose of determining what the amount of coal is in the United States. It has been very important to know what minerals there are in the Territory of Alaska, so that we have spent or are to spend $35,000,000 for a railway up there, and why is it not sufficient to appropriate a few extra dollars to determine what is in the land of the United States? Why not know what is contained in our Nation's granary, so we can intelligently administer the same?

No one is more for economy than I, but to be penny-wise and pound-foolish is not a seductive argument to me.

This money is needed. It ought to have been reported by the committee and avoid this proceeding.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Since this question came up I have called up the Secretary of the Interior and discussed this matter with him. He says the idea that any of this money had been expended for private use anywhere is not carried out by the records of the office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And he does not know any more about it than the gentleman from California.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on page 891 of the hearings they were discussing this very proposition as to whether any of this money should be used in private-land States, and this is what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] said:

Mr. SHERLEY. The ownership by the Government of land makes investigation of its land of greater value to them than the investigation of privately owned land only in the sense that it enables the Government better to know what price it ought to receive when selling land; but so far as the development of the mineral resources of the country is concerned, it is just as important to know the resources of privately owned land as Government-owned land.

I will present herewith the hearings before the committee that show the necessity of this appropriation:

GAUGING STREAMS AND DETERMINING WATER SUPPLY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SHERLEY. The next item is "For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources."

You have for the current year $150,000 and your estimate is for $200,000. What is the condition of your appropriation?

Mr. SMITH. That was the amount of the appropriation 10 years ago and at the present time there are larger demands for this special phase of the work of the Geological Survey than there have been in the past, especially by reason of the land classification work.

Mr. SHERLEY. First, let us get back to my concrete question. What is the condition of the appropriation?

Mr. SMITH. Last year there was an unexpended balance under this appropriation of $1,360; not because we did not need to spend that amount of money, but it is difficult to exactly measure the expenditures under any one of our field appropriations; not to overrun and still to expend the full amount. On that account that is not to be taken as an indication that the money was not needed. Under the appropriation for the present year the unincumbered balance is $7,500, all of which I expect will be taken up at the beginning of the field season.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does all of his money go for salaries?

Mr. SMITH. The reason that the salary list printed in the estimate is in excess of the total appropriation comes from the fact that we cooperate with the various States, especially in the West, and the $150,000 is simply the amount of Federal funds. In making out the salary list account was not taken of the funds from the cooperating States.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is the extent of those contributions?

Mr. SMITH. I will have to insert that. It is in the neighborhood of $130,000. It ranges from about $20,000 received from California down to a few hundred dollars received from States like West Virginia, Wyoming, Connecticut, and Vermont.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the note to the bill you state "contributions from this branch to public-land administration have become large." What is the nature of those contributions?

Mr. SMITH That comes in connection with the land classification which is now an integral part of the administration of the public lands by the Interior Department.

Mr. SHEPLEY. How?

Mr. SMITH. There are two types of classification; that relating to minerals, which is provided for under the appropriation for geologic surveys, and the hydrographic classification under this item. Now, we have several kinds of cases that are put up to us for report. First of all, we have the administration of the enlarged homestead act, which depends upon the designation by the Secretary of the Interior whether the land is irrigable or nonirrigable, that act being applicable to the nonirrigable lands on the public domain; and under that we make reports to the Secretary on the basis of which he designates certain lands as available for entry in 320-acre tracts rather than in 160-acre tracts as under the ordinary homestead. That work has very largely increased this year. It comes to us in the form of petitions from the intending entrymen, those petitions sometimes representing two or three settlers, and in other cases representing 20 or 40 settlers. When this law was passed, back in 1909, the average receipt of petitions of this kind amounted to 15 per month. That increased gradually until 1912 we received on an average 92 per month. Last year we received 300 per month and in the three months of this year we are receiving nearly 500 per month. We have in a similar way increased the rate at which we handle these cases, but not sufficiently to prevent our work getting in arrears. So that at the present time there are something like 1,300 of these cases that are unacted upon, in spite of the fact that last month we acted upon 485 such petitions.

Designations: The greater part of the designations of nonirrigable lands thus far made was promulgated during the first year after the passage of the act, nearly 160,000,000 acres being designated within six months of its passage. Since that time the areas have varied from year to year, the general tendency being toward a smaller area each year, because of the increased difficulty of separating the irrigable from the nonirrigable lands in the remaining areas. The accompanying table shows the area which has been designated each year since the passage of the act, and in comparison therewith the number of petitions acted on, and the average area designated for each petition upon which action was taken:

[1] Designated prior to receipt of petitions. [2] Two months.

Mr. SHERLEY. What proportion of your fund is expended in work on public lands in connection with the duties that relate to the administration of the public-land laws?

Mr. SMITH. Of this appropriation of $150,000 we are expending approximately 80 per cent in the public-land States, and this relates not only to the administration of the enlarged homestead law but also cases that come up under the water-power and irrigation laws—the statutes of 1901 and 1891. Applications in the one case for water-power permits and in the other case for a reservoir site or right of way easement are referred to the Geological Survey. In some cases they are passed upon on the basis of data already in hand by reason of investigations of other years, and in still other cases they have to be sent to the field and special examinations made.

Mr. SHERLEY. Are requests made from the War Department upon the Geological Survey for data touching the flow of streams in connection with the damming of such streams for water-power purposes?

Mr. SMITH. There are some such cases with reference to streams in the East, and there is a good deal of correspondence with the War Department in that connection. We furnish them data frequently in connection with their administration of the navigable streams, and their offices are supplied with our publications as issued. But in connection with the public lands we have this special demand for intensive work, and here again we have a gradual accumulation of back work. Of the water-power cases which are referred to the Geological Survey, we have accumulated since August, 1912, when the first case of this kind was referred to us from the Secretary's office, 53 water-power cases, which are now pending. The importance of those to the Western States can be measured by the fact that these involve the development of more than 350,000 horsepower and transmission lines over 400 miles in length. We are handling those cases, but you can see that they are important enough so we can not handle them too rapidly, or else the public interests might be endangered.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do you undertake to pass judgment upon the quantity of water that might be impounded at any particular place in connection with irrigation projects?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; and we also pass upon the conflicting claims of irrigation and water power for the occupation of specific sites, and in the matter of irrigation rights we have 121 accumulated cases. That has to do also with the administration of the desert-land law where the entrymen under that law, as a part of their proof in order to secure title, are required to show that they have through ownership of stock in irrigation companies adequate water to improve the land, and we have to pass upon the adequacy of such stock ownership; in other words, whether the company in which they own stock actually has the water that is necessary to put on that land. So that in these matters we are very close to the current development of the West.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, in the past you have been employed in the gauging of streams irrespective of the relationship of that work with the administration of public-land laws. What are you doing in that connection now?

Mr. SMITH. We are doing less in the Eastern States; not only less than what the citizens of the Eastern States feel should be done, but less than we feel should be done. That came out in connection with the Ohio flood. We made somewhat of a reconnoissance study of that flood situation, and, as a matter of fact, had already under contemplation and partly worked out a thorough investigation of the run-off of the Ohio Basin; but after the Ohio flood we made a further investigation of certain features and issued a report which we believe placed the matter fairly before the public; but that matter deserves a much more thorough investigation than we were able to give and we are not covering the Ohio drainage basin with gauging stations as we did some years past. There is also a considerable demand being made upon us from many of the Southern States, not simply in connection with the water-power development in large units, but also in small units.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let us get back to what you are doing rather than to the demands made upon you. What stations are you now maintaining where the gauging of streams is conducted periodically and regularly?

Mr. SMITH. Last year we maintained 1,148 regular gauging stations. Those stations were, in part, conducted by the survey alone, and I should say in small part. Only 77 of them were maintained by the Geological Survey alone; 99 were maintained in cooperation with the Reclamation Service; and 170 with the Forest Service. Of course those were all in the public-land States and on the public land; 42 for the Indian Office; 6 in cooperation with the Army Engineers; and 47 in cooperation with the Weather Bureau.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, you speak of "in cooperation." What do you mean—that you bear part of the expense, or that the data is made available for your use?

Mr. SMITH. The cost of administration in such cases is largely borne by the survey. We utilize our engineers who are on the ground, and the station itself may be established by one of the cooperating bureaus; and the cost of gauge reading, which is purely a local cost, is maintained by the cooperating bureau. In the case of the Indian Office and the Reclamation Service, all the expenses that can be charged up to the individual gauging stations are met by the cooperating bureau. We largely furnish the overhead supervision.

Mr. SHERLEY. You say the Weather Bureau maintains some forty-odd stations?

Mr. SMITH. In cooperation with us. Most of the Weather Bureau stations in the past have been simply for the purpose of recording stage of the river. Of course the purpose of the Geological Survey's gauging is to provide information regarding the quantity of water flowing past a given point, and in that case the stage of the river is only one factor. We have also to measure the rate of flow and have to know the cross section as well as the stage of the height of the river.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no reason why both kinds of data should not be secured wherever any gauging is done, is here? It is just a matter of different instruments, and a competent man can do both.

Mr. SMITH. In most cases the same gauge reader and the same gauge can serve both purposes, but there are localities where it is important for the Weather Bureau, in their flood predictions, to have a station on some river at a point which we would not select for the station because it would not be suitable for making quantitative measurements of flow, which is our purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. While the point selected might not be the one you think most desirable, wherever selected it would be available to obtain data for you?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; if measurements of flow can be made; and in that spirit we are cooperating to avoid duplication, and in some cases we have turned over stations to the Weather Bureau, and, on the other hand, they have turned over certain stations to us.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, can you put in the record a statement showing just what you are expending, and how, in the gauging of streams proper, and also what is being expended by these other services, and how, so that we may understand what is meant by the cooperation that you speak of in general terms?

Allotments of "stream-gauging" funds, 1913–14.

Mr. SMITH. In the case of the Reclamation and Indian Services, we are simply expending their money for them, $5,500 and $6,000, respectively, although we use the results so obtained and combine them with our results in the compilation of studies representing whole drainage basins.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any place where gauging is done by any of these other services where you also maintain an independent station?

Mr. SMITH. I believe I can say at the present time there is absolutely no duplication of that kind by reason of our getting together with the Army engineers and the Weather Bureau, and in some cases the Army engineers, in establishing gauging stations for their own use, have asked our recommendation in the selection of points.

Mr. SHERLEY. You say "in some cases." Is there any case where the Army engineers are maintaining gauges for the measurement of streams where there has not been, as far as possible, a cooperation between them and you, and obtaining from you such scientific data as might be necessary to enable them most efficiently to perform the work for their own needs as well as the needs of your service?

Mr. SMITH. At the present time I should say there was no such case at all. When I say "at the present time," I mean in late years.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, there are stations where gaugings have been conducted for many years. Have those cases been looked into to see whether there could be a better cooperation or a better system worked out? Have you ever had any meetings with the officials of these other services who control this matter, so as to go over the whole scheme and arrange it in the most efficient manner?

Mr. SMITH. We have had conferences within the past year with the Army engineers and constant correspondence on that matter, so that they know exactly what we are doing and what we want to do, and in return they frequently discuss with us their plans for the purpose of securing any suggestions or modifications. So that I think we have reached the point where there is no duplication of effort. Of course there are certain stations—I think the one at Paducah might be cited as an illustration—which would have no value for us on account of backwater. It is not a good place to determine the quantity of water flowing in the river, although, of course, the Army engineers, like the Weather Bureau, need the records of stage.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any place near there where they can obtain the stage and at the same time obtain data which would be of value to you? Has that phase of it been considered?

Mr. SMITH. I think that you would have to go a considerable distance up the river to find just what we want. Once established the maintenance of a gauging station is not an expensive matter, in that it only involves the salary of a gauge reader, with the occasional visit of the engineer to measure the cross section and determine the stream velocity. I should add to that statement as to the distribution of gauging stations that the largest item of all is that of 679 stations which are maintained in cooperation with the various States.

There is also a contribution of 285 stations that are maintained privately, and we get records from various power and irrigation corporations and other interested parties. Those records, of course, are available for our general use.

Mr. RAUCH. You are asking for $200,000 and you get approximately $75,000 from the States—is that right?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir. It is stated in my annual report, and I will get the exact amount.

Mr. RAUCH. Your salary roll under this item is how much?

Mr. SMITH. About $153,000.

Mr. RAUCH. Can you in a general way tell us how this difference between the salary roll and the estimated appropriation and the amounts received from the States is to be expended?

Mr. SMITH. We have, for instance, an item of about $14,000 for the transportation of our esmployees; about $800 for transportation of equipment and supplies, and our subsistence item amounts to $75,000. The subsistence of our animals—that is, in connection with travel—amounts to approximately $1,000, and supplies of various kinds amount to about $4,000. Then we have, by reason of having outside offices, in the West especially, but also in the East, a rent item of $3,300. We maintain offices in San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Denver, St. Paul, Helena, Boise, Tacoma, Portland, Oreg., Santa Fe, Madison, Wis., Atlanta, Albany, and Newport, Ky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any space in public buildings that you could use for offices?

Mr. SMITH. We use public buildings wherever available.

Mr. SHERLEY. What do you mean by that? Do you mean that you actually make requests of the Treasury Department for space?

Mr. SMITH. When we hear of buildings that are planned for or are being built or being completed, we apply for definite space.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is not what I am after, either. San Francisco has a very large public building and a number of public buildings; did you ever make a request at the Treasury Department for an allotment of space there?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir; and we occupy Government building space in San Francisco.

Mr. SHERLEY. But in those places where you do not—where you rent?

Mr. SMITH. In Boise, Helena, and Portland there is no space in Government buildings available for us.

Mr. SHERLEY. Have you ascertained that by inquiry and request, so that a rearrangement might be made to give you space, or have you simply contented yourself with the report of the particular man there that there is no space and then rented?

Mr. SMITH. To the extent that we heard a rumor recently that space was to be vacated in a public building, and while the correspondence showed that such a vacation was only temporary, we did secure the use of that space for the time that it was to be vacated.

Mr. SHERLEY. There are Weather Bureau stations at all of those places where you are gauging, are there not?

Mr. SMITH. These are simply for our district offices. Of course we have many gauging stations, but the most of our gauging stations are not at any headquarters. These are just places on the rivers, but I suppose that in all of those places where we have district offices there are Weather Bureau offices.

Mr. SHERLEY. Have you ever ascertained whether there was space in those Weather Bureau stations for your men?

Mr. SMITH. I do not know that that point was ever investigated, but knowing, as I do, how adverse the ones in charge of this work are to paying rent, I question very much whether we have missed any opportunity to get space in public buildings.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was fearing that you were going to finish your sentence by saying that you know how adverse any department is to have anybody else use any building or space in connection with it.

Mr. SMITH. I think we got good treatment in this case where a bureau was leaving a public building for a matter of a year or so.

Mr. SHERLEY. I gathered from your statement that the demands on this fund are greater than in the year before.

Mr. SMITH. That is true with respect to this public-land work.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it general?

Mr. SMITH. We are neglecting the eastern work.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not speaking of your neglect, but of your demands; are the demands greater upon your service now than they were in the year before?

Mr. SMITH. At the present time I am answering letters from various Representatives and Senators from several Southern States explaining why we are not maintaining as many gauging stations as we did six years ago.

Mr. SHERLEY. In order to get a direct answer, are your demands this year greater than they were the year before?

Mr. SMITH. I believe they are.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, how do you explain the fact that this year you are asking for $200,000 and last year you asked for $300,000?

Mr. SMITH. My estimate as submitted to the Secretary of the Interior this year was $300,000.

The estimate as submitted to the Secretary of the Interior was $300,000, and in this case, as in the case of some other items, it was pared in the Secretary's office.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to ascertain the fact. I find in connection with a great many of these items that the estimates bear no relationship on earth to the testimony subsequently adduced as to the demands upon the service, and when particularly large requests are made and attention is called to the fact that previously they were not asked, we are told that there was some reason which was not heretofore known.

Mr. SMITH. My estimates were in several cases pared in the Secretary's office as submitted in the final estimates, and the increases over last year's appropriation which are presented to the committee have the hearty indorsement of Secretary Lane, and I think I am expressing his feeling when I say that he is especially anxious that there should be an adequate appropriation for the land-classification work, which is becoming a more and more important part of the work of his department in the administration of the public lands.

Mr. SHERLEY. Are you doing any more work with the same amount of money than heretofore?

Mr. SMITH. I believe I can say that we are cutting our unit cost every year. We are using better methods, and we are getting, especially in this matter of the water resources, better team work from the various engineers by reason of their coming together in conference and each man learning what has proven to be a successful method in somebody else's field. I may say that those conferences of our engineers have been attended by representatives of the other bureaus not only of this country, but each year they have been attended by representatives of the various Government bureaus of Canada. The methods that have been developed by the Geological Survey are really the standard methods for the world, and when I say that I have in mind the fact that the engineers from the various European countries, representing the Governments, come over and study our methods here in Washington.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to. The amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming ought not to be agreed to. It will do no good. It is wholly insufficient.

The growth of this work is phenomenal. I print herewith a portion of the last annual report, which shows how this work has grown. It deserves the attention of Congress, and it deserves it now:

GROWTH OF WORK.

During the last six years the field investigations of the Survey and the office work connected therewith have shown remarkable growth. Notwithstanding the fact that within that period the former technologic branch of the Survey has become an independent organization, the Bureau of Mines, the older bureau is larger now than it was six years ago.

In personnel the net growth since 1907 has been about 37 per cent; in general correspondence the number of incoming letters now exceeds that of 1907 by 43 per cent; the total distribution of reports and maps has increased 23 per cent, the increase in maps sold being even larger, 25 per cent; and the total cash receipts from sales of publications are larger by 60 per cent than in 1907. In the matter of total printed pages in the published reports there has also been a notable increase, though it is impossible to state this exactly by reason of changes in measure of page and size of type.

During this period, however, notwithstanding these gains in every particular that can be stated statistically, there has been a net loss in annual appropriations. The $350,000 appropriated in items under the technologic branch in 1907 has been only in part replaced by increased amounts now appropriated in other items, although the net loss is also in part offset by increased cooperation by the States in the field work of this Federal service. Thus the fact becomes apparent that in spite of a large measure of growth in public demands, as proved by the increase in correspondence and in distribution of publications, especially in publications sold, there has been no increase in the total appropriations available for sustaining the work of this bureau.

If the most recently organized branch of the survey, the land-classification board, is taken, even more noteworthy items of growth can be cited for a single year. With the board's work largely increased in every line of activity, the formal land-classification reports prepared for a single bureau, the Office of Indian Affairs, show for 1912–13 an increase in number of 20 per cent over the previous year. The letters received in the land-classification board increased 32 per cent, and the outgoing letters 70 per cent. It is not surprising that the files of this branch doubled in volume this last year.

The fact that more public work is being performed without corresponding increase in expenditure is unmistakable evidence of efficiency and economy. Efficiency in the public service is the end sought by an increasing number of administrative officers throughout the departmental service. The constant and painstaking effort of responsible chiefs and clerks in all grades is to make the largest returns to the public for the money appropriated by Congress. The motive of public service is often as effective in these kinds of Government work as the incentive of personal gain in private enterprise.

Because of this increasing pressure of official work, overtime service has become almost habitual in many of the divisions of the survey. Of the scientific members of the organization, several will be found working at their desks every evening during the winter, often until midnight, so that many of the geologists and others average at least 10 per cent overtime. In the clerical force, where there is the same devotion to duty, but possibly not the same personal interest in the work, the record is no less creditable in the amount of voluntary and, indeed, volunteered service. In one group of clerks, for instance, the overtime throughout the year averages about 5 per cent; in another group the average is 7 per cent, the extra time reaching 9 per cent in one of the winter months. In another section an extra hour a day is required of the whole force during periods of a week or more when the demands from the public are especially heavy, the time of service showing, for instance, an increase of 20 per cent in a single month. The library is regularly kept open an extra hour during the winter to facilitate its use in connection with the official scientific work.

Another gratifying evidence of devotion to work is furnished in the records of attendance. Usually an average of only two-thirds or less of the total annual leave permissible under the law is taken by survey members, while 10 to 14 per cent is the average sick-leave record (12½ per cent this last year). In the field work of the Geological Survey the men know no official hours; they regulate the length of the working-day only by the season, and even after darkness has fallen there may be several hours of accounting and clerical work in the tent before the chief of party or his principal assistants turn in for the night.

In connection, however, with this matter of overtime work and what may be considered a maximum output, it is believed that the limit has been reached and that a crisis now faces the work in charge of this bureau. The activities imposed by Congress upon the Geological Survey have been increasing faster than the appropriations provided therefor, until now it is all too apparent that the organization is undermanned and underequipped. Overtime work under adverse conditions is, as already stated, evidence of enthusiastic loyalty to the public service, but the strain is cumulative and the organization is bound soon to weaken, while both the quality and the quantity of the product must plainly suffer unless more adequate appropriations are voted by Congress. The demand upon the survey for more work can not be checked, but the means to meet the demand can be provided.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, whatever the telephonic communications of the gentleman from California, he has obtained no more accurate information than he had volunteered before he resorted to the telephone. Moneys appropriated for geologic surveys have been expended on privately owned land.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, we do not deny that.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. What I meant by that and what the purpose to say was that the department investigates the quantity of coal for the purpose of finding out the amount, but for no private individual.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it would be immaterial to me, if I owned a large tract of land bearing coal, what the peculiar motive that inspired the department was in examining to determine the quality and quantity of coal on my land. All that I should want would be the information. The motive of the survey in doing the work at the expense of the Federal Government would be something that would never concern me at all. These gentlemen are asking that $100,000 be added to this appropriation. If all of the amount recommended by this committee be expended on the public domain, there would be then $20,000 additional to the amount proposed in this amendment expended for this purpose.

I can not agree with gentlemen who contend that it is the duty of the Government or that it is a function of the Government to make investigations upon privately owned properties, particularly so long as there is a crying need to make investigations and determinations upon the public domain. The gentleman from Wyoming is in error in his statement that this item must necessarily be increased $35,000, that if it be not increased the Geological Survey will have $35,000 less than it has during the current year. Certain duties are imposed upon the General Land Office in the classification of lands, and $35,000 is the sum which it sets aside out of its appropriation to do the work. Instead of employing independent persons in the General Land Office to make these investigations it has been turning $35,000 over to the Geological Survey to make the investigations, in the belief that its organization and facilities will enable the work to be done better. Some one has suggested that the committee has reduced the amount 25 per cent. Let me suggest rather that there is a request that the appropriation be increased 33⅓ per cent. If this committee were to act upon such recommendations without any information to justify it, and increase appropriations for various branches of the public service by 33 per cent from statements of the character volunteered to the committee in support of this one, the Federal Treasury would not commence to meet the demands that would be made upon it for these various services.

I believe that the committee has recommended ample funds to enable the Geological Survey to do the work imposed upon it in a proper, effective, and intelligent manner. If it devotes itself to the work which the organic act creating the survey imposes upon it, it will have no difficulty in performing its duties with the appropriations provided in this bill. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

It had been a common practice a few years ago for the head of the Geological Survey, as soon as the sundry civil appropriation bill was reported to the House, to start a vigorous canvass of Members who might or might not be affected by the expenditures from these appropriations in their respective districts and to build up an agitation and start a controversy in the House. After a number of years of conflict the Director of the Geological Survey was driven back to his office, where he belonged; but this year he has resorted to the old tactics. He had the members of the Committee on the Public Lands meet, and they held a meeting without the information that was before the Committee on Appropriations, and upon the assurances of the Director of the Geological Survey that the committee had cut his estimates—not refused to increase his appropriation 33 per cent, but cut his estimates—they started a vigorous campaign. Then he sought out gentlemen like the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS], who has money expended in his district, and impresses upon him the necessity of having this appropriation increased. Going from one to another, instead of spending his time performing his public duties in the place set aside for that purpose in the manner intended, he went about giving incomplete information as to what had been done and urged Members for one reason or another to increase this appropriation $100,000. If I believed the appropriation should be made, I should not support it to encourage such indefensible methods on the part of a head of a bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. FERRIS) there were—ayes 59, noes 38.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee again divided; and the tellers (Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. FERRIS) reported that there were—ayes 60, noes 45.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 99, line 17, after the word "surveys," insert the words "of the public lands."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MANN. It is not subject to a point of order; there is no debate on it.

Mr. FERRIS. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. FERRIS. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. MANN. What is the point of order?

Mr. FERRIS. The point of order is that it is new legislation and is contrary to existing law.

Mr. MANN. It is not legislation at all; it is a definition of what surveys are—geological surveys of the public lands.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. MANN. It is the only thing there is authorized under the law to make surveys of.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not sustained, and the question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HOUSTON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15762) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. LEA of Tennessee, and Mr. JONES as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For gauging streams and determining the water supply of the United States, the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $150,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$150,000" and insert "$200,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 100, line 7, strike out the figures "$150,000" and insert "$200,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. There is absolutely no justification for increasing this appropriation. The only excuse is that the Director of the Geological Survey has requested the gentleman from Oklahoma to offer the amendment. There is no information that justifies it. If the committee wishes to increase it for that reason alone it can do so. I would suggest to gentlemen upon this side that they should hesitate somewhat about accepting these amendments offered in this way. We are approaching the time when the country will be scrutinizing very carefully what this House does in the way of appropriations. There has never been any justification for expending more than $150,000 a year for the purpose here stated. It can not be justified now after the statement issued by the Treasury Department for the current year that there will be a deficit in our receipts over our expenditures.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York does not keep himself within the facts when he says that the only thing justifying this amendment is a request from the Director of the Geological Survey to me to offer the amendment. On the contrary, the estimates urgently asked for this increase in the appropriation, and the hearings show they are entitled to this increase of appropriation; and the facts that are before the Committee on Public Lands show and make them aware that it is necessary. The floods of the Ohio, and the floods of the Mississippi, and irrigation all over the United States make it necessary that some increased investigation should be made along this line. I do not know what the will of the House may be; but this amendment ought to be made. Year after year for a good many years they have been asking this money be appropriated, and that the country get a benefit of honest, faithful, patriotic surveys that have been made. Year after year they are turned away, and the money is refused them.

I full well appreciate the great strain that comes on the Committee on Appropriations to keep down appropriations. But they have already carved this bill down $23,000,000 below the estimates. There is no use, when we are trying to develop the West, when we are trying to develop water power in the West, when we are trying to revise the mining laws and the mineral laws, and trying to get some development on the withdrawn areas of the West, for the development of that country and the diffusion of the benefits therefrom amongst the people, to pare down and keep cutting down the appropriations necessary for those purposes.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to. I tried to get it inserted in the bill when the bill was pending before the Committee on Appropriations. I tried to appear before the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but I was unsuccessful. I have no way of knowing what is reported until the bill comes in on the floor. Then we are confronted with the idea that Members ought not to present amendments.

I confess, Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to such a high ethical standpoint as that. I believe the Members of this House have the right to offer amendments to appropriation bills or any other bills. This body is composed of 436 sovereign Members. I do not think any committee has the right to seclude itself and deny to the other Members of the House the right to offer amendments. And nobody has the right to abuse a Member like a pickpocket for offering amendments. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] can say what he will and do what he will, but I will offer amendments anyway when I think they are necessary. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], in his criticism of the Committee on Appropriations, is hardly fair, and certainly he can not express the sentiment on this side of the House touching appropriations. He, no doubt, was greatly elated at the applause that greeted him from the other side of the House, when they are anxious over there to pile up appropriations on a Democratic House of Representatives, and no one can blame them. But we are pledged to some economy, and about the only people, so far as my observation goes up to this time, who are concerned in the Democratic Party's living up to its pledges and carrying out its pledges to the country, are found on the committees of the House which make appropriations and which have information upon which we should appropriate.

So long as gentlemen come into the House and offer amendments to appropriation bills and base those amendments upon estimates made by some department, unless somebody trims the estimates and brings them down within the bounds of the needs of the public service, the appropriations will continue to mount higher and higher every year.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. No; I can not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina declines to yield.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It seems to me it is time that gentlemen on this side of the House stand by those committees that are endeavoring to carry out the party's pledges, and it is time that Members and organizations, often on the part of men on this side of the House, should cease to attempt to break up an effort to economize in the expenditure of the public funds. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I think it is time that some one should say it to the Democratic membership of this House; and I say if the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, or any other Member as an individual or representing an organization, can come in here and overthrow the recommendations of the committees that have investigated the needs of the public service, then it is time that you dismiss us; then it is time that you dismiss those committees that have supervision of these appropriations, and take the estimates that are sent here by the executive departments of the Government and enact them directly into law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question of raising or lowering the estimates. It is a matter that the entire West is interested in. It is a matter upon which the President of the United States, before his inauguration and since, has said that he was opposed to reservation, but was in favor of conservation. [Applause.] That western country has been tied up for six years.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I always do.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Some of us are interested in the conservation of the Public Treasury. You do not seem to be. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. I am glad the gentleman made that remark. We are interested in the conservation of the Treasury. We are opposed to turning over water powers amounting to hundreds of thousands of horsepower to the hands of private individuals. [Applause on the Republican side.] This department wants money so that they may send out into the field men to make an examination of the water-power interests of this country.

There are hundreds of water-power cases pending to-day in which there is over a third of a million horsepower involved and hundreds of millions of acres of desert lands, which means hundreds of thousands of dollars to this country, and which means the upbuilding of the West. Instead of allowing the water to flow down to the ocean, as it has done since the beginning of time, it should be utilized for the benefit of man. How are you going to develop it? Are you going to keep it locked up in reserves, or are you going to open it up so that the people may have an opportunity to develop it, to use it if they desire; an opportunity to spend their money in developing not only the water power but the land; that they may conserve the water power and make the streams larger in the summer, to give us more water in the areas adapted for irrigation; that we may hold back this water for the purpose of irrigating those desert, barren lands that have been standing idle and unused for ages?

And at the same time we are building these dams, in order that we may have the opportunity of developing water power. To-day the man who files an application is denied a prompt hearing, is denied his rights—for delay at times means a practical denial of his rights—simply because there is not money enough appropriated for this service to make a prompt and proper examination.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it might be interesting to the committee to see how this $150,000 has been spent. One would imagine that it was all being expended in the investigation of the matters referred to by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. If there be that great necessity, it is somewhat astonishing that they should be expending this money, not in the public domain or the public-domain States, but spending it in the Eastern and Southern States. The sum of $21,000 was expended for administration, $14,000 in computation of stream-gauging data, $1,000 for inspection, $16,000 for ground work, $24,500 in utilization of land-classification work. Then in gauging surface waters in Vermont there was expended $900; in Massachusetts, $2,500; in New York, $2,500; in Virginia and Maryland, $500; in the Southeastern States, $4,000; in the Ohio River Valley, $6,000; in Minnesota, $3,500; in Wisconsin, $1,000; in Iowa, $100; in Colorado and Wyoming, $6,000; in Montana and North Dakota, $4,500; in Utah, $4,500; in Nevada, $2,500; in Idaho, $4,500; in Oregon, $4,500; in Washington, $4,500; in California, $4,500; in New Mexico, $4,500; in Arizona, $3,000; in Hawaii, $5,000; contingent expenses, $2,530.

Some of the States have been cooperating in these stream-gauging enterprises. It is easy to understand why $2,500 of this money is spent in the State of New York, when they obtained from the State of New York its cooperation to the extent of $11,500. There is no reason why a dollar of this money should be spent in the State of New York. That State ought to do this work itself. It is amply able to do it. So is Massachusetts. So are these other States. But this desire to have this cooperative arrangement with the States and to have the Geological Survey superintend it results in a diversion of this money to places where it should not be spent. What excuse is there to spend $2,500 in the State of New York, cooperating with that State in gauging the flow of the Hudson River? We have the most valuable watershed, perhaps, in the United States. We have spent $20,000,000 ourselves to obtain it. There is no need of the Federal Government contributing $2,500 to assist the State of New York to find out how much the water flow is and what its water is. There is no necessity for the Federal Government going into States like Massachusetts, Virginia, and Maryland, and other States.

The gentleman says this is only the amount of the estimates for this service. The estimates of money required to conduct the public service during the next fiscal year were $73,681,000 in excess of the estimated revenues of the Government in the next fiscal year. Recently the Secretary of the Treasury pointed out that he had overestimated our revenues by about $20,000,000, so that the estimated sums required to conduct the Government during the next fiscal year are about $100,000,000 over the estimated revenues. This committee did not reduce the appropriation for these services. It continued the amounts that had been carried for a number of years. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has already increased one item 33 per cent. He proposes to increase this item 33 per cent. If he offers many other amendments, as he promises to do, increasing other items in the same ratio, there will not be many of us on this side of the House in the conduct of the public business in the next Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Oklahoma stated that he had endeavored to confer with members of the Committee on Appropriations, and had been unable to do so. I think Members of the House who have from time to time desired to confer about matters in these bills have found no difficulty. I made an appointment to meet a number of members of the Committee on the Public Lands at the committee room one morning, and it was somewhat unfortunate, I suppose, but in the transaction of the public business I was compelled to go early to the White House, and was detained longer than I had anticipated. I reached my office a few minutes before the House convened. It was impossible to go over the matter then, and we agreed that we would meet the next morning. The only gentleman who was present the next morning to go over these matters was the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT]. The gentleman from Oklahoma evidently determined not to appear. I wish to make this statement so that nobody will linger under the impression that the gentleman was denied an opportunity even of conferring as to what the facts actually were.

I have no prejudice for or against any of these services. If I could have my way, it would be very pleasant to recommend all the money every public official, every Member of Congress, and every selfish outside interest desired for one purpose or another. My task would be much easier. It is so much easier and so much more popular to advocate appropriations for service in which our constituents are interested than it is to attempt to take a broad survey of the field and determine without any prejudice or partiality what is required to enable a particular service to be conducted properly.

I believe, and I do not think there is any difference of opinion among the members of the committee who have examined into the matter, that this committee has recommended a sum amply sufficient for this service. A few years ago there was this same agitation to increase this appropriation from $150,000 to $250,000. A member of a political club, of which I am a member in my home district, met me one day while I was there, while the bill was under consideration, and told me that he was about to attend a convention of engineers to be held in the city of Pittsburgh, and he wanted to carry my assurance that I would vote to increase this appropriation so that the engineers of the country would have the benefit of these Government reports in making reports and investigation. I told him that I would not favor the increase, but I would oppose it; that I was of the opinion then—and I entertain the same opinion now—that these moneys should be expended upon the public domain or in the ascertainment of facts in utilization of the waters over which the Federal Government has control and not for the private benefit of individuals, singly or in groups, and not for the purpose of relieving the States of a part of the burdens which properly belonged to them. I hope that the amendment will not prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is very unfortunate that this sudden spasm of economy on the part of the Democratic majority comes upon items where they are of great public necessity, and there is little or none of that desire for economy upon items that could be well dispensed with or postponed until a future time. [Applause.]

The gentleman from North Carolina a few minutes ago said that he expected this side of the House to vote for all the increased appropriations so as to put the Democratic Party in a hole. I want to say to him and to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that if it had not been for this side of the House standing with him and with his committee a number of times on these and other bills against increases of appropriations that were unnecessary the appropriation bills would have been much larger than they are to-day, and you have the Republican side of the House to thank for the fact that they are not larger than they are.

Now, with reference to this item, the gentleman undertakes to say that this question of water supply, of water power in the States not upon the public domain, is not a matter of public interest. Mr. Chairman, when this bill and the general deficiency bill shall have been completed in this House there will come before us for consideration a bill which has already been made privileged, relating to granting franchises for dams and water powers on the navigable streams in the United States. They do not relate to the public domain, but they relate to every navigable stream in the United States, whether it be in the East or whether it be in the West. Will the gentleman say that it is not to the interest of the country to know and to have information concerning the water supply and the water power upon these navigable streams? The gentleman refers to the Hudson River, of New York. I do not know anything about the Hudson River, of New York, or as to its water-power capabilities, but I do remember that last session we had before us the question of the Connecticut River, in the State of Connecticut, where they came to this Congress for a franchise for a dam creating water power, and it was defeated by those who were opposed to conservation because there were placed amendments on that bill safeguarding the public interests.

So, Mr. Chairman, when anyone says that this is not a matter of public interest except as it relates to public land, he is ignorant of what is going on with reference to these matters, with reference to the water supply, the control of navigable streams, and the control over our water powers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FERRIS) there were—ayes 51, noes 53.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. FERRIS to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of topographic surveys of the public lands that have been or may hereafter be designated as national forests, $75,000.

[Mr. JOHNSON of Washington addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD for the purpose of inserting some tables dealing with immigration.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I would like the attention of the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee. Is it the gentleman's intention to sit to-night continuously? I ask this so that gentlemen may be able to make arrangements with respect to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope the committee will sit right along until late to-night and make as much progress as possible.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did the gentleman say until late to-night or until 8 to-night?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, 11 or 12 o'clock.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, can we not have some understanding of the hour when we will adjourn, if there be no objection or no recess taken?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, a reasonable hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not much later than 9 o'clock?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I think we will run later than that. It is much harder on me than it is on the gentleman. I think it would be to the convenience and advantage of the House if we could sit some time on this bill for several days and dispose of it. To-morrow the conference report on the naval appropriation bill will be called up, the conference report on the agricultural bill will come in, and there will be a disagreement on the legislative appropriation bill, so that with these conference reports coming before the House it is going to make it difficult to obtain much time to give to this bill, and we should try and dispose of it as soon as possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no disposition on this side not to have an evening session, though I think that 10 o'clock would be considered as late as we ought to sit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. By 10 o'clock everybody may be in such good humor and so fresh that we may dispose of considerable of the bill in an hour or two after that time. Nobody wants to make any engagements after 10 o'clock at night.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What does the gentleman think will occupy our time during the rest of the summer after this bill is out of the way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, from the information we get as to the number of bills that are to be given special consideration, there will be enough legislative matters in which a large number of Members are interested to occupy not only the summer but a considerable portion of next winter. The appropriation bills should be disposed of, and it is to the convenience of everybody. Some of the items of this bill naturally will take some time. Members are interested in them and desire to discuss them. We have only disposed of about 80 pages out of 182 pages of the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In view——

Mr. FITZGERALD. We started three weeks ago, I think, but one week we did not do anything.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In view of the progress we have been making to-day I will not have any objection to a night session——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman from Washington that after the appropriation bills are disposed of and have passed both Houses and are approved by the President I will be very indifferent as to what will occupy the House the balance of the time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentleman from New York that after the appropriation bills are disposed of, unless I change my mind, which, of course, is within the bounds of possibility, he will not keep any late hours in this House unless he keeps a quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit this observation, the roll call disclosed this morning 248 Members present. With the approach of July, does the gentleman think it will be possible even to maintain a quorum here to do any business?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know; but if we are going to stay in session all summer, that side will maintain a quorum if they do any business.

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. At the bottom of page 155 there is an item for the enforcement of the antitrust law. I have been spoken to by many gentlemen as to whether we will reach that item to-night——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think so.

Mr. MURDOCK. If we do, does the gentleman expect to go ahead with the consideration of that paragraph?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I expect to go past that item without any discussion.

Mr. MURDOCK. Of course, it will be discussed, and I want to know if the gentleman is going to let that item go over.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we ought to take it up. I think one gentleman did intimate he might move to strike it out.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to be sure of that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman recalls what happened two years ago when somebody moved to put it in, and having charge of the bill it was my duty to antagonize it, and the House by a vote of 5 to 1——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an observation about the gentleman from Washington, and I hope he will not go out.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to be sure about this proposition, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from New York. I have had inquiry about this paragraph, and it has been the custom here at times to pass over items. I understand it is not the purpose of the gentleman from New York to pass this item over to-night?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. MURDOCK. If he reaches the item he is going to take it up? I wanted to understand it definitely.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was put in here one night about half past 9.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then I will notify the gentlemen who have asked me. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we ought to get along with the bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. So I understand it is not to be passed over when we reach it?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], who is very much interested in conservation, I see has left the room. I believe the gentleman ought to attend to his duties as well as any of us. It was not possible for him in the last week to help make a quorum or raise the question of no quorum, and if everybody had done as the gentleman from Washington did last week the House would be empty. It is a great characteristic of those Members who go out and leave this Chamber after voting for a night session to come in here and raise the question of no quorum, and thereby get it into the RECORD that they are present. The gentleman could not raise, I repeat again, that point of no quorum in the last week, because he had flown the same as the rest of the absentees.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigation as to the causes of mine explosions, methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners, the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, and other inquiries and technologic investigations pertinent to the mining industry, $347,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$347,000" and insert "$460,000."

I do this not because the department has estimated any increase for this particular work, but for the reason that if this additional amount is given it will permit the cars which are now owned by the Government to continue in operation for 12 months in a year, or nearly so. We now have eight cars which are owned and controlled by the Bureau of Mines. These are cars which were purchased a few years ago. They were old Pullman sleepers. They are now in such a condition that they need repair. It will cost about $21,000 to repair seven cars and put them in proper condition to be taken on fast trains and sent to the scenes of mine explosions and wherever else it may be necessary that they should be sent.

This increased appropriation also gives to the Bureau of Mines on these cars a first-aid surgeon, a mining engineer, and a stenographer—instrumentalities essential in the education in this mine rescue work, which should be provided in connection with this work if the work is to be made effective.

There has been a call from the miners all over the country that the Government with its cars should, if possible, get around to these camps and instruct the miners in the particular work of making the mines safer. We hear of the terrible explosions that take place, where possibly hundreds of lives are lost; and the intention of the Bureau of Mines and the object which its officials are seeking to accomplish is to find some way of instructing these miners so as to avoid, if possible, this great loss of life.

The other day we read of a case over in Alberta, Canada, where more than 100 men lost their lives in the mines. A short time ago we also read of a case down in West Virginia, where scores of men lost their lives in an explosion. This is a matter of saving human life. It is not a matter of dollars and cents in this particular, but it is essential that these men should be instructed, so that this terrible loss of life may be avoided. Not only do we see this great loss of life in the mines which occurs now and then, but even from day to day; and I may say there are more lives lost in the course of the year from falling roofs and accidents of that kind that might possibly be avoided than are lost from the explosions that we read so much about in the papers. It is hoped that if these cars are permitted to operate 12 months in the year, properly equipped with men who can give instruction that will be beneficial to these miners, they can in the course of time get around and instruct all the miners in the different camps.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOWARD). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I present this matter to the committee to-day in the hope that they may conclude that in this item something more may be given, not because it has been estimated for but because, in my judgment, it is necessary and will do as much good as any other appropriation made in this bill.

I realize that the Committee on Appropriations has treated the Bureau of Mines with consideration, and I am not here to complain of the committee. I am here only to ask that this appropriation may be made to carry forward this work in a better way, in a quicker way, than it has been carried on in the past.

This work is so important that I wish I could impress on the Members of the House the necessity of adopting the amendment offered. We can afford to do more along these lines of saving human life.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will prevail. In the matter of the mine rescue cars, it will enable the Bureau of Mines to send these cars out among the mining communities once in 4 years, rather than once in 12, as now, which would extend the effective work of instructing the miners as to the means of protection and also in giving information in first-aid work.

I will say for Pennsylvania, notwithstanding the large sum of money—nearly a quarter of a million dollars—that is annually expended there in the mining bureau of that State and in inspectorships for the safety of the men, that the Federal Bureau of Mines has stimulated greatly not only the interest of the corporations and employers but also that of the employees, and with advantage both along the line of safety and health conditions.

I want to present to this House some figures as to the number of miners killed in this country and in Great Britain. In 1910 we employed 725,000 miners in this country. Two thousand eight hundred and forty miners were killed. In Great Britain there were employed in that year 1,032,702 miners. One thousand seven hundred and fifty-four miners lost their lives in that country, as against 2,840 in this country, although this country employed 300,000 fewer miners.

In 1911 the number of miners employed in this country was 728,348, and the number killed was 2,719. In Great Britain for that year 1911 there were employed 1,049,000 miners, and there were 1,232 killed, or less than one-half the number killed in this country, although there were 272,000 more miners employed in Great Britain than here.

I live in a community which mines more coal to-day by several million tons than the entire output of the United States 50 to 30 years ago. I have known hundreds, yes thousands of desolated homes in my district. Thousands of miners who lived in the city of Scranton and the county of Lackawanna in my time have been killed in the mines, leaving thousands of widows and many thousands of helpless orphans. I do not know of any way in which this Congress can do more effective service than by increasing this appropriation, as desired by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], for the purpose of safeguarding the mine workers and lessening the number of accidents and deaths in that important but most dangerous work.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman stated that this increased appropriation would permit these mine cars to make a trip once in 4 years rather than once in 12 years. What does the gentleman mean by that statement?

Mr. FARR. With the limited number of these mine-rescue cars they can reach the mining communities only about once in 12 years.

Mr. MURDOCK. And with the increased appropriation it would allow them to visit all the mines once in every 4 years?

Mr. FARR. Yes; and the importance of that work will be indicated when I make the statement that over one-half of the miners to-day can not speak or read but little of the English language, and through these mine cars, by way of picture slides, a great deal of practical information can be given to them. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that the work of the Bureau of Mines is very important and of great value. Sympathetic with its work, the Committee on Appropriations recommended all the money it requested for this purpose. In addition to that it increased by some $62,000 the appropriation for the bureau over the amount appropriated for the current year. In one or two items not vitally affecting the safety of the lives of the men engaged in mining the full amount requested was not given. Now, there was no information presented to the committee that any additional sum was necessary or required in this service. The Director of the Bureau of Mines was given all he asked. The purpose of these cars is to go from one mining center to another with instructors and to instruct the men engaged in mining in the use of the safety apparatus, and it is the contention of the director that this work is not a permanent work, but that it is a work of a somewhat temporary character, although in his opinion it will take some years perhaps to cover all of the mining regions as effectively as is desired.

The committee gave all the money that that bureau requested for this purpose. It gave $30,000 additional to enable them to replace the equipment upon the cars. It never contemplated that it would be possible to have cars so that they could operate the entire 12 months. They must be temporarily laid up.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do any of the States cooperate in this work, or have they paid any money or employed any experts to aid the United States Government in the prevention of these accidents?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some of the States have mining inspectors and mining bureaus. I think the State of Illinois, perhaps, has the most highly organized and efficient State service of any of the States. Some of the others have State bureaus, but my recollection is that the Bureau of Mines of the Federal Government is not conducted in association with any of the States. Whether to do what the gentleman from Illinois proposes requires an increase of 33 per cent over the amount requested by the bureau I do not know. I have no information. The committee gave all that the bureau asked. It seems to me that the committee should not increase this appropriation without the bureau at least suggesting that it is necessary for the conduct of its service.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the gentleman be willing to let this go over for the present?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I think we ought to dispose of it now.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will prevail. Here is an opportunity to combine the conservation of human resources and material resources. As a dollar-and-cent proposition it seems to me this amendment is a most profitable investment, and no false plea of economy should prevail against it.

In the report of the Bureau of Mines just issued for the last fiscal year there is a summary of the cause of mine accidents and the waste of life and material involved. It says:

> There is no exact measure of the losses from mine accidents and mineral waste, but we may use an approximate measure. If the increasing rate of coal-mine fatalities during 1905, 1906, and 1907—the three years prior to the beginning of this work—had continued throughout the four subsequent years, since Congress began these mine-explosion investigations, the number of fatalities would have been at least 4,000 greater than they have actually been. At approximately the average compensation paid per man in fatal mine accidents of the past few years, this would represent a national loss of $12,000,000 in the four years. On the same basis the 30,000 men killed during the past 10 years in the mines of the United States would mean a loss of more than $100,000,000 in national productiveness. If it is remembered that for every fatal accident there are at least 3 to 5 serious nonfatal accidents, and 12 lesser accidents which incapacitate for one or more days, it will be seen that the actual national loss would have been much larger.
> In mineral waste, the national loss is estimated to be not less than $1,000,000 a day. This loss for the most part is not such as may be considered as representing a deferred use of resources, but represents a total permanent loss of national wealth.

One million dollars in material resources wasted every day and a hundred million dollars a year as the dollar-and-cent value of the wasted human resources! To prevent that waste is a conservation devoutly to be wished.

The Bureau of Mines, to my mind, is one of the most important and beneficial bureaus of the Federal Government. In the last few months five different patents have been taken out by engineers of the Bureau of Mines. Every one will be used for the common good without the payment of a dollar, and every one of them will benefit both miners and mine owners. One is a collapsible cage for rescue work, and another is a rescue apparatus carried by persons going into the mines after an explosion. These two inventions alone will mean the saving of untold lives, and, as a dollar-and-cent proposition, will be profitable. We can not afford to handicap this bureau by withholding the funds necessary to permit it to carry on its invaluable work in efficient manner. I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will be adopted, because it means a conservation policy of the highest type. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has called the attention of the committee to the fact that the Bureau of Mines has been given all it asked. Had the bureau asked for a larger sum under any of the heads of its expenditures, and given good reasons why such increased sums should be granted, I am sure that the committee would have been inclined to have granted larger sums than have been given.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Does not the report of the Bureau of Mines explicitly state that they are handicapped because they have not sufficient funds?

Mr. MONDELL. My attention has not been called to any such statement of fact. We know what they did ask; we know that in the hearings they asked for nothing more. The committee is in sympathy with this work of the Bureau of Mines. It is doing a great and splendid work and under good management, but I think even in as important work as this it is altogether possible to appropriate so rapidly as to defeat the very purpose of your appropriation. We all realize the fact that the Federal Government can not become responsible for conditions in all the mines in the country. The most the Federal Government can do and ought to do is to give aid and encouragement and help to better conditions. The responsibility primarily is and must remain on the operator and upon the State in the enactment of legislation along lines which will insure and compel greater safety.

The work of the Bureau of Mines in suggestion and aid is and will be very helpful. But we ought not so to enlarge our work as to encourage the operator to neglect his responsibility. It is a very fortunate thing that under the encouragement of the work the Bureau of Mines operators are generally securing safety apparatus. Under the suggestions of the Bureau of Mines more favorable conditions are being established in the mines of the country. I think we are doing very well when we appropriate all that those in charge of the work desire, and that we have done. I am greatly interested in this work and will vote, as I have, for all that the bureau asks for its work.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. In view of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] said about the present cars being able to reach the mines once in 12 years, what does the gentleman say to this language on page 28 in the report of the Director of the Bureau of Mines? And, by the way, on the preceding page—on page 24—there is a statement that the demands made on the bureau both by the Government and the public have from the beginning largely exceeded its facilities, and that these demands have increased much more rapidly than the funds and facilities of the bureau have grown. Then, on page 28, I find the following language, referring to these cars:

> The 12 fully manned rescue cars, operated on a schedule such as that outlined above, would reach the million men who labor underground in the United States once in four years' time.

Does not that show right on the face of it that the bureau does want these additional cars?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it necessarily does, in view of the fact we gave them all they asked.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think it does, in view of the fact that the bureau did not ask any more than the amount we had given. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] knows this, that there is no important and helpful public service of this kind that can not indefinitely and very rapidly extend its work. The bureau should extend its work, but it should extend it in a reasonable and really helpful way. It should secure and equip additional cars, as the necessity of those cars are demonstrated by the work that the cars are now doing.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman says that they should increase their facilities and extend their work as the necessities demand. But the statement of the bureau in that report is explicit that the demands are clear beyond their facilities; that they ought to have 12 cars in order that at least once in four years they can get to these million of miners and prevent this awful waste of life. It is perfectly plain to me that that is the only interpretation to be put on this annual report, just as was said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, we could appropriate a million or two million dollars or five million dollars for this work, and it could be expended in some way, no doubt, but primarily it should be the effort of the Federal Government to encourage the mine operators to take up and carry on this work, and to encourage and insist upon the State legislating so as to compel mine operators to provide safety apparatus and compel conditions of safety.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, at one time in my service on the Appropriations Committee I was a member of the subcommittee that prepared the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I have some familiarity with the items appropriated for the Bureau of Mines. Personally, I have been very greatly interested in that bureau, not only because of the work that it is doing toward the conservation of human life and property but, I confess, as well because of a very long and close personal friendship with the gentleman who happens to be the Director of the Bureau of Mines. I am sure that what has been said by other members of the Appropriations Committee as to the attitude of that committee toward this bureau has been sympathetic, and the increased appropriations from year to year are evidence of the fact it has been disposed to increase the activities of this bureau, and the appropriations for the increase of its activities as rapidly as they could be wisely used in the extension of its work. In this instance it has appropriated what was asked for. The Director of the Bureau of Mines is supposed to know the needs and the possibilities of the extension of the work in the bureau over which he presides. Just a little while ago in this committee I had occasion to complain of the chairman of a legislative committee that he wanted to take the estimates as forwarded by the executive departments and appropriate in the amounts asked for without investigation, without taking into account the information obtained by the committee having the matter in charge, and now within an hour we are face to face with a proposition to go beyond the amount asked for in the estimates, the amount asked for by the gentleman who has charge of the work, who is supposed to know how rapidly he can develop the bureau over which he presides, and we are asked to believe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who introduced the amendment, knows more about what ought to be done in this bureau than the gentleman who presides over it; that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] and the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] are far more conversant with the work than the people who have in immediate charge the administration of the work and the expenditure of the appropriation. It seems to me it is entirely unreasonable to come in here and ask this committee to increase this appropriation in an amount that has not been suggested by the bureau having in charge the expenditure of the money.

And I want to say in conclusion what I said in the beginning, that I yield to no man on this floor in my sympathy for the Bureau of Mines and the work that it is doing, not only because of the work that it is doing but because of my faith in the man who is administering that particular branch of the Government, not only in his capacity but in his absolute honesty. And I may say, Mr. Chairman, with all his virtues modesty is not one of them, and he usually asks for what he needs, and I suppose in this instance he asked for all he needed.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I will occupy but just a moment for the purpose of showing that the Committee on Appropriations, and the House of Representatives for that matter, are in complete sympathy with the development of this work. I wish to make the following statement, which appears in different parts of the hearings on mine rescue cars. They have seven cars——

Mr. FOSTER. They have eight.

Mr. RAUCH. During previous years they were operated for only five or six months of the year. "Last year," Dr. Holmes says, "you increased this appropriation so as to enable us to spend $20,000 additional on the work of the mine rescue cars, and as a result we will during this year operate those cars between 8 and 10 months." Now, then, it is impossible to operate any one car 12 months in the year, because it requires about 2 months for repairs. For that reason they asked for an appropriation for an additional car, which the committee provided. He says, "If we had one extra car we could operate the cars for 12 months. Under such a system, instead of having all the cars repaired at one time and giving all the men leaves of absence at one time, these changes could take place at intervals, and effective mine-safety training could go on during every month in the year." So as a matter of fact the Committee on Appropriations has made ample provision according to the plans of the Bureau of Mines for this work to go on each and every day in the year.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think this increase in the appropriation ought to be approved. If the Director of the Bureau of Mines has not asked for sufficient money to carry out what Dr. Holmes has said ought to be done in his report, it seems to me that he has not done his duty. I take it from the remarks made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a few days ago in a colloquy with Mr. MURDOCK, where he pointed out the great need of appropriations for the purpose of protecting human life in mines and elsewhere, that he would raise no objection or withhold his consent on an appropriation of this kind, and due to his efforts District day now has been set aside twice and he has defeated probably for this session of Congress a very meritorious bill for the purpose of protecting human life in the building industries in the District of Columbia. Of course, it is true that building craftsmen in the District of Columbia who live here do not have a vote and therefore have not any influence of that kind to exercise, and in spite of the efforts of a few of their friends we have been unable to secure consideration of that bill. If an earnest effort had been made to consider and pass that bill, it probably would have been done in half an hour. It was set aside by the exercise of his influence, by misleading statements made for the purpose of setting it aside, for many Members coming in here and not knowing just what they were voting on or what it meant when they voted to go into the committee were told that there was nothing of any importance to consider. Also I want to state while I have the floor that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the colloquy with Mr. MURDOCK said in effect, if not in these words, that there was opposition here, and that an effort was being made to prevent appropriation bills being considered in order to take up and consider a bill that only one man wanted and nobody else knew or cared anything about. There are about 500,000 building craftsmen in the United States, and I believe they are all interested in securing the passage of that bill; in fact, I have information that they are interested in securing the passage of this measure, not only due to their sympathy for the protection of life of the building craftsmen working in the District of Columbia, but because they look at this bill probably as a sort of model that they might point to in order to have the different States pass a like measure. Now, I do not say the chairman is responsible for anything for which the whole committee is not responsible.

If the committee is permitting one man to dictate the policy of that committee, then they are all responsible to that extent.

Now, when it is pointed out that there can be more money utilized for the benefit and protection of the lives and health of the miners of the United States, we find that opposition is still there, and the consent of the committee is withheld for that money that is necessary to equip those cars for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And it seems that that is not the only case where that opposition is shown.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, from time to time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has made statements that are so grossly inaccurate that if it were not for the fact that some people are likely to imagine that because a man is a Member of Congress he can not make mistakes, I would not pay attention to what is said.

In the performance of my duty as a Member of this House I did to-day what I did two weeks ago—I moved that the House take up the sundry civil appropriation bill. It was not for me to determine what the House should do. It was for the House to determine. And it determined—and, I think, properly and wisely, showing good sense—to proceed with the consideration of this bill. I remained in my seat while the vote was being taken, and when Members who escaped the gentleman from Illinois—who stood at the door—asked me what the vote was about I informed them that it was upon the motion I had made to consider the sundry civil bill, and that it was being antagonized by the gentlemen who desired to take up what is known as the Buchanan bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does the gentleman contend that two weeks ago he remained in his seat when the vote was being taken?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think I did; but I do not recall.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I remember very well seeing the gentleman outside speaking to Members as they came in.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I did go out, I exercised my rights as a Member of the House; and I was more successful, apparently, than was the gentleman from Illinois when he pursued that course to-day.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I asked the gentleman from New York what he did two weeks ago to-day?

Mr. FITZGERALD. From the personal standpoint, I should have been very much gratified if the gentleman's motion had prevailed to-day. I happen to have been so unfortunate as to have caught a severe cold in the head, and I have been suffering all day from a severe headache, and my personal comfort and convenience would have led me to hope that the gentleman would have taken the day to consider a bill affecting persons in the District of Columbia.

I have read the bill in which the gentleman is interested—not with any such care as would enable me to determine whether its provision would be subject to criticism; but I have read it. It was introduced in the House on the 25th of September, 1913, and it was reported to the House on the 9th of May, 1914. It was not my fault that this bill lay in the Committee on the District of Columbia for more than eight months, during all of which time Congress was in session. I do not know whether it was the fault of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], although the fact that the committee struck out everything after the enacting clause and reported an entirely different bill would lead me to believe, without comparing the two bills, that perhaps the bill which the gentleman had introduced was not in that perfect form that would have made it satisfactory to the Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that that bill was reported to the House some time ago, and was then recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I was not aware of it.

Mr. MANN. That is the fact.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But I do know that in the month of June——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Probably the gentleman does not want to make an erroneous statement about the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I have no desire to do so.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to say that the substance of the bill has not been changed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not compared them.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The substance has not been changed, except as to the application of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not want to be unfair to the gentleman, and——

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. It does not make any difference about the unfairness to the gentleman from Illinois, and the fact is that the substance of the bill has not been changed, and there was no change in it at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There must have been some difference.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The difference was that there was a reference made to building regulations instead of to the statute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At any rate, in a bill of 14 sections——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to get 5 minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Does not the gentleman think he ought to go on with this bill? Does not he think he ought to say something about the sundry civil bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. When a gentleman has made misstatements about me, does not the gentleman think that I should make a statement in reply?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, shortly at this rate we shall get into a wrangle and then we shall get into trouble. [Laughter.] I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A short time ago the gentleman complained bitterly of a colleague who would not permit him to make a statement on the floor of the House.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman is chairman of a great committee. If he insists on it, I will withdraw the point; but I think the gentleman ought to take a lesson, even from one who does not know as much as he does, and do as I suggest.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman to withdraw his point of order, and let the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] finish his criticism.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The only attempt that I know of to take up the bill—and I am not finding fault with anybody—was during this month of June, the last month of the fiscal year. This appropriation bill ought to be enacted into law before the 30th of the month. The failure so to enact it will not be the fault of myself or my associates on the committee. We have done everything we could to press it. We took whatever time was allowed to us.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] criticizes Members because they wish to make progress with this bill, which affects all of the people of the United States, every branch of the Federal Government, rather than a bill affecting men in the District of Columbia. I did not say that I wanted the sundry civil bill taken up because I desired to appropriate for the Bureau of Mines money that the head of the bureau did not ask. I united in the recommendation to appropriate the money stated by the head of that bureau to be necessary, and I do not believe it is necessary to increase by $113,000 what he says is necessary, and what he asks Congress to give to conduct the bureau

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I can not understand why the statement has been repeatedly made that the Director of the Bureau of Mines has not been asking for this amount, when in his own report just issued from the Bureau of Mines he distinctly states that he has been crippled, and that with the limited funds at the disposal of his bureau in any one year it has required three years to prepare an experimental coal mine for this demonstration work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was not wholly due to a lack of funds. I repeat what I have said: The request was for $347,000 for these purposes, and that is the amount that the bill carries. With regard to the experimental mine, if I recall correctly, there was first an attempt made to lease a mine to be fitted up, where the actual conditions existing after an explosion took place could be simulated. If I recall correctly, some one finally donated a mine to the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. That is true at Bruceton, Pa. The coal company there gave the Government the use of a property for an experimental mine. All the Government does is, that when it takes coal out of the mine it turns it over to the company.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but the difficulty in completing those investigations was not because of a lack of funds that were requested and appropriated. In 1912 there was a difference of $50,000 between the amount estimated and the amount appropriated, and it was due to a readjustment of sums under various items. But for the current year 1914 this committee recommended what the Director of Mines requested, and it recommends for next year what he requested. I imagine he knows how much he needs. He has always requested what he required to conduct the service, and this committee has met him and has recommended to the House appropriations that he pointed out as desirable and essential for the work. I do not think we ought to increase this appropriation of $347,000 by $113,000, on the suggestion of some gentleman that the Bureau of Mines ought to spend that much, whether they think they need it or not. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if I can pour a little oil on the waters. I did not sympathize to the extent of voting with my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] in opposing to-day or two weeks ago the consideration of the sundry civil bill. I understand, in a way at least, the duties of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and it was the duty of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to endeavor to secure the consideration of the sundry civil bill as soon as it could be considered after it was reported to the House. I hope the consideration of it will be such that it will be possible to get it enacted into law by the first of the fiscal year.

I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations deserves the respectful and sympathetic consideration of every Member of the House, whether he happens to be fighting him at the time on the pending proposition or not, and I have great regard for the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in that position. On the other hand, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has referred to the bill which my colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] introduced, in regard to building regulations in the District of Columbia, and he stated that that bill was introduced last September and was reported into the House in May. That bill was reported into the House early in the winter; I do not remember just when. There was some opposition to it as it stood. I do not know just what that opposition was. There were undoubtedly some errors in it, and my colleague Mr. BUCHANAN in a very gracious way said that he was quite willing that the bill should go back to the District Committee and be again considered by that committee in order that if there were any errors in it they might be corrected. The bill was recommitted to the District Committee and was reported into the House early in May. It did not come up on the first District day after it was reported, because the House had another bill under consideration. Since that time there has been no District day in fact, although there have been two District days in theory under the rule.

Now, my colleague, as it is his duty pushing a bill that he believes ought to be passed, has endeavored to secure consideration of it even before the sundry civil bill. The House has not agreed with him. I have said to my colleague to-day privately, and I say it publicly now, that I hope we will soon be able to get his bill before the House. I do not believe there is any opposition to it. I do not believe it will take very long for consideration if it comes before the House; and I am pledged, as far as I am concerned, to do everything I can at the first opportunity to get that bill before the House. Meanwhile I hope that my colleague and the gentleman from New York will call it quits, smile, kiss, and make up, and go on with these other things. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOSTER) there were 23 ayes and 23 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I move to increase the amount of the appropriation from $347,000 to $367,000. That will enable the department to use the cars two months more a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no information of that character before the committee. Let me say to the gentleman that if there ought to be an increase in this sum, the department should first send in a formal request. It can be placed in the bill before it is disposed of in the other body. Both Houses have been fair to the Bureau of Mines. Nobody desires to interfere with their work, but we ought not to proceed upon the theory that the bureau did not ask for all the money it needed.

Mr. FARR. My information is that Dr. Holmes was not in town when the committee made up the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. Dr. Holmes appeared before the committee, and the committee acted upon the information which he furnished.

Mr. FARR. I do know, Mr. Chairman, that the department would like to be in possession of this amount and to use these cars for the two months that I have mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. I think, if the gentleman will permit me, that in view of the statements made here that there is no estimate for this additional amount, that the amendment be withdrawn. There is no question in my own mind but that the Bureau of Mines in order to do effective work ought to have this money; and I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FARR. Well, Mr. Chairman, in view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inquiries and investigations concerning the mining, preparation, treatment, and utilization of petroleum and natural gas, with a view to economic development, and conserving resources through the prevention of waste; to inquire into the economic conditions affecting the industry, $25,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York how this money is expended?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is carried in the bill this year for the first time. In the tapping of gas and oil wells it has been found that there has been a tremendous waste of gas—millions of cubic feet are permitted to blow off before the oil comes up. In some instances where an oil well has been found there has been a great waste of oil before the well has been tapped.

Mr. MURDOCK. But after the well has been tapped then the utilization of petroleum has been very complete. That has been my understanding. I do not think there is any product that is so completely utilized as is petroleum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The word "petroleum" is used in a generic sense. It includes petroleum and the by-products, but I think this was principally in connection with the waste of gas.

In 1912 the production of natural gas amounted to five hundred and sixty-two thousand million cubic feet, valued at $84,500,000. The estimate is that the waste amounted to about $50,000,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is in gas alone?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Dr. Holmes stated that the waste in petroleum would aggregate between $25,000,000 and $35,000,000 a year. When these gushers are found, the lighter oils that are more volatile sometimes go off in gas, and it is to demonstrate the best methods of conserving them.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will say to the chairman that I know, of course, as the gentleman knows, that in the first shooting of a well there is a loss frequently of gas and of oil. Is it the purpose of this paragraph to find ways to prevent that loss at that time? It certainly can not be to utilize petroleum after the petroleum is produced, because the distillates of petroleum now run down to the finest order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This appropriation is carried in the language of the act authorizing the particular service, but the purpose is to develop and perfect the methods by which the waste of gas and oil will be prevented when wells are tapped. Sometimes men start after oil, and they find a great volume of gas above the oil. They blow the gas all off.

Mr. MURDOCK. And that is lost?

Mr. FITZGERALD. And sometimes they are after gas and they find oil above the gas, and they pay little attention to it; and according to the statement of Dr. Holmes, the waste of both oil and gas reaches nearly $90,000,000 a year. Of course if this gas and oil could be saved, it would very materially affect the price and the value of it in the communities where it is used.

Mr. MURDOCK. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the paragraph contains the phrase "with a view to economic development."

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the language of the organic act. Two years ago a bill was passed through the House lodging the powers in the Bureau of Mines. It occasioned considerable controversy, and this is the language in which the act was passed; and in making the appropriation they asked to have it carried in the language of the act, but from the testimony submitted by Dr. Holmes it was apparent that this money was asked to continue on a larger and more efficient scale the work that had been done to prevent this enormous waste in gas and petroleum and the lighter oils.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one mine inspector for duty in Alaska, $3,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Do they have any mines in Alaska that this man has anything to do with?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, a great many.

Mr. MANN. What kind of mines does this man inspect?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Gold mines and copper mines and coal mines.

Mr. MANN. Does he inspect placer mines?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a statute creating an inspector of mines.

Mr. MANN. I know there is, but at that time it was supposed that they were going to have some mines up there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the territories and in Alaska, and this man has been in Alaska and he seems to be a very busy man, and of course they wanted to give him assistance up there.

Mr. MANN. Are there any coal mines up there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are coal fields. I am not certain whether there are coal mines or not. They say he is a very busy man. I have never been there and I have never seen him work.

Mr. MANN. I merely repeated the inquiry that I have made every year for years as to whether this man had anything to do, and I have never found anybody from Alaska or out of Alaska who knew whether he had anything to do or not.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, they are mining 2,000 feet under the sea in Alaska in the Treadwell gold mine, near Sitka.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that there is work up there that requires competent and technical men, and the mines there are inspected and the regulations are enforced by the inspector of mines.

The Clerk read as follows:

Persons employed during the fiscal year 1915 in field work outside of the District of Columbia under the Bureau of Mines may be detailed temporarily for service at Washington, D. C., for purposes only of consultation or in connection with the preparation of results of their field work; all persons so detailed shall be paid in addition to their regular compensation only their actual traveling expenses in going to and returning therefrom; and all details made hereunder, and the purposes of each, during the fiscal year shall be reported in the annual estimates of appropriations to the Sixty-fourth Congress at its first regular session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Just what is intended by this paragraph in reference to this service in Washington, and particularly as to that part of it which provides for the payment of the expenses? The provision in here is unusual, and I do not understand it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have been detailing these men and they have been drawing not only the traveling expenses, but the per diem while here in Washington. Now, the director of the bureau states that it is very desirable, after the men have made their investigations, to bring them to Washington for consultation and preparation of their report. He thinks that traveling expenses should be paid, but he does not believe that they should be allowed in addition a per diem for subsistence.

Mr. MANN. That is, at present, as I understand it, a man who is on the pay roll at $1,500 a year, if that should be the amount, and he is detailed to Washington and has been employed here two or three months in the wintertime to do work he receives his monthly salary and his traveling expenses to Washington, and then in addition he gets $4 a day while he is here, so that he is getting a salary of $1,500, and he not only gets that salary, but he gets that much more because he happens to have the privilege and pleasure of coming to Washington for a little while.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. MANN. I see that is there stated and I nearly fell over in a faint at the idea that it was proposed by any department, because that detail business with per diem subsistence is so thoroughly abused by the Government that I did not expect any one would want to inaugurate a reform.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think Dr. Holmes has shown a very commendable spirit——

Mr. MANN. And if this is the proposition I desire to pay a tribute to him.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). To eliminate an abuse, and I think he should be commended for it.

Mr. MANN. I think so, too. I am afraid he will not be commended for it by the employees under him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This would enable him to utilize a larger portion of the appropriation to do work of his bureau rather than to swell the amount paid to some employees.

Mr. MANN. I have known single persons, unmarried, in the service of the Government in Washington drawing annual salaries who were detailed to go outside the city to work, practically permanent employment, who received their salary and in addition subsistence allowance all the time that they were away from Washington, although it was just as cheap for them to board where they were as to board in Washington.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was that during or after campaign time?

Mr. MANN. Well, it had nothing to do with the campaign time, I will say to the gentleman. These persons were not voters, and I have no doubt——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, there is no doubt there has been abuse, as in the acquisition of sites to public buildings. Employees who wanted to visit their homes or relatives or their friends would be detailed to go and investigate a site down in some locality.

Mr. MANN. Now, I do not think the heads of the departments try to do it; far from it. I am not criticizing them for it, but the clerks do work for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think these abuses crept into the law at times without the knowledge of the heads of the departments, although there are heads of departments and heads of departments.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

ALASKA, EXPENSES IN.

Insane of Alaska: For care and custody of persons legally adjudged insane in the Territory of Alaska, including transportation and other expenses, $70,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Why not strike out "the Territory of" and make it in Alaska, like it does everywhere else but under this head.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think there is one place where the words were overlooked. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out of line 3 the words "the Territory of."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 101, line 3, strike out the words "the Territory of."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Traffic in intoxicating liquors: For suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors among the natives of Alaska, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee why they find it necessary to appropriate $15,000 for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors in Alaska? I have not had the advantage of the committee's investigation on that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have to do that because depraved white men insist on selling liquor to the natives up there and debauching them. Up to this time we have been carrying $12,000, but the necessity for additional inspectors were shown, and we have recommended an increase of $5,000. The "bootlegger" in Alaska seems to be very active, and the sale of liquor to the natives is the most demoralizing thing that occurs there. Everybody interested in their civilization and advancement is very anxious to eliminate as far as possible this traffic.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FALCONER. I understand that we have about 65,000 people in the Territory of Alaska, one half of whom are natives and Indians and the other half white, a certain percentage of which, according to the testimony of the gentleman who is chairman of this committee, is "depraved white trash." Since the Government of the United States owns 95 per cent of the Territory of Alaska, and half the population natives and Indians, does it not occur to Members of the House that it is the office of the United States to eliminate whisky from Alaska? Is there any reason why the Government, having 35,000 natives and Indians in Alaska and being under a moral responsibility to protect these people, should not prohibit the manufacture or importation of whisky into the Territory of Alaska?

Now, it occurs to me—and I am not going to object to this item in the bill—that from the economic standpoint and from the standpoint of citizenship we should exclude from the Territory whisky.

Now, we have increased this appropriation $3,000 during the last year. I understand that the very best conditions obtain in Alaska, according to the testimony of some men, and yet we have to pay 50 cents per capita for every white man, whether he be of an average standard of citizenship or a "bootlegger," to keep him from giving to the unsophisticated natives of Alaska fire water which sets them crazy, a brand of liquor, according to the governor of Alaska called "40-rod whisky." I think the remark was made over there in the committee room that a man on taking a drink of this whisky could climb a telegraph pole——

Mr. COX. Backward—— [Laughter.]

Mr. FALCONER. And run up the side of a house. [Laughter.]. Or spit in the face of a Kadiac bear. [Laughter.] I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think it would be advisable to eliminate whisky entirely from Alaska? Would it not be advisable for this Congress, from the economic standpoint, to pass a prohibitory bill, providing that no intoxicating liquor be sold in Alaska?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say very frankly to the gentleman, expressing my own opinion, that I do not think that sort of legislation leads to satisfactory results, either as to intoxication or as to the sale of liquor. I am not in favor of prohibition laws in the United States or in Alaska. As to what the effect of this whisky is I do not know. I was never up there; I never drank it, and never tried to climb a telegraph pole. [Laughter.]

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted, I will say to the gentleman that most of the bad liquor comes from the State of Washington, from which the gentleman [Mr. FALCONER] hails, and they have to make expenditures of this same kind for the prevention of the sale of liquor to Indians in the State of Washington.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we could prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the State of Washington perhaps not so much of it would go up into Alaska.

Mr. FALCONER. A very healthy condition obtains up there, I understand from the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM].

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have not taken that position. [Laughter.]

Mr. FALCONER. Then you contend that there is an unsatisfactory condition?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I have not taken that position, either. [Laughter.]

Mr. FALCONER. Does not the gentleman think it would be advisable to put a statute on the books prohibiting the sale of liquor in Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not think it ought to extend to Alaska alone, but it should also extend to the State of Washington, from which most of the bad whisky we have in Alaska comes. [Laughter.]

Mr. FALCONER. Well, I can assure the gentleman that we are going to go "dry" in the coming year in the State of Washington, and that no more good whisky will be shipped to Alaska. And then what will happen? Will you still need this appropriation?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The situation in Alaska with respect to liquor is better to-day than it has ever been before. Our licenses are issued by the courts, upon petition by the people of the community, and the courts are very strict in the issuance of licenses and the control of saloons in the Territory. There is a class of people coming into Alaska in schooners—smugglers from the gentleman's district—and they bring bad whisky up there with them and peddle it to the natives, and it is for the purpose of catching that class of people from the gentleman's district——

Mr. MANN. No wonder the gentleman from Washington wants prohibition—— [Laughter.]

Mr. WICKERSHAM. That this money is appropriated to catch these whisky peddlers, these "bootleggers," from Puget Sound, who violate the law, and not the people of Alaska. [Applause and laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Sequoia National Park, Cal.: For protection and improvement, construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads other than toll roads, including the purchase of necessary land where and under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, for ranger station at a cost not exceeding $500; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept patented lands or rights of way whether over patented or other lands in the Sequoia National Park that may be donated for park purposes, $15,550.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Is this intended to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to purchase land for one ranger station at $500, or for a good many at $500 each? It says:

Including the purchase of necessary land * * * for a ranger station at a cost not exceeding $500.

Does that mean $500 for each station, and authorize various stations, or does it mean for one ranger station?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It means $500 a station.

Mr. MANN. It means only one station?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my recollection. I will refresh it, however, in a moment.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.: For protection and improvement, construction of roads, bridges, fences, and trails, and improvements of roads, $51,000.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to strike out the figures "$51,000" and to insert in lieu thereof the figures "$111,208."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 106, line 25, strike out the figures "$51,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$111,208."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, Mount Rainier Park has really for its asset Mount Rainier, also known as Mount Tacoma, which is the highest mountain in the United States. It is one of the most wonderful parks in the world, but it has not received anything like the consideration by Congress that other parks have received. For instance, there has been a greater trend of tourists into California for summer travel, and this park has been a little bit slower in developing; but the time has come for some kind of recognition to be given to it, and I believe the Committee on Appropriations would do well to accept the estimates that were made: For road construction and improvement, $43,708; survey for north side road, $12,500; construction of south side road, $50,000; construction of new trails, $5,000; making a total of $111,208. I should have added $8,792 for general purposes, making $120,000. If this amendment were adopted and proper recognition were given the park, I am sure that the Government would be spending the money wisely and properly in improving its own property. This mountain and park is a tremendous resource of the people of this country. Our tourists are continually going abroad and are spending large sums of money in seeing Switzerland, the Alps, or the Canadian Rockies or elsewhere. Reaching a height of 14,408 feet, it towers above Mount Shasta, in California (14,162 feet); Mount Hood, in Oregon (11,225 feet); Mount St. Helens (9,697 feet); Mount Adams (12,307 feet); and Mount Baker (10,730 feet). This splendid mountain stands 10,000 feet above its immediate base and covers 100 square miles of territory.

If the Government will do its part toward constructing roads and opening up this splendid park, the people of Washington will do a great deal more. The Mountaineers, a widely known mountain-climbing club, pioneered in ascending the mountain on the eastern side both in 1909 and 1912. This club is planning to circle the entire mountain in the summer of 1915, and will thus further explore the park.

The following letters show the interest taken and the demands of the park and of those public-spirited citizens who, without hope of reward, busy themselves in the interest of the park:

SEATTLE-TACOMA RAINIER NATIONAL PARK COMMITTEE,
Tacoma, Wash., December 3, 1913.

Hon. J. W. BRYAN, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BRYAN: Now that the regular session of Congress has begun and the estimates for Rainier National Park have been reported by the Department of the Interior, I am sending you, herewith inclosed, the recommendations and reports that have been made by our committee to the Department of the Interior, for it appears that our recommendations have been approved in every way.

We have not bothered you in the matter of urging our recommendations upon the Department of the Interior, for we felt that a sufficient burden would fall upon you when the estimates came up for committee consideration and, later, when the committee reports were considered in open Congress. Now that department estimates have been reported to Congress, I take the liberty of handing you the data filed by our committee with the Interior Department.

Put in brief, the recommendations of the intercity committee were for the following appropriations to be carried in the 1914 budget:

Road construction and improvement	$43,708
Survey of north-side road	12,500
To begin construction of south-side road	50,000
Construction of new trails	5,000
Total	111,208

To our recommendations as above indicated the department added an item of $8,792 for maintenance and general purposes, this added item making the total requested aappropriation $120,000, and it is this sum that the Department of the Interior has recommended.

When Secretary Lane and his principal assistant, Mr. Adolph C. Miller, visited Rainier National Park last August Secretary Lane requested that our committee secure the services of experts in road building and have prepared by them carefully considered recommendations for road construction and maintenance. This we did. Mr. Savage and Mr. Scofield went into the matter at length, and their carefully drawn report was submitted to the department, together with certain other recommendations of our committee. All of our suggestions were carefully drawn with a view to eliminating all unnecessary expenditure, and the members of our committee are exceedingly gratified to know that the officials of the Interior Department approved our report in every way.

I trust that you will have opportunity to read the intercity committee's recommendations and the report made by Mr. Savage and Mr. Scofield. Copies of both of these documents are sent herewith. Comparison with the estimates submitted by the Interior Department will show, I think, that our recommendations were closely followed. We are not advised as to when the park appropriations will come up for committee consideration. I am sending this data so that you may have opportunity to consider it in advance. If there is anything further that you should have in advance of committee hearings, kindly advise, and we will supply it immediately.

Awaiting your instructions in the matter, I beg to remain,

Very truly, yours,

T. H. MARTIN, Secretary.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ROAD AND TRAIL DEVELOPMENT IN RAINIER NATIONAL PARK, SUBMITTED BY SEATTLE-TACOMA RAINIER NATIONAL PARK COMMITTEE.

To the honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the Seattle-Tacoma Rainier National Park committee, held in the rooms of the New Seattle Chamber of Commerce, Seattle, Friday, October 3, 1913, various plans for road and trail development and maintenance in Rainier National Park were considered. Certain recommendations were decided upon, and these are submitted below. The improvement plans here recommended incorporate, in the judgment of our committee, road and trail development that is absolutely necessary to make the park reasonably accessible to the public.

The Secretary of the Interior visited Rainier National Park on August 15 of the current year. After his inspection of existing roads he conferred with members of our committee and the chief engineer of the State highway commission regarding recommendations that had been submitted to the department for road improvement and maintenance. At the conclusion of this conference the Secretary asked whether or not it would be possible to have the roads inspected by some experienced road builder; this for the purpose of securing the judgment of such a person on the matter of character and extent of work that should be done to complete the roads and maintain them in good condition. Members of our committee who were present promised that such an inspection would be arranged for, and the opinion of a road expert thus obtained submitted in due course to the department. In line with this understanding the intercity committee requested Mr. George Milton Savage and Mr. George Scofield, of Tacoma, both of them men of many years of practical experience in road building, to visit the park and make the investigation and report suggested by the Secretary. This plan was carried out, and a report, signed by both of the gentlemen named, was submitted to the intercity committee under date of September 29. The report was considered at yesterday's meeting of our committee, and is herewith transmitted to the Department of the Interior bearing our full approval.

The investigation made by Mr. Savage and Mr. Scofield was thorough, and their report bearing thereon is very comprehensive. It suggests a carefully considered plan for completing the present system of roads and making them safe. The report suggests methods for treatment of all parts of the road, and machinery best adapted for work of this character, and indicates materials that should be used. Further, the report gives definite estimates of cost for completing all units of the present road system, and recommends that the work outlined cover a period of five years on one of the units, three years on another unit, and one year on a third unit. Cost of all work and necessary equipment for first year is estimated at $43,708.

In line with this report, our committee recommends that the suggested plan be adopted, and that the item of expenditure for 1914 be included in the budget for that year.

A fundamental purpose of the Seattle-Tacoma Rainier National Park committee has been to advocate and work for development plans that would open up and make accessible all sections of the park. The general public has access now only to a limited region on the south side of the park. The beautiful natural parks of the north and east sides are not now accessible to the public for lack of roads. Surveys looking to road construction that will give access to the east side of the park are now under way, but nothing is being done to provide a way for travel to the beautiful north side parks. Our committee last year recommended appropriation of $25,000 to cover two surveys. An appropriation of $10,000 was made for a survey on the south side, and this survey is now in progress; but no provision was made for the survey recommended on the north side. We therefore urge again that provision be made for a road survey from the forest-reserve line near Fairfax up the Carbon River Valley to the Carbon Glacier, thence to Spray Park and Morain Park on the north side of the mountain. Approximate location of the road here proposed is indicated on map accompanying this report.

Besides the general desirability of making the beautiful north side parks accessible, there are two very practical reasons that actuate our committee in urging this phase of park development: The Northern Pacific Railway now operates to Fairfax, a point that is very near to the location where the proposed north side road would enter the national park. If the park were made accessible on the north side, as here proposed, the Northern Pacific Railway would immediately become interested in passenger travel to the park. This would greatly increase advertising and the general exploitation of Rainier National Park—an advantage that would result in tremendous benefit to the entire Northwest. More than this, entrance to the north side of the park, as shown by road systems indicated on accompanying map, would greatly shorten travel distances from the entire Puget Sound country to the national park. In view of the broad and general benefits to result from a north side entrance to the park, we respectfully urge that the 1914 budget carry an item of $12,500 for survey of a north side road, approximate location to be as above indicated.

Congress at the last session appropriated $10,000 for a road survey from a point near Longmire Springs to the eastern boundary of the forest reserve, there to connect with the county road leading west from North Yakima. After this appropriation was made it developed that the State of Washington and the county of Yakima had appropriated funds for the construction of a road from North Yakima through the forest reserve to the eastern boundary of the national park. This State and county road is now partially constructed; indeed, it is available for automobile travel from North Yakima to the summit of the Cascade Mountains, a point within 3 miles of the eastern boundary of the national park. The State and Yakima County jointly have appropriated $85,000 to complete this road to the park boundary, and the work is now under way. Beyond question the road will be completed during 1914. At the conference held with the Secretary of the Interior at the time of his visit to the national park in August, it was pointed out that it would be unnecessary for the Government survey to extend to the eastern boundary of the forest reserve; this because the State was then constructing the road through the forest reserve to the park boundary. Hence it would be necessary for the Government survey to extend only to the eastern boundary of the park, there to connect with the State and county road from North Yakima. For this reason the Government survey, now in progress, is being made from a point near Longmire Springs in a southerly direction, going outside of the park and through the forest reserve to a point in the Cowlitz Valley; thence north up the Chanapokosh Valley, leading along the eastern boundary of the park to a point near the center, where it is proposed to connect the Government road and the State road at the park boundary. This proposed line is indicated on accompanying map. The Government survey is running outside of the national park through the forest reserve in order that elevation of the road may not be greater than 3,000 feet. This route for the road was strongly recommended by Mr. F. E. Matthes, Government engineer, who made a very careful study of national park topography. Practically all engineers and mountaineers who are acquainted with snow conditions on the mountains agree that it will be necessary for this south-side road to run outside of the national park to gain levels that will make the road available for a reasonable portion of the year.

Since the State of Washington and Yakima County have undertaken the construction of a road to the eastern boundary of the national park—this to be completed during 1914—it seems important to our committee that work on the Government road, now being surveyed from a point near Longmire Springs, to connect with the State road at the eastern boundary of the park, be entered upon as soon as the survey is completed and the data thereon ready for submission to contractors. Our committee recommends, therefore, that an item of $50,000 be carried in the 1914 budget, this sum to be used in starting work on the south-side road now being surveyed, the sum appropriated for this purpose to be available as soon as the survey is completed and approved.

To provide access to many desirable points in the national park, and to provide means, as well, for proper fire patrol of the park forests, we recommend that an item of $5,000 be carried in the 1914 budget for construction of new trails.

For reasons stated, our committee strongly recommends the extension of national park boundaries as follows: To include the 3-mile strip of forest reserve along western boundary of park, the 6-mile strip of forest reserve lying north of the park, and enough of the forest reserve on south side of park to incorporate the south-side road, which is now being surveyed. Our first reason for making this recommendation is based upon the fact that the narrow strips of forest reserve indicated carry many parcels of magnificent timber that should be preserved as an important feature of national park interest. Our second reason for making the recommendation is to the end that the territory through which roads must pass in order to reach the national park be brought under the same departmental authority that deals with the national parks. Under present conditions road construction and maintenance through those forest-reserve strips entail great embarrassment. It has required years of effort to establish a workable plan for creating and maintaining a satisfactory road on the present route through the 3-mile strip of forest reserve lying west of the park. These embarrassing conditions will be obviated if the national park boundaries are extended to include these narrow strips of forest reserve. For the reasons named we strongly recommend that the strips of forest-reserve territory indicated be incorporated in the national park.

In the foregoing recommendations we have not touched upon regular park maintenance items. We feel that your department is in position to pass proper judgment on items of this character. Our recommendations bear only upon matters of park development, and the recommendations that we have made are for improvements that we believe to be absolutely necessary for the logical development of the park, to the end that it may be accessible, in a reasonable and proper measure, to the general public.

Respectfully submitted.

ASAHEL CURTIS, Chairman,
T. H. MARTIN, Secretary,
Seattle-Tacoma Rainier National Park Committee.

TACOMA, WASH., October 4, 1913.

I ask to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The estimate submitted by the superintendent of this park was $1,201,600 for improvements for next year. The department estimated $120,000. The appropriation for the current year is $13,400. The largest sum ever appropriated in any one year was $20,000. The committee will understand that neither the superintendent of the park nor the department were at all modest in their requests for the improvements to be made there. The committee recommends the appropriation of $51,000. It has done so after hearing the Army officer in charge of these roads and after considerable investigation and after examining the maps to indicate what was being done. For the benefit of those Members who are familiar with the park I will say that this money will improve and continue the road from the park boundary to the Nisqually Glacier. If that much were done next year it would be a very considerable improvement, and thereafter, I assume, it will be the policy year by year, within a reasonable amount, to carry on the work of opening up this park. There are 207,000 acres in it. The work can not be done very rapidly, but after consultation with a number of Members interested in the matter, this being the particular improvement which is most highly desired and which ought to be made if anything is to be done, the committee recommended $51,000, an increase of $37,000.

Mr. BRYAN. I hope my colleague will permit me to remind him whether he ought to say Mount Rainier or Mount Tacoma.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the amount appropriated is all that the gentleman from that section really expected the committee to recommend.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I desire to say that Mount Rainier National Park—I should say Rainier-Tacoma National Park, for that is what we call the mountain out West—is entirely within the district which I have the honor to represent. It is a national park of which we are all very proud. From letters I have received recently I think the citizens of all western Washington are pleased and gratified at what has been done by the Government for the improvement of the park and the roads within it. While we asked for $120,000 in order that we might carry out a general scheme which has been outlined, our people feel that the Committee on Appropriations has been quite liberal, particularly as definite promises are made as to future improvements. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York, gave us extended hearings, and is fully informed as to the plan to carry the State east-and-west road through the great park. To him I desire to say that the people of western Washington are gratified and pleased that through this appropriation of $51,000 the completion of a good, safe road far up into the snows of the most majestic and most beautiful mountain in the United States will be accomplished. Other improvements will follow. I think the chairman of the committee will agree that the delegation from Washington was most reasonable in accepting $51,000 for such a grand mountain.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the gentleman say that the delegation was satisfied with this?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The people of southwestern Washington district realize that they have submitted elaborate plans.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman is not opposing my amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no; I am not opposing the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mesa Verde National Park, Colo.: For protection and improvement, including the lands within 5 miles of the boundaries of said reservation, which, under the act of June 29, 1906, are to be administered by the same service established for the custodianship of the park, $10,000.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 107, strike out all after the word "improvement," in line 2, down to and including the word "park," in line 6.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the act referred to has been repealed and that the committee did not have knowledge of it until after the bill was reported. Our jurisdiction is confined to the park.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Platt National Park, Okla.: For maintenance, bridging, roads, and trails, $8,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. The gentleman from New York is quite familiar with the Platt National Park as an old proposition. What is the purpose now in reference to it, and can the gentleman tell us whether there is an item in the agricultural bill for it?

Mr. RAUCH. I understand that that item has been stricken out of the agricultural bill by the conferees.

Mr. MANN. The conference report has not yet been acted upon, but it proposes to strike out the item?

Mr. RAUCH. I understand the conference report proposes to strike out the item.

Mr. MANN. How can we spend $8,000 in this park unless they lay down gold dollars one on top of the other?

Mr. RAUCH. The expenditure is for bridges and roads and trails.

Mr. MANN. Why, you can step across it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is about a section and a half, nearly 900 acres.

Mr. RAUCH. I have here the expenditures.

Mr. MANN. Let us hear them.

Mr. RAUCH. Salaries, $3,640.

Mr. MANN. I thought so.

Mr. RAUCH Electric-light service, $250; telephone service, $100; repairs to buildings, $1,200; maintenance, repair and conconstruction of roads, trails and culverts, cutting wood, shoeing animals, planting and harvesting crops, repairs of farm tools, scavenger work, repairs of fences, $1,000; miscellaneous expenses, $310.

Mr. MANN. How are they doing all these things now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have the same amount in the deficiency bill of this year. We had to give it to them. The pitiful wail that went up from Oklahoma that the Government property was being destroyed, mutilated, and mistreated, and that some patriotic citizens were serving the Government without pay was too much for us.

Mr. MANN. Here is an appropriation for a park under a treaty with the Indians which we agreed to turn over to the State of Oklahoma. We failed to give it to them. Oklahoma says it will not take it as a gift. They will not accept it; it is not worth taking. Nobody will take it; it is a waif and an orphan in the world. Then we propose to spend $8,000 for maintenance, for building bridges, roads, and trails. There is nothing there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; there is something there.

Mr. MANN. There is some nasty water there which may be healthy. The local people will not take it; the State will not take it. They want to maintain it at Government expense, purely in the interest of people who keep boarding houses there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a regular gold mine for them.

Mr. MANN. Yes; for the people that keep the houses, and it is a gold mine for the people that draw the salaries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is aware that they took no chances in the appropriation this year.

Mr. MANN. I understand that not having it last year in the sundry civil bill, they got it in a deficiency bill. Then they went to the Senate and got an appropriation in the Agricultural bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then they found out that would put them under the Agriculture Department and they did not like it.

Mr. MANN. I notice, however, that the item was retained in conference on the Agricultural appropriation bill until the day it was to be reached in this House on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and it has not yet been disposed of in the Agricultural bill, for the conference report has not yet been acted upon. I never have seen anyone more careful of their chances than the people who are behind the Platt National Park.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have, in the case of Sullys Hill Park, in North Dakota. That was put in by the Senate in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. I am not familiar with that. The only way to be more careful would be to get this item in three different appropriation bills.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the Sullys Hill item did not appear in the sundry civil appropriation bill when it was reported to the House, so that it has been retained in the Agricultural appropriation conference report.

Mr. MANN. I will confess my ignorance, for I do not know where Sullys Hill is; but I have heard of the Platt National Park for many years, and I have never heard any good of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman ought to hear the gentlemen from Oklahoma who are temporarily absent.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have heard the gentlemen from Oklahoma who are temporarily out of the Chamber declare that the State of Oklahoma would not take it as a present.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 12 and 13, on page 107.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 107, strike out lines 12 and 13.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Oklahoma who is interested in this item of the Platt National Park is not present, and it is with some hesitancy that I have made the motion to strike it out in his absence; but as I have on several occasions prior to this time on the floor of the House stated that this is the most indefensible proposition I have ever known in any appropriation bill that is presented to the House of Representatives, and as we have tried repeatedly to give this piece of property to the State of Oklahoma, to the town that it adjoins or to the county in which it lies, and as the authorities will not take it as a gracious gift, I feel that I am quite within my rights in making the motion at this time. I am satisfied that these authorities never will accept that as a gift so long as the National Government makes an appropriation for its maintenance, and believing thoroughly that it is unjustifiable, that it should not be kept in the bill, I make the motion to strike it out.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this particular park is without a friend on the floor. I have no doubt that the Members from Oklahoma are interested in preserving this park and maintaining its rights. I would like very much to hear the arguments in answer to those that have been made against the appropriation. I therefore ask unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over without prejudice until tomorrow. It is now half past 7 o'clock and there are not more than 35 Members on the floor.

Mr. MANN. Oh, let us dispose of it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to pass over the paragraph without prejudice.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if we pass over these items we will never consider them. I will have to ask that the item be disposed of. Everybody wishes to have matters passed over, but they ought to be considered. I object to passing it over now.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not prevail. As a member of the subcommittee, and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I think the committee itself ought to defend the bill that it has reported. I admit that this item perhaps ought not to be in the bill. I admit that the item is not entirely justifiable; but I am surprised that having so large an attendance of the Democratic Members from Oklahoma this afternoon there is not a single solitary one of them here, so far as I can see, to defend the item at this time. Therefore I rise to defend it, not because it is entirely defendable, not because it ought beyond question to be in the bill, but because it is in the bill. The subcommittee reported it to the full committee, and I propose to stand by what we have done.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is mistaken; there is a gentleman from Oklahoma here.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Some one must have appeared before the committee or the subcommittee urging this appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; it was estimated for, and we appropriated for it because it was estimated for.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Wyoming has overlooked the fact that there are two Representatives from Oklahoma here.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, some one has sent out a hurry-up call, and the gentlemen from Oklahoma have at last appeared.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I feel, in view of what the gentleman has said, since it is now 35 minutes past 7 o'clock p. m., with a continuous session without adjournment, I should state that three Members from the State of Oklahoma were sitting downstairs at the table, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. CARTER, and myself, eating supper, as we would say at home, when we got word that the committee had reached this item in reference to the Platt Park. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Wyoming he is not at all in earnest about this matter.

Mr. MONDELL. Why, I am advocating the appropriation. I am the only one who has risen to defend it.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Well, then, the gentleman is a gentleman, a scholar, an orator, and a statesman.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the gentleman, since he has come in after the motion was made, I desire to plead guilty to being the gentleman who moved to strike out this appropriation. Now, if the gentleman will indulge me——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I know the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will give me one reason why the item should stay in the bill——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Well, the first is this, the park costs less to maintain than any park in the United States.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman really give that as a reason?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Well, the main reason for it is this: It is more than a park; it is a health resort, and twice as many people visit that park than any other park in the United States, according to the Government records, and if you are going to maintain any park, why not maintain one which the great body of the people visit.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Where do these people come from who visit this park? From the town that adjoins it?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. From all over the country. The people of North Carolina if they understood——

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. My information has been the principal good that comes from this was that the town that adjoins it got its water supply furnished it by the Government.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Well, every town that gets an appropriation like any town in the gentleman's district is benefited by reason of the appropriation from the Federal Government. Any town, of course, is benefited from any appropriation, and this town, of course, gets its benefit indirectly just like a town down in the gentleman's district.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. A direct benefit comes to this particular locality; the indirect benefit is entirely lacking.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; the direct benefit is that same benefit that flows to any people that look for a place for resort and for a playground for the public when men want to get away from business.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Seriously, does not the gentleman think the State of Oklahoma ought to pay for this resort and not the United States?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I do not; no, sir.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Well, I know of no other resort of this sort that is maintained——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. What about the Yellowstone Park?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman does not put this in the same category?

Mr. CARTER. Did the gentleman from North Carolina ever hear of the Hot Springs, Ark.?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes, sir; I have heard of it.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman says there is no other resort of this sort that is maintained by the Government.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Does the gentleman think it is anything like Hot Springs?

Mr. CARTER. It is the same character of park, exactly.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. I have rather too much information, real information, about this appropriation and this proposition for the two gentlemen, one on my left and the other on my right, both from Oklahoma, to enlighten me as to the real merits or demerits of this proposition, and I shall insist upon my amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The gentleman does not mean that at all. The gentleman just wants to have a little fun. I am going to leave it to the good sense of the House to vote against the motion of the gentleman to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on this amendment for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is recognized.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, this Platt National Park, which has been gone over so often in this House, is a small Government park in Murray County, Okla., in the district represented by my colleagues Mr. THOMPSON and Mr. WEAVER. It is a health resort somewhat similar to Hot Springs, Ark.; perhaps not quite so extensive and elaborate as Hot Springs and not quite so famous in its restitution of the afflicted to health, but nevertheless it is a splendid health resort where a great many people go in the summer months for recreation and health. It was purchased by the Government and set aside at a price, as I recall, of nearly $200,000. There are improvements there now which should be taken care of, and the only thing that this appropriation provides for is for the administration of the park and care of the improvements. I am surprised at my friend from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE]——

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; in a moment. I am surprised that my friend from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], in the discharge of his official duties as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, would want to abandon and let go to wrack a valuable piece of property belonging to the Federal Government.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I promised to yield to my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON] first.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The gentleman from North Carolina and other gentlemen have tried to give to the State of Oklahoma this piece of property, and you would not take it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. After you paid $200,000 for it?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Yes. It is of more value than that.

Mr. CARTER. That is the reason why I criticize the gentleman. He is now so derelict in his duty in guarding the interests of the Government that he would abandon this splendid health resort for a niggardly $8,000.

The gentleman has just read to this side of the House a lecture on economy, and now for the sum of $8,000 he proposes to abandon and leave to rack and ruin of neglect property costing this Government $200,000. I am furthermore surprised at the gentleman for the reason that no opposition was made to this item in the consideration by the Committee on Appropriations, but now, when he found the Members of the Oklahoma delegation temporarily absent from this Chamber, getting their supper, as we all have to do at this time of the evening, he takes advantage of that absence and tries to strike this item from the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], that it is not a local park at all. It serves Kansas and Texas and Arkansas, besides Oklahoma and——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. And New Mexico.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Yes. As I said a moment ago, more people go to the Platt National Park than go to the Yellowstone Park. We have 12 national parks, and the Platt National Park in Oklahoma entertains more visitors than any other park in the United States, with the exception of the Hot Springs National Park.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, in view of the fact that this appropriation has recently disappeared from another appropriation bill, and in view of the eloquent plea of the three gentlemen from Oklahoma, I withdraw my amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To reimburse the United States the amount due on account of one-half of the per capita cost of maintenance of indigent patients in Freedmen's Hospital from the District of Columbia in excess of the number charged to and paid for by said District during the fiscal years 1906 to 1913, inclusive, there shall be transferred from the revenues of the District of Columbia to the United States, beginning with the fiscal year 1915, the sum of $41,209.73, which amount so transferred shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, What does this language mean in that transferred item of the Freedman's Hospital, "There shall be transferred from the revenues of the District of Columbia to the United States, beginning with the fiscal year 1915, the sum of $41,209.73, which amount so transferred shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts"? What does that language, "beginning with the fiscal year 1915," mean?

Mr. RAUCH. It is to make the transfer as of the beginning of the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. MANN. That is not what it says. It does not say "the beginning of the year 1915," but to make the transfer "beginning with the fiscal year 1915." I really do not see what the point to that language is.

Mr. RAUCH. It is intended to mean as of the year 1915.

Mr. MANN. You do not need to have that language at all if the transfer is to be made in the fiscal year 1915, because this bill takes effect then, with the beginning of the fiscal year 1915. I do not think it is material, but that language does not mean anything the way it stands in the bill, unless it is intended to run for a series of years.

Mr. RAUCH. In the event that this bill had become a law in May, for example, we did not want it to become operative until the beginning of the fiscal year. This language was intended to take care of the situation if this bill had passed at an earlier date.

Mr. MANN. Then I should suppose instead of saying—

Beginning with the fiscal year—

You would have said—

With the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. MONDELL. Or—

At the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, including not exceeding $10,000 for salaries of necessary employees at the seat of government, $300,000: Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Mr. MOORE. I move to strike out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, beginning with line 16, strike out the following words: "Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

Mr. BARTLETT. A parliamentary inquiry. I understand the gentleman moves to strike out the proviso.

Mr. MOORE. I move to strike out the two provisos which have been read by the Clerk, beginning with line 16 and continuing to the end of the paragraph.

This matter has been fought over in the House before, and if the trust legislation recently passed through the House means anything, this paragraph is unnecessary. The two provisos which we have here have something of a history. If we are to believe the statements of certain of our friends who assume to speak for the organized-labor movement of the United States, they have been contested for for 20 or 25 years. They appear to establish class legislation, and to set aside from the operation of the law certain men who by reason of their exemption would have privileges under the law which are not accorded to other men, contrary to the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, of the Constitution of the United States, and of all that we have ever been taught with regard to the equal rights of men.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman point out what part of the Constitution of the United States either of these provisos would contravene?

Mr. MOORE. I think the spirit of the Constitution, as well as the letter of it, provides for the equality of man, so far as the protection of the law is concerned. I call the gentleman's attention to the fourteenth amendment——

Mr. BARTLETT. The fourteenth amendment does not affect Congress. That simply restrains the States.

Mr. MOORE. Oh, I think it establishes a principle believed in by almost everybody in the United States, that before the law all men are equal; and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], who is interested in this paragraph, and who has introduced a bill to set aside from the operation of the law certain men engaged in certain kinds of business——

Mr. BARTLETT. I have got the principles of my bill incorporated in the antitrust bill which has passed the House.

Mr. MOORE. If that be true, it is absolutely unnecessary here.

Mr. BARTLETT. But if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. MOORE. Of course, I have not very much time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I apprehend the gentleman can get more time if he wants it. I was interested in knowing what provision of the Constitution this legislation contravenes. The gentleman suggested the fourteenth amendment, and I suggested——

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman asked for something specific. You will find something in the fourteenth amendment about every man having an equal right to the protection of the law.

Mr. BARTLETT. In the States.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman will also find a great deal in the preamble——

Mr. BARTLETT. The fourteenth amendment provides that the States shall not deprive anyone of the equal protection of the laws.

Mr. MOORE. I am trying to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BARTLETT. The fourteenth amendment simply restrains the States. There is nothing in the Constitution that restrains Congress in this respect.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman takes the ground that there is nothing in the Constitution that gives a man protection before the law——

Mr. BARTLETT. I never took any ground of that sort.

Mr. MOORE. I make the statement that this would appear to be class legislation, and that the bill which the gentleman introduced, which is voiced by these provisos, contemplates the exemption of a certain class of our citizens from the operation of laws which apply to other citizens. Either that, or these provisos are innocuous. Now, I was about to say that these provisos have a history. They have been advocated here for a great many years upon the ground that certain organizations ought to be privileged from the operation of the so-called antitrust laws. It has been said that the act of 1890, the Sherman antitrust law, contemplated that farmers' organizations and labor organizations should be excluded from the operation of that act.

It has been so stated on the floor. It is constantly stated in the literature that comes to Members of Congress. These statements are usually attributed to one or two men who are dead—Senator Hoar and Senator Sherman. It happens that Senator Edmonds, of Vermont, one of the great lawyers of these times, one of the great men who had to do with the passage of the Sherman antitrust law, is still alive, and out of his mouth we have it that there was no exemption such as has been suggested contemplated in the passage of this law, and that it would have been absurd to say that Congress intended to pass a law excepting a class of citizens from its operation.

The gentleman from Georgia has his own opinion and I have mine. It should not worry a Member of Congress to go before his constituents and say that he did not vote to except any one man from the operation of the law that he held another to, but that he did stand for equal rights for all men before the law. I think the gentleman from Georgia in advocating the Bartlett bill took the other side—that a few men would thus be picked out of millions of others and made exempt from the operation of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Now, I am not a lawyer with the fine constitutional capabilities of the gentleman from Georgia and many other of the lawyers in this House. But I think I have the common-sense view of it, and I think I have the patriotic view of it. It is not a question of courage at all. It is a question of doing what is right. I believe that if we stand here for legislation that means equality before the law, we are doing exactly what is right; and when we stand for legislation that specializes certain men, takes them out from the operations of the law, we are doing what is contrary to the oath we take when we come here and swear that we will support the Constitution and the laws of this country.

I am not alone in this view of it. Many of our great lawyers take the same view of it. The other day it was said that Mr. Roosevelt had a different view on this proposition, and that when he and his party came into power there would be an exemption, not such as the Democratic Party proposed here, which is said to be innocuous, but an exemption that would be a real exemption.

Now, we have it from the mouth of Mr. Roosevelt himself that he was opposed to this kind of legislation, and he so told the leaders of the labor organization when they called upon him. There was no hesitation on his part. The gentlemen who assumed to speak for him on this floor have entirely misconstrued and misinterpreted what he said if they say that Mr. Roosevelt ever favored exemption of a certain class from the laws of this country.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. For a question.

Mr. BRYAN. Can the gentleman point to any statement of Mr. Roosevelt wherein he has said that he was opposed to this?

Mr. MOORE. I certainly can, and I am glad the gentleman asked the question, because I thought he probably would. I assume now that the gentleman is speaking for the Progressive Party.

Mr. BRYAN. I am speaking for myself.

Mr. MOORE. President Roosevelt was speaking to Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor. Mr.

Roosevelt said to him in regard to these efforts to obtain special privileges for special classes of workingmen:

But, understand me, gentlemen, if I ever thought it necessary, if I thought a combination of laborers were doing wrong, I would apply for an injunction against them just as quickly as against so many capitalists.

Mr. BRYAN. But he never said it was wrong to do the things mentioned in this act.

Mr. MOORE. When I get leave to extend my remarks I will put a good deal more in the RECORD that Mr. Roosevelt said, which controverts the statement made by the Progressives that they would give "real exemption to labor" when they came into power. The Democratic Party may not intend to give exemption to labor by this proviso. It may or may not be antitrust legislation. I question whether it is effective, because at the close of the first proviso it takes care of the Democratic Party, if it does not satisfy the labor leaders, by saying that that thing which shall be exempt from the operation of the law "shall not in itself be unlawful." Then what is the use of putting this on the statute books at all? Mr. Roosevelt was not in favor of this kind of legislation.

Mr. Taft vetoed the bill with this paragraph in it when it came before him, and your President, Mr. Woodrow Wilson, held it up for a long time, giving the general public the impression that he did not propose to stand for this legislation; finally he permitted the bill with the exemption clause to pass with a statement to the public which is not of record—a mere statement to the newspapers—that this not being substantive legislation he did not think himself warranted in vetoing the bill. You are now going to send it back to him in the form of substantive legislation, as you lawyers call it, as it appears in the antitrust bill. There is no necessity of sending it back again in this appropriation bill, because this is an innocuous paragraph, if that line "not in itself unlawful" means anything. That may be a sop to labor, but——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is more indefensible talk about this paragraph than any other item in any bill during my service in Congress. This item for the enforcement of the antitrust laws was first inserted in an appropriation bill on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, Judge BARTLETT.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; it was on motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman corrects me. It was the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. BARTLETT. I wrote the amendment, but he offered it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because the Republican administrations had not been prosecuting trusts that were violating the Sherman antitrust law. The gentleman from Georgia understands that I am talking about the appropriation bill when I say that he was the first one to suggest it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then it was found out that even after the appropriation was made, and $500,000 was carried in the bill in 1904, practically none of it was used the first year, and it was nearly four or five years before it was used. Then a case or two arose when it was ascertained that there seemed to be more interest in prosecuting labor organizations than the great trusts that were feeding upon the mass of the people. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] grows very indignant because there has been attached to this paragraph a proviso requiring this appropriation to be expended for services in the prosecutions of industrial combinations, railroad combinations that violate the antitrust law, and that it shall not be used in prosecuting labor organizations or farmers' unions that may come within the purview of the law. The purpose was to give no excuse to any administration that it did not have ample funds to vigorously enforce the antitrust law against industrial combinations. The gentleman from Pennsylvania now complains about this action of the House in discriminating, taking one class out of the operation of the law and making it a preferred class. Let me recall to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that during the administration of President Taft there was prepared under the supervision of Attorney General Wickersham, under the immediate supervision of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], now a Senator from that State, what was known as the administration railroad bill, and that bill as reported to this House contained a provision which eliminated the great railroads of the country from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law, and President Taft, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and all of the other servile followers of President Taft who are denouncing Members because they limit the appropriation so that it will be utilized for the purposes originally intended, were all anxious to have the Sherman antitrust law so amended that it would not affect the great railroads.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not this same provision incorporated in the Clayton antitrust law lately passed by the House?

Mr. BARTLETT. That is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be. I do not recall.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Georgia and the other Members about the gentleman from New York say that it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assume that it was. I am pointing out the difference in the attitude of gentlemen. They were willing to exempt the railroads of the country from the Sherman antitrust law and yet complain that an appropriation intended for prosecution of great industrial combinations is confined to that purpose. The United States Supreme Court has just handed down a decision in the International Harvester Co. against the State of Missouri, and I desire to quote briefly from the opinion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The United States Supreme Court has just handed down a decision in International Harvester Co. against Missouri, justifying a statute against the charge of illegal discrimination, and in that case the court said:

In State v. Standard Oil Co. (218 Mo., 1, 370, 372), the Supreme Court held that the antitrust statutes of the State "are limited in their scope and operations to persons and corporations dealing in commodities, and do not include combinations of persons engaged in labor pursuits." And, justifying the statutes against a charge of illegal discrimination, the court further said that "it must be borne in mind that the differentiation between labor and property is so great that they do not belong to the same general classification of rights or things and have never been so recognized by the common law or legislative enactments."

Accepting the construction put upon the statute, but contesting its legality as thus construed, plaintiff in error makes three contentions: (1) The statutes as so construed unreasonably and arbitrarily limit the right of contract; (2) discriminate between the vendors of commodities and the vendors of labor and services; and (3) between vendors and purchasers of commodities.

The Harvester Co. appealed from this judgment on the ground that labor organizations were not included within the scope of the Missouri statute.

Mr. BARTLETT. That they were expressly exempted?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That they were expressly exempted.

Mr. MOORE. Give us the citation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have already cited it. It is the case of the International Harvester Co. of America, plaintiffs in error, against the State of Missouri, on the information of the Attorney General. The court further says:

(2) and (3) These contentions may be considered together, both involving a charge of discrimination—the one because the law does not embrace vendors of labor, the other because it does not cover purchasers of commodities as well as vendors of them. Both, therefore, invoke a consideration of the power of classification which may be exerted in the legislation of the State. And we shall presently see that power has very broad range. A classification is not invalid because of simple inequality. We said in Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Matthews (174 U. S., 96, 196), by Mr. Justice Brewer, "The very idea of classification is that of inequality, so that it goes without saying that the fact of inequality in no manner determines the matter of constitutionality." Therefore, it may be there is restraint of competition in a combination of laborers and in a combination of purchasers, but that does not demonstrate that legislation which does not include either combination is illegal. Whether it would have been better policy to have made such comprehensive classification it is not our province to decide. In other words, whether a combination of wage earners or purchasers of commodities called for repression by law under the conditions in the State was for the legislature of the State to determine.

The court further says:

And so in the case at bar. Whether the Missouri statute should have set its condemnation on restraints generally, prohibiting combined action for any purpose and to everybody, or confined it as the statute does to manufacturers and vendors of articles and permitting it to purchasers of such articles; prohibiting it to sellers of commodities and permitting it to sellers of services, was a matter of legislative judgment, and we can not say that the distinctions made are palpably arbitrary, which we have seen is the condition of judicial review. It is to be remembered that the question presented is of the power of the legislature, not the policy of the exercise of the power. To be able to find fault, therefore, with such policy is not to establish the invalidity of the law based upon it.

Whatever may be the opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I agree with the court that there is a substantial and vital difference between the regulation of the right of human beings to labor and the dealing in commodities, and I am not willing, whatever may be the opinion of anyone else—and I say it so that there may be no misunderstanding of my position—that the one law without any distinction or difference should not apply to labor, the right to labor, and dealing in commodities. [Applause.] I do not believe that this appropriation put at the disposal of the administration to prosecute the violators of the Sherman antitrust law, the industrial combinations that were enriching themselves at the expense of the country in violation of the law, should attempt to control or to coerce men combined in organization for the betterment of their condition.

If members of these organizations do violate any law and are subject to any criminal prosecution, there are ample means and ample remedy to reach them in a proper manner. This appropriation in my opinion should be segregated. I rejoice that the committee included this recommendation in the bill and I hope that it will remain in it.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman says that there would be ample remedy to prosecute any member of a union who violated the law. Would that apply to an organization which had its headquarters, say, in Indianapolis but which operated in New York?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I assume so.

Mr. MOORE. Would not it be bound solely by the laws of the State in which the act was committed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; because the Department of Justice has just been conducting, if it has not completed, before the grand jury of the southern district of New York, an investigation of the operations of the members of a labor union in the State of New York, the headquarters of which are located in the city of New York. And they were able to do it although it was prohibited from using any person paid out of this fund.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out these provisions. In the act of 1890 it was not contemplated to embrace organizations of labor, organized for the purpose of bettering their condition or increasing their wages or lessening their hours of labor. We are told by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that we have cited the testimony of dead witnesses—Senator Hoar, Senator George, and others—in sustaining our position that that act was not intended to apply to such organizations. It was not the intention of Congress when it enacted the law of 1890 to apply that act to labor organizations. It happens to be that the evidence we have produced from these dead witnesses are the words and the language used by the witnesses embalmed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and in books by the Senator, that have been written by those men who served their country and have passed from the stage of action.

If you gentlemen will read the book written by Mr. Hoar, detailing his experience as a Member of this House and as a Member of the Senate, you will find that Senator Hoar bears testimony to the proposition not only by what he said in the Senate, but also by what he wrote in his book and handed down to posterity—his fame as an author and a great lawyer and a great statesman—concerning the act of 1890, denying that labor organizations were intended to be embraced within the purview of that or intended to be subject to prosecution for violations of the antitrust law. From 1890 to 1902 no money was ever appropriated by Congress for the prosecution of the violators of the antitrust law, and the only money used for prosecutions generally was used for the prosecution of labor organizations. On the other hand, those great organizations that battened and fattened upon the people, and laid a monopolizing hand on commerce, were not only not prosecuted, but were the favorites of the Republican President then in power.

That has been demonstrated time and time again by investigations made by Congress, notably the investigation of the affairs of the United States Steel Corporation. That organization was not only not prosecuted under President Roosevelt, but was granted leave and license to violate the antitrust law and to buy out its only real rival in the manufacture of iron and steel, the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co., and the president of the Santa Fe Railroad was made a cabinet officer in the cabinet of President Roosevelt, although admittedly guilty of violations of the law, and he was left unprosecuted.

EXEMPTION OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Mr. Roosevelt is said to be not in favor of this. Of course he was not in favor of it, because the men in his favor who violated the Sherman antitrust law were not the labor people, but great captains of industry like Paul Morton and Gary and McCormick and Perkins of the Harvester Trust. They could receive license at his hands and not be prosecuted for the violation of the law, but the laboring organizations formed for the purpose of bettering the conditions of those who labor were the peculiar objects of prosecution at the hands of the Republican administration and at the hands of President Roosevelt. And he is now said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to be opposed to this provision.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that it is not only our right but our duty to place limitations upon appropriation bills to limit the expenditure of money when we do not desire it to be used in a way we are opposed to. Our forefathers in the English Parliament used it in the days of the tyrannous English kings to force relief from them when they could not get it otherwise, and we find Lord Coke heading a procession of the members of the House of Parliament and going to King Charles to present a petition of right, which is the second great Magna Charta of all English people, and refusing to give to the King the means to carry on the Government until he should consent not to billet soldiers upon the people in time of peace, and until he should grant them the relief demanded by the great English House of Commons. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. And for one, Mr. Chairman, drawing my inspiration from the history of the race to which I belong, a race which has battled for liberty and transmitted to posterity and to us the free institutions under which we live, and which we ought to preserve, it does not at all frighten me or stay me in the least in carrying out my purpose to say that it is irregular or unlawful by an item on an appropriation bill to limit the power of the Executive in the administration or expenditure of the money that we appropriate. I do not know whether President Wilson will veto this provision or not. I know that President Taft did veto it; but I also know that two-thirds of this House overrode that veto.

From 1874 there had been on the Federal statute books an election law, for the enforcement of which large sums of money had been appropriated. Hundreds and hundreds of thousands of dollars had been appropriated and paid to a man in New York by the name of John A. Davenport, who on the day of election surrounded the polls in New York with his subordinates, and who, on the day of election, placed deputy marshals at the polls in many of the Southern States. Vast sums of money have been appropriated and paid out for that purpose, but when the Democratic House in 1879 came to consider the Army appropriation bill, particularly an item authorizing in certain parts of this country the use of soldiers to gather around and guard the polls, doing what they said was the "enforcement of the law," the Democratic House put on the Army appropriation bill this provision:

> That no money appropriated in this act is appropriated or shall be paid for the subsistence, equipment, transportation, or compensation of any portion of the Army of the United States to be used as a police force to keep the peace at the polls at any election held within any State.

A Democratic House put that upon the bill, and it was carried through the Senate by the aid of Democratic votes. President Hayes vetoed that bill, and we were told then that Democrats in the House and Democrats in the Senate were endeavoring to withhold support from the Army, because the amendment contained not only a prohibition against the use of the Army at the polls but declared that no appropriation in that bill, no money for subsistence, for transportation, salaries, or for any other purpose should be paid to the Army if used as a police force at the polls on the day of election. That was one of the reasons why, as soon as the Democrats got control of both the House and the Senate and we had a Democratic President, one of the first acts of the Democratic House and the Democratic Senate was to eradicate from the statute books those infamous laws that allowed the use of soldiers at the polls on the day of election. And it was by reason of the fact that the Democratic House and the Democrats in the Senate used this power of withholding funds from one of the executive departments that we were relieved from the abuse of the Army and its use as policemen on the day of election.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. So we have precedents hoary with age, precedents preserved and honored in the history of the English-speaking people, that not only authorize but justify the legislative branch of the Government in placing restrictions upon appropriation bills, so that if the people can get relief in no other way we can get relief from the executive branches of the Government, the President, or others who administer the laws, by withholding our consent that the money we appropriate shall be used in a way that we do not desire to have it used. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my good friend [Mr. MOORE], raises a constitutional question. I notice that the Constitution is never in his way unless he wants to use it on some such occasion as this. When the rights of the States are to be trampled down, when Congress is to use a power not granted by the Constitution, he never thinks of it or dreams of it. When I ask him what provision of the Constitution this law violates, he does not even know. I do not blame him. He does not pretend to be a lawyer——

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. I have always denied that I was a lawyer, but I take it that if anyone will read the preamble to the Constitution and get the spirit of it he will find that it breathes equality

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; but, Mr. Chairman, there is not a thing in the Constitution or any of its amendments that forbids Congress to pass a law that will exempt from its provisions certain classes. We do it every day. The war-revenue act of 1898 and the income tax law and other laws which we have passed exempt certain classes of people from their provisions. There is no prohibition against Congress passing class legislation. There is a provision in the fourteenth amendment which declares that no State shall deny to anyone the equality of the law, but there is no such restriction against Congress. There is also a provision in the fourteenth amendment that no State shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and amendment 5 of the Constitution provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. Since my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has awakened to the realization that he can sometimes remember that we have a Constitution, I hope he will extend his studies now and find out something that is in the Constitution.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, waiving for a moment the question of equal rights under the Constitution, I ask the gentleman if it is not good, well-settled Democratic doctrine that there shall be equal righs to all and special privileges to none?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; that is good Democratic doctrine, which my friend and his party have never followed and never invoked except in the interest of great corporations that are wanting to oppress and grind down the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You never invoked that in the interest of the laboring man or the farmer. It is only when we undertake to prevent the prosecution of men for that which is no crime, when great combinations of wealth and power have used that prosecution as a means of oppression that you cry "Constitution!" My friend has never yet waked up to a realization that the Constitution was intended for anybody else except the peculiar kind of constituency that he represents. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. My colleague is such a profound lawyer that I want to ask him a question which I think will enable him to buttress his argument considerably. During the thousand years of English jurisprudence and the preceding thousand years of Roman jurisprudence, in all the legislation as to the corn laws, the cornering of the market, forestalling, regrating, and engrating, was any such legislation ever directed to production and consumption?

Mr. BARTLETT. Never.

Mr. ADAMSON. Was it not all directed to the speculator and the middleman?

Mr. BARTLETT. Always, and never in the world has brawn and muscle been held to make a monopoly. It was those people who cornered the market, who gathered goods together and undertook to forestall that laws against monopoly were enacted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I close where I began. I am proud to belong to an English-speaking race that has preserved the right of the Government to always restrain by its limitations the use of money that we furnish it with so that it can not be used except as Congress shall direct. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I want to see if we can not agree on some time for debate on this paragraph. How much time is wanted on that side?

Mr. MONDELL. I think we will want about 50 minutes on this side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, we can not agree to that.

Mr. MONDELL. Why, the gentleman from Georgia has just occupied 20 minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT. How much time did I occupy, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman occupied 15 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that perhaps we can get along with 25 minutes on this side. The gentleman from Pennsylvania wants 10 minutes, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] 5 minutes, the gentleman from Nebraska 5 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] 5 minutes, and I would like 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and pending amendments be closed in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and pending amendments close in 40 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, I suppose the discussion is to be confined to the motion. I hope the gentleman will not include all amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I include all amendments. We have had half an hour of discussion on this matter now.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it understood that the Chair will recognize the gentlemen on this side who have been mentioned?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the gentleman from Wyoming control 30 minutes and I control 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 40 minutes—30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming and 10 minutes by the gentleman from New York. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to offer some amendments to this paragraph after it is acted upon, and I should like to discuss it for five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is reasonable to close all debate or we never will get through.

Mr. MOORE. I propose to offer an amendment that affects the substance of the proviso, and I think the amendment ought to be discussed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can offer the amendment before he uses his time.

Mr. MOORE. I have three amendments, and I will offer them now if I can have time, not exceeding 10 minutes, to discuss them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That would make an hour. I will make it 50 minutes. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to 50 minutes, 35 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming and 15 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in 50 minutes, 35 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming and 15 minutes by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, in my time I want to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, line 19, after the word "view," insert the following: "The increase of manufactures for domestic consumption, the lowering of the price thereof, or the development of export trade."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I also send the following amendment to the desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, line 19, after the word "view," insert the words: "The protection of life or property, the promotion of trade or employment."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I also offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 115, line 19, after the word "view," insert the words "the welfare of labor, organized and unorganized."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] a little while ago quoted from one of the Senators long since passed away in support of his contention that labor organizations and farmers' unions were to be exempted from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law. The gentleman has been interested in the farmers' unions, but I think it was the gentleman from Georgia, the late Mr. Roddenbery, who introduced the first amendment offered in this House exempting the farmers' organizations, and that was because of the fact that the labor organizations had made the agitation and expected to be exempted. The farmers' organizations were tacked on in that way.

I desire to say, further, with respect to these distinguished statesmen who have passed beyond and who are being constantly quoted as having said that farmers' and labor organizations were to be exempted from the operation of the Sherman antitrust law, that ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, who is still living, and who therefore has a right to speak out of his own memory, who was chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate that passed that bill, gave out an interview the other day saying that these organizations were not to be exempted, and while I shall put the interview in full in the RECORD, I desire to read this extract from the statement of Mr. Edmunds, who, perhaps, is the greatest surviving statesman of that time:

Such legislation would be so absolutely unjust and unequal and such a complete reversal of constitutional liberty and equal rights that even discussion of it would seem to be absurd.

I place that opinion of a great constitutional lawyer against the opinion of that other great constitutional lawyer, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], for whose opinion generally I have very great respect.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I have not the time.

Mr. BARTLETT. I yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. That is very true, and I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman if the gentleman from Georgia could help me, but I have not the time now. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe labor is being assisted by the Democratic Party in the passage of these provisos. I believe the Democratic Party has thrown out an anchor to windward to protect itself when the constitutional question is raised. I believe it has thrown a sop to labor in this proviso, and that it knows, whether the gentleman from Georgia knows it or not, that these provisos are innocuous and mean nothing. If labor is satisfied with this, very well. I have never been afraid to face labor nor to talk to labor leaders face to face, and I believe that labor understands a sop when it sees it, and knows when a party is fooling them. The Democratic Party has been fooling labor, including Samuel Gompers and others. It has been fooling them in the speeches made in this House, in the resolutions passed at Baltimore, and in the provisos put in this sundry civil bill for the second time. You have already put this sop in the antitrust law, even though you do not expect to have it passed at the other end of this Capitol. Why rub it in here?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I note that within the terms of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania the second provision to be thrown out is as follows:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

I call the attention of the committee to the fact that this amendment has been argued now for more than half an hour and there has been but the faintest reference to the second paragraph. On two or three occasions I have asked the sponsors of these provisions what farmers' organizations, the farmers of what community of the United States, represented by whom and before what committee, have asked that this provision be placed in this bill or any similar bill. I come from a purely agricultural district. If I understand the people of my district and the farmers of the United States, representing a larger number of people than are represented in the first exemption provision, they do not ask to be treated differently before the law or before the courts from the people of any other profession. The facts are that this seems to be introduced from time to time as a crutch for the labor-exemption proposition to be limped in upon. The real force of that was demonstrated in the reading of the case of the International Harvester Co. against the State of Missouri by the chairman of the committee. There the court made this distinction in substance, that it would protect labor as against property.

Note you, under the second provision, it is not labor there that is protected, but it is property, the right to control its sale, and the right to combine for sale. So that if there ever was any reason for putting the second provision in and any reason for us to think it would judicially stand, if there is any force in the decision which the gentleman has read which would protect the labor clause, it will not stand on the second provision. That is the farmers' exemption. It was the linking together of these provisions, one valid and the other invalid, which prompted a large number of this House to override the Taft veto involving this question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit, if the gentleman will read that opinion, he will find out that such distinction can be made also——

Mr. SLOAN. It is not necessary to read it; I heard it read in the dulcet tones of the gentleman. Of course, he read it correctly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I only read the portion that applied to labor organizations, because that is the only portion which was criticized by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SLOAN. But the gentleman made this decision, or rather the decision made this distinction, and the gentleman challenged special attention to it, that property could not be protected and labor could. They were not put on the same basis. But it is true the farmers' products are on the same basis and ought to be on the same basis as the products of any other man's toil. The farmer is a manufacturer just the same as the man who makes farm implements. It takes an engineer now to be a farmer; it takes an economist and a scientist combined with engineering to be a successful farmer.

The farmers of the United States will insist upon, not exemption, so that they will stand better before the court or that they may have indulgence to commit misdemeanors and crimes in this country, but they do ask that in the legislation of this country they shall have equal treatment. They would rather be not discriminated against by putting their products in free, open competition with the farmers of Argentina, Canada, and Australia for American markets than to give them special indulgence before the courts. They have not consented to trade a doubtful right for free combination for the burdens of free trade in all they produce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, there are certain rights which men take along with the right to inhabit the earth. Among those rights is the right to labor and to enjoy the fruits of that labor. This is more than a so-called vested right in property; it is a natural, inherent right of man. It is as sacred to him as the right of habitation itself. It is as vital to his existence as the breath of life. He must have the right to labor in order to live.

And there are certain rights in which man is upheld in a supreme and absolute defense, and in the defense of which he is sustained even to the taking of life—the defense of self, the defense of his person, the defense of his life, the defense of those who by nature are entitled to look to him for protection, and I include the defense of the right to labor in order to live and to support those who are dependent upon him.

Mr. Chairman, there was the time when the laboring man was more independent in the exercise of this right to labor to live than he is to-day. There was a time when every man could say to his employer, "If you do not wish my services, I will go back to the cross-roads, to the village workshop, and I will make a plow, a wagon, or a carriage. I will employ myself and I will sell my product for my wages." But this condition of the laboring man has passed and gone. A great industrial revolution has brought a change and a new order of things. The laboring man as an individual has lost his opportunity to employ himself, his power to claim his right to labor to live. He can only work when others choose to employ him. And when he asks for employment the answer comes back and tells him whether or not he can live. The laboring man to-day finds himself confronted with an organization of employers; he finds himself confronted with a combination of capital; he finds himself confronted with a concentration of industry and control of employment—all standing between him and the right to labor to live and to support those dependent upon him.

This is the plight of the individual laboring man to-day. This is his absolute dependency standing alone. This is his utter helplessness as a single individual.

Under these new and changed industrial conditions union is his only remedy, his only relief, his only defense, his only hope. He must have the right to meet organization with organization. He must have the right to meet combination with combination. He must have the right to meet concentration with concentration. He must have the right to conform to these new and changed industrial conditions. He must have the right to avail himself of these new agencies and instrumentalities of action—these new powers and forces of united effort—in order to claim his right to labor, to live—in order to maintain industrial equilibrium—in order to secure a just and fair apportionment of the fruits of industry and toil.

There is a difference between a labor organization and a trust. There is a difference between a labor organization and a combination in restraint of trade. There is a difference between a labor organization and a monopoly of the resources of human life. There is a difference between an organization for a lawful, natural purpose, and an organization for an unlawful and a criminal purpose. There is a difference between an organization to preserve and safeguard natural inherent rights and an organization to monopolize and prey upon the vital necessities that sustain human life. There is a difference between men organizing for the lawful purpose of securing employment, and to claim the right of all men to labor, to live, and to enjoy the fruits of that labor, and men organizing as a trust, a combination in restraint of trade, a monopoly to control the vital resources of human life, the very inception of which is unlawful, the very existence of which is unlawful, the very continuance and duration of which are unlawful, and the very object and purpose of which is contrary to law and in violation of the natural inherent right of man to live. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of the motion of my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has taken a very wide range and a variety of subjects have been discussed which, it seems to me, are not involved in his motion or in its effects.

For instance, the right to labor in order to live—no one is questioning that. I am sure my friend and colleague does not intend to question anything of that sort. The right to labor is outside of this amendment and outside of this question. Again, the discussion of the legal status of labor organizations or farmers' organizations as to whether or not they are criminal is in some respects entirely aside from the legitimate point involved.

This proviso stands in two parts. The first is a provision—

That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not itself unlawful.

In other words, that proviso declares that no part of this money shall be used to prosecute any organization entered into for any of the purposes named in that part of the proviso, and concludes with the words "not in itself unlawful."

I take it that, reading the paragraph, it would mean that the words "not in itself unlawful" apply to any act performed in the pursuance of the purposes of the combination. The combination itself may not be included in the words "not in itself unlawful."

In the second proviso there are no such words as "not in itself unlawful" appended to it; but it is a direct prohibition of the expenditure of any money in "the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Does not that mean, then, that labor organizations are exempted from prosecution for the performance of acts not in themselves unlawful, but that farmers' organizations are exempted regardless of whether their acts are lawful or unlawful?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Undoubtedly. It has been the law from some of those ancient periods that have been referred to that a combination to raise or depress the price of necessities of life is a criminal combination. The paragraph, therefore, which relates to the farmer has no limitation upon it, but authorizes the exemption from prosecution of every organization formed to maintain prices absolutely and unequivocally. The price to be maintained is entirely within the judgment of the organization.

Mr. MOORE. Will my colleague yield again?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Does not that mean that the farmers' combination may be formed to enhance the prices of food products sold to the worker in the cities, who is exempted only when his acts are lawful, and does it not mean that the prices may be raised on the city workers who work in the mills and who purchase farm supplies and who are held accountable for acts that are unlawful, while the farmers' combinations may go scot free and may still raise the prices on the products sold to the workingmen?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. The maintenance of prices is limited by the words "fair and reasonable," but "fair and reasonable" within the contemplation of the organization; and it means naturally an increase of the price to the consumer, whoever he may be, whether he be rich or poor, whether he be a laboring man or a wealthy man.

When the Clayton antitrust bill was before this House I voted for the amendment called the Webb amendment. I did so, as I stated then, upon the ground that that amendment simply declared that the mere existence of a combination of labor was not forbidden by the Sherman law. In connection with that I furthermore declared that wherever there was an attempt to discriminate and classify the effect that any law should have, so as to direct it against one class and make them criminals, and as to another class, set them free from its operations, my voice and vote would always be raised against such a discrimination and such a distinction. [Applause.] The question that is involved in this proviso, however, is not as broad as that. You are now adopting a bill carrying appropriations for the departments of the Government, one of which is the high office of the Attorney General, a Democrat selected by a Democratic President, and you are saying to him practically, "You must not prosecute innocent people," or else this language of the proviso is meaningless and senseless. Since the Supreme Court has said in the International Harvester case, decided a few weeks ago, that legislative discrimination may lawfully separate between commodities and human toil, then there is a distinction which, if not abused or used arbitrarily, may be followed in legislative enactment, and you have placed all of that and more in the Clayton antitrust law. But this proviso is meant to be a limitation upon expenditures, and not a declaration of fundamental law. There is nothing in the proviso that declares either that this act shall be a crime or that another one shall not be a crime; but it simply says that the man whom your party has intrusted with the administration of these executive functions shall not use this money to prosecute innocent people, for you add to it the words "any act not in itself unlawful." If the act be not in itself unlawful, then why put the restraining hand of your legislation upon the shoulder of your Attorney General and say by this law, "We do not trust you in the execution and enforcement of these laws."

My objection to the paragraph is not either for or against labor. My objection is that these provisos are senseless and inapplicable as they are presented in this appropriation bill, as a restraint upon an executive officer to keep him from attempting to pursue crime. In the last section you describe what might be a common-law conspiracy, and say that he shall use any of these funds to prosecute that.

There should be no proviso limiting the use of the appropriation to any class. It should apply to all classes. If crime is discovered it should be prosecuted, no matter by whom committed.

My friends, when the time comes to legislate, draw your distinction between commodities and labor and I will vote with you upon any sensible statement of the law. When you come by suitable legislation to define what shall be crimes, then is the time to enact what your thought may be upon this subject. But in an appropriation bill, when you are setting apart money for the use of a department, which is to use it to prosecute crime, it is senseless and illogical to put into the bill the words "you shall not use this money to pursue or investigate certain classes." The language of these provisos assumes that the people who are to be exempted from pursuit are engaged in innocent and perfectly lawful things. If so, then why insert this proviso? Can not the prosecution be safely confided to your own Attorney General? Why should it be placed in this appropriation bill, where it can operate only as a restraint upon an executive officer in the present Democratic administration? This bill makes no definition of crime. This bill enacts nothing that will make one thing criminal and exempt another. It simply puts the hand of legislative power upon the shoulder of the Attorney General and says to him, "You must not pursue an investigation along either of these two paths." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield a portion of his time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There will be only one more speech on this side.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] quoted from Theodore Roosevelt.

If there is a word I hate
It is "amalgamate," and if there is anything that makes me hate that word more than anything else it is to have a standpatter attempt to quote Theodore Roosevelt on behalf of his principles and ideas. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. I can give the gentleman a lot more quotations.

Mr. BRYAN. Well, you have not quoted him in favor of your position yet. It is said that the devil quoted Scripture, and so, when these standpatters get up before this House and attempt to quote Theodore Roosevelt on a proposition of this kind, they make about as much of a success at it as the devil did when he attempted to quote Holy Writ. The proposition before us to-night is this:

That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

Here is what Theodore Roosevelt said himself when talking in connection with the great anthracite coal strike in Pennsylvania:

"What the miner had to sell—his labor—was a perishable commodity; the labor of to-day, if not sold to-day, was lost forever. Moreover, his labor was not like most commodities, a mere thing, it was part of a living, breathing human being. The workman saw, and all citizens who gave earnest thought to the matter saw, that the labor problem was not only an economic but also a moral, a human problem. Individually the miners were impotent when they sought to enter a wage contract with the great companies; they could make fair terms only by uniting into trade-unions to bargain collectively. The men were forced to cooperate to secure not only their economic but their simple human rights. They, like other workmen, were compelled by the very conditions under which they lived to unite in unions of their industry or trade, and these unions were bound to grow in size, in strength, and in power for good and evil as the industries in which the men were employed grew larger and larger.

"A democracy can be such in fact only if there is some rough approximation to similarity in stature among the men composing it. One of us can deal in our private lives with the grocer or the butcher or the carpenter or the chicken raiser, or, if we are the grocer or carpenter or butcher or farmer, we can deal with our customers, because we are all of about the same size. Therefore a simple and poor society can exist as a democracy on a basis of sheer individualism; but a rich and complex industrial society can not so exist, for some individuals, and especially those artificial individuals called corporations, become so very big that the ordinary individual is utterly dwarfed beside them and can not deal with them on terms of equality. It therefore becomes necessary for these ordinary individuals to combine in their turn, first in order to act in their collective capacity through that biggest of all combinations called the Government, and, second, to act, also in their own self-defense, through private combinations, such as farmers' associations and trade-unions."

It is said that "actions speak louder than words," and now I will read from a chronicle of things done by Theodore Roosevelt in answer to the claims of gentlemen on the other side that he did nothing in the way of prosecuting the trusts.

While he was President the New York Times, a Democratic paper, in an editorial of June 22, 1906, telling of what he had done, used these words:

"The Drug Trust has been enjoined, both as an association and as individuals, not to continue in effect retailers' price lists fixed by the manufacturers.

"The Federal sleuths are on the trail of the Gunpowder Trust with explosive intent.

"Against the Fertilizer Trust 80 indictments have been found, and suits are under way to break up an unlawful combination between cottonseed oil mills and phosphate works.

"We need not dwell upon the awful drubbing adminstered to the Beef Trust, which is about to pass under the discipline of rigid Federal inspection of its products. Furthermore, in Kansas City the other day three great packing concerns, and the very ones that have been so shown up in Chicago, were found guilty by a Federal jury of accepting unlawful rebates from the railroads.

"The Standard Oil Co., the biggest and most formidable of all the trusts, is writhing under Commissioner Garfield's exposure of its monopolistic and forbidden practices, and shivers in daily expectation of a summon to court.

"The Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Co. was punished for departing from its published freight rates in transporting coal to New England under a contract with the New Haven Road.

"The New York Central Road has been investigated for giving rebates to the wicked Sugar Trust.

"The great and proud Pennsylvania Railroad has been shamed by the Interstate Commerce Commission's disclosure of its promiscuous bribery of its subordinate officials by independent coal operators.

"Then there is the rate bill, which puts all the freight systems of the country under Federal regulation as to their freight charges; which makes pipe lines, sleeping cars, and express companies common carriers, thus bringing them under Government control, and which decrees the divorcement of product and traffic from transportation, making it necessary for the coal roads to part with their mine properties.

"This is a list of achievements with which the most ambitious President might be content, upon which he might be well satisfied to rest his reputation. But it is not enough for Theodore Roosevelt. 'I should dearly love to roast a Quaker,' said Sidney Smith. Being asked by one of his listeners if he had considered that the Quaker would suffer acutely during the process, he replied: 'I have considered everything.' Mr. Roosevelt is now, according to report, resolved not to roast, but to imprison, one great railroad president as an example to the others. All the great railroad presidents have been invited by the Interstate Commerce Commission to come and tell their story and submit to cross-examination. They are summoned by invitation or suggestion, rather than by subpœna, in order that the proceeding may give them no immunity from indictment and the jail. An invitation extended in this spirit is naturally most alluring. At the proffer of these hospitable attentions their bosoms glow with the grateful joy with which the condemned criminal regards the headman sharpening his ax or the pirate's captive watches the crew projecting over the ship's side the plank he is to walk."

So here we have performance, as told at the time by undisputed authority, and Theodore Roosevelt's own words as to his position on these propositions, as against the second-hand reports we have heard.

Mr. Chairman, against the quotation of a standpatter we have the performances of Theodore Roosevelt. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, what the laboring man of this country needs more than exemptions from prosecution under appropriations is an opportunity to labor. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRAY] is much exercised about the right to labor. It is not the right to labor that is troubling the people of this country just now, but it is the want of opportunity to labor. What the farmers of the country need just now is not so much an exemption from prosecution by a Democratic administration as an opportunity to sell their products to the laboring men of the country, who at the present time are unable to secure employment and, therefore, unable to purchase the farmers' products to the extent that they would like to. Not being a lawyer, I have never studied to any very considerable extent the question of whether the framers of the Sherman antitrust law intended or expected that the prohibitions of that law should apply to farmers and labor organizations, but my personal opinion is that the question would never have been raised in the wide world, that no one would ever have imagined that the Sherman antitrust law applied to labor organizations if it had not been for the fact that a Democratic Attorney General, under the Democratic administration of one Grover Cleveland, having concluded that there were no trusts or capitalistic combinations that he could successfully prosecute, proceeded to prosecute organizations of labor. Of course that raised the question at once and settled it so far as the Democratic administration was concerned.

The Sherman antitrust law was a prohibition against labor organizations as such, the Democratic administration decided; it was the only kind of combination that a Democratic administration pursued under the Sherman antitrust law. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] wondered why the committee placed in this bill a provision which prohibits the Attorney General from prosecuting innocent people. Why, because, under a Democratic administration, as evidenced by what was done under the Democratic administration of Grover Cleveland, the fact is that is just what they would do if we did not prohibit them from doing it. They would proceed to prosecute innocent people in labor organizations.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the Republicans would not proceed to prosecute criminals.

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, Republican administrations, under Roosevelt and Taft, did successfully prosecute capitalistic organizations. You did prosecute a labor organization down in New Orleans, I believe it was, and your Attorney General said the Sherman antitrust law, so far as it applied to capitalistic organizations, was of no consequence or avail, and he never made an attempt to enforce it. If this were a Republican administration, of course it would not be necessary to have a prohibition of this kind in this bill. Nobody would expect a Republican administration to prosecute innocent men engaged in highly laudable enterprises, but under a Democratic administration it is necessary, after making your appropriation for the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law, to say that you shall not prosecute innocent people trying to do a proper thing in the interest of the community. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming has consumed five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from New York desire me to yield the remaining five minutes of my time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us see these other amendments.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. Do we vote first on the motion to strike out the two provisos?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would think so, as that is the motion first made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will have to perfect the paragraph first. I suggest that the gentleman proceed and explain his amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendments is this, that whereas it is claimed on the other side of the House that this is not special legislation, although provision is made here to exempt certain organizations, the amendments propose that certain other organizations and individuals shall be exempted. The amendments suggest that there are other people engaged in industry, in trade, in commerce, besides those who belong to labor unions and to farmers' unions. The truth of the matter is that there are more than 30,000,000 of wage earners in the United States, and there are only a little over 2,000,000 of them who are organized. There are 28,000,000 wage earners in the United States whom you Members of Congress represent, and you are their only representatives here. You have been listening to appeals in circulars and listening to orators and representatives of organized labor upon the floor, but apparently you have not considered that there are 28,000,000 of people scattered around in your districts, earning wages—laboring men, honest and true and patriotic—who have no representatives here, unless you represent them. There are millions of farmers in the United States who are not represented in the organizations you propose to exempt. I have suggested in these amendments that you exempt other organizations and individuals than organized labor and that you exempt other kinds of producers and farmers than those who happen to be members of farmers' unions.

Surely you are not here to legislate only for 2,000,000 of organized men while 28,000,000 go by the board without consideration at your hands. Surely you are not here as Representatives of the American people—100,000,000 of them—to legislate for a few men organized in certain farmers' unions that have representatives in Washington to see you every day, when the millions of men who are not represented by these two or three men in Washington have no voice in this House at all. I have offered these amendments to give equal rights to all men; to afford an opportunity to vote for equality before the law for every man who labors, whether he belongs to a union or whether he does not belong. The opportunity is here given to vote to protect labor if it is necessary, to promote trade if you want to do so, to promote domestic commerce if you want to do so, to promote export trade if you want to do so. These are legitimate pursuits, and you are going to exempt those who follow legitimate pursuits.

I would like to follow that a little further, but my friend from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] has indicated that I did not quote correctly when I quoted President Roosevelt. I have as much admiration for his leader as he has. We differed at Chicago, but President Roosevelt had the courage to tell the representatives of labor and Congress that men should be free and equal before the law in the United States. He told them that when Mr. Bryan was endeavoring to bunko labor in 1908. He has held to that right down the line, and I am holding to it now, when you gentlemen are attempting to tell organized labor that you are giving them something when you are really giving them nothing. I am trying to tell you now that there are millions and millions of voters in this land who are not represented in this legislation. You are ignoring them, while you are pretending to satisfy those who are at your heels every day and around your offices during these long sessions. You pretend to give them exemption from prosecution under certain laws, but you are careful to put in that nice little saving clause, that nice little joker, which says they shall be exempt if—if their acts are not unlawful.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to determine whether the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was in favor of this amendment or opposed to it.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman will undoubtedly hear me vote when the time comes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any objection to telling us?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I have not any at all. As a member of the committee I voted to put this provision in the bill. I felt under the Democratic administration it was absolutely necessary to protect these people from the Attorney General. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought maybe it was due to the fact that the gentleman from Wyoming voted to pass the sundry civil bill with this provision in it over President Taft's veto on the 4th of March, 1913. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He had seen some light in the November election preceding. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And he voted to pass this amendment over the President's veto. Now, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] wants to know who is in favor of this provision of exempting the farmers' unions, who has demanded this provision, and he declaimed several times, if I recall correctly, against such a provision. He voted to pass the sundry civil bill with this language in it over President Taft's veto. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What farmers' unions demanded it be incorporated in the bill at this time? Who is insisting it be put in?

Gentlemen now thinking perhaps they see an opportunity to make a little cheap political capital are forgetting their records upon this question. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is at least consistent. He confessed he is not a lawyer, which accounts probably for the fact he has always opposed this provision. But he does not seem to understand just what it is. The Sherman antitrust law prohibited certain combinations, conspiracies, etc., in restraint of trade. And there have been prosecutions against members of labor organizations on the ground that they were engaged in a conspiracy, or they were part of a combination in restraint of trade. The fact that they were members of an organized body was the gravamen of the evidence. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not appreciate that because of the fact he wants to prohibit prosecution of all individuals who are not members of an organized body or of any association or any organization on the ground they violate the Sherman antitrust law.

He imagines that one individual can be a combination or a conspiracy in restraint of trade. [Laughter.] These amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania are intended to completely nullify, not only the effect of this provision, but the effect of the appropriation.

The truth of the matter is, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has so ingeniously prepared these amendments that, if they were adopted by this committee, not a dollar of this money could be expended for the prosecution of anybody for violation of the Sherman antitrust law. I can understand how a standpat Republican, coming from Pennsylvania, living in the city of Philadelphia, and a staunch advocate of the late standpat President of the United States, would be very glad to tie up this provision in such a way that it could not be utilized to prosecute the men from whom his party expect to get the great campaign contributions this fall. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. I understood the gentleman to say that it was never intended that the Sherman antitrust law should operate against the labor organizations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not say that to-day, but I have said it in the past.

Mr. GOOD. Yes. I want to ask the gentleman, If that is true, what is the necessity of adding the words "not in itself unlawful" to this provision? Why not stop at the word "thereof"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know what that means?

Mr. GOOD. I understand this, that if there was a conspiracy, or if members of a labor union entered into a conspiracy, they could be prosecuted through the expenditure of funds supplied in other sections of this bill. But if it were never intended to enforce the Sherman antitrust law against labor organizations, why put in the provision "not in itself unlawful"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman has indicated what this means. This provision was not prepared by me. It was put in this bill in the House by a very large majority. The House, by a vote of 5 to 1, passed this bill over the veto of President Taft. Everybody understood what was meant. I think the gentleman from Iowa himself voted to pass the bill over President Taft's veto.

Now, the purpose of the language in this bill is not to exempt anybody from prosecution who violates the law, but it is to reserve this particular appropriation for use in prosecuting industrial combinations that are violating the law. It was given to the administration for that purpose, and it ought not to be diverted. It is not only a right of Congress but it is the duty of Congress to limit and restrict in its discretion and judgment the use of appropriations made for various purposes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from New York will remember that in previous Congresses the discussion on this provision has raged for hours, and largely around those words "not in itself unlawful." Now, I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Is this provision, punctuation and all, the exact provision we passed on previously, which was carried in the sundry civil bill, and which President Taft vetoed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the identical provision.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] indicated in his remarks that the words "not in itself unlawful" might relate to the word "combination" in a preceding phrase. The discussions have always brought out the fact that the words "not in itself unlawful" relate to the phrase "or for any act done in furtherance thereof." Is that the understanding of the gentleman?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me just a word?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. My only purpose is to correct a misquotation of what I said.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that the gentleman from New York is mistaken in understanding what he said.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are certain laws under which illegal acts done by members of labor organizations could be prosecuted. The attempt has been to bring them within the purview of the Sherman antitrust law under the charge of a conspiracy. A man might do an act which in itself would be perfectly lawful, but which if done by a number of individuals in concert, as a part of a plan or scheme, might be construed to be a conspiracy; and it is for the purpose of preventing the labor organizations from being prosecuted for violations of the Sherman antitrust law by persons employed out of this appropriation that this language was put in.

I have already said that the charge was made that a labor organization in the city of New York, because it had solicited the public officials of the city of New York not to purchase school books published by a certain publishing company, was violating the Sherman antitrust law. An investigation was conducted by the district attorney for the southern district of New York, and the representative of the Attorney General's office stated, when the investigation was started, that specific directions were issued to him that no person employed under this appropriation should be utilized in that investigation. But there are large forces and large sums available to prosecute any violator of the law.

Now, I have read the debate in the Senate when this Sherman antitrust law was under consideration. A number of others have read it, and men seem to draw the conclusion from it that they desire should be the accepted conclusion. But I recall one distinguished Senator made the statement that the Supreme Court could never hold that the Knights of Labor, which was then the great labor organization, would come within the purview of this act.

I think it was Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, who remarked that he was not sure about such a conclusion; that it was very difficult to predict what the Supreme Court would decide upon any question, and he wished to have no misunderstanding as to what the act meant.

That law was amended in a number of respects, was recommitted to the committee, rewritten, and then brought out and passed. Quite a number of men who were at that time in the Senate and participated in the discussion were under the impression that as finally framed it did not contemplate that labor organizations should be within its provisions. At any rate, the history of this particular appropriation is that it was aimed at and intended to be employed against the industrial combinations that were violating the Sherman antitrust law. There was no complaint that they had not prosecuted labor organizations, but this provision was put in to prevent this force being diverted from the work that Congress specifically intended.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman will remember that in those debates specific mention was made of the farmers' organization known as the Farmers' Alliance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; the Knights of Labor and the Farmers' Alliance.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wish the gentleman would yield to allow me to say that I misquoted the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to those qualifications. He did not say what I thought he did. I wish to make that statement in justice to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope all the amendments of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] will be voted down, as they should be.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let us have them reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE:
Page 115, beginning with line 16, strike out the following:
"Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours or bettering the conditions of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof, not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the provisos which have just been read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 103.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE:
Page 115, line 19, after the word "view," insert the following: "The increase of manufactures for domestic consumption, the lowering of the price thereof, or the development of export trade."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 91.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE:
Page 115, line 19, after the word "view," insert "the protection of life or property, the promotion of trade or employment."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 93.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE:
Page 115, line 19, after the word "view," insert "the welfare of labor, organized and unorganized."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Division. Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 4, noes 91.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

From and after July 1, 1914, it shall be the duty of the United States marshals to pay, under regulations prescribed by the Attorney General, the salaries of all judges of the United States courts, United States district attorneys, their regular assistants, clerks, and messengers, and United States marshals and their deputies.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. What is the change in the law, where it provides for payment by the marshals?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was going to suggest that if the point of order was withdrawn I wanted to offer an amendment which is necessary to perfect the paragraph—that is, so the bond will not be affected. Some of the disbursements are now made from the Attorney General's office and some made by the marshals.

Mr. MANN. That would require the marshals to give a larger bond.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not necessarily a larger bond, but it would require them to give a bond that would cover this matter.

Mr. MANN. The marshals become the disbursing officers?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are now to a certain extent.

Mr. MANN. Who pays the judges now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department.

Mr. MANN. In what way do they send the money to the marshals for the marshals to pay the judges?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The judges are scattered all over the country and checks are sent all over the country.

Mr. MANN. They now mail the checks to the judges, I assume.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. Does the department say that this will simplify the keeping of books in any way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department recommends it very strongly. They say it would save the services of at least one clerk in the Department of Justice, and they think it would be advantageous to have the disbursements made by one officer.

Mr. MANN. Do the marshals pay for their own bond?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This will make it necessary for the marshals to give a larger bond.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that it would make them give a larger bond, but it would be necessary that they should give a bond to cover their acts under any duty imposed by this provision.

Mr. MANN. I should think they would necessarily have to give a larger bond if they held a larger sum of money.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that the amount of money they would handle would be so materially increased as to affect the bond, but this provision should be adopted if the item remains in:

Provided, That every United States marshal operating under a bond executed prior to the passage of this act shall give a bond, effective thereafter, for the faithful performance of duties of his office, including the payment of salaries above mentioned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 118, after the word "deputies," in line 18, insert the following: "Provided, That every United States marshal operating under a bond executed prior to the passage of this act shall give bond, effective thereafter, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, including the payment of salaries above mentioned.

Mr. MANN. I notice that this provides that after July next the marshal shall make these payments. I take it the marshal will have to furnish a new bond in each case.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The first payment would not be made until August.

Mr. MANN. The marshal will have to furnish a new bond. If the bill does not become a law until the middle of July, and I hope it will by the 1st of July——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will offer an amendment to cover that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "October" be substituted for that of July in this paragraph, and also in the amendment wherever it occurs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to substitute the word "October" for July in the paragraph and in the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clothing, transportation, and traveling expenses, including materials for making clothing at the penitentiary; gratuities for prisoners at release, provided such gratuities shall be furnished to prisoners sentenced for terms of imprisonment of not less than six months, and transportation to place of conviction or place of bona fide residence in the United States, or to such other place within the United States as may be authorized by the Attorney General; for expenses of shipping remains of deceased prisoners to their homes in the United States; for expenses of penitentiary officials while traveling on official duty; for expenses incurred in pursuing and identifying escaped prisoners, and for rewards for their recapture, $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In this paragraph it says "gratuities for prisoners at release," while on the preceding page is a provision for discharge gratuities provided by law and transportation to place of conviction, and so forth. Are those two provisions not precisely the same thing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the first item is for United States prisoners who are incarcerated in State institutions, and the other is for those in Federal institutions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For hospital supplies, medicines, medical and surgical supplies, and all other articles for the care and treatment of sick prisoners; and for expenses of interment of deceased prisoners on the penitentiary reservation, $3,000.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment at this particular point, to insert a proviso, and as I have not reduced it to writing I will ask the Clerk to take it down, and that I may be permitted to consume five minutes on it. It is to add a proviso at the end of this paragraph, as follows:

Provided, however, That no portion of this appropriation shall be used for operations upon prisoners for clinical purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 124, line 4, after the figures "$3,000," insert the following: "Provided, however, That no portion of this appropriation shall be used for operations upon prisoners for clinical purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HOWARD. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 9, noes 37.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries: Warden, $4,000; deputy warden, $2,000; chaplains—one $1,500, one $600; physician, $1,600; pharmacist and physician's assistant, $1,000; chief clerk, $1,800; bookkeeper and record clerk, $1,200; stenographer, $900; four clerks, at $900 each; head cook, $1,000; steward and storekeeper, $1,200; superintendent of farm and transportation, $900; three captains of watch, at $1,000 each; guards, at $70 per month each, $52,080; two teamsters, at $600 each; engineer and electrician, $1,500; two assistants, at $1,200 each; in all, $81,480.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, in line 12, I move to strike out "$70" and insert in lieu thereof "$80."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 124, line 12, strike out "$70" and insert "$80."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I concede that this amendment is subject to a point of order; but I want to call the attention of the committee to this increase, and I hope the committee are willing to concede this small increase in the salary of these guards, and that the gentleman from New York will not insist on the point of order.

As a matter of fact, in some law passed several years ago this salary was fixed at $70 a month, which, of course, would make any change subject to a point of order. I want to state briefly the conditions about it. These guards at the Federal prison—and I am intimately acquainted with only the Atlanta Penitentiary—have responsible duties. They are men of the very highest moral character. They are men above the ordinary intelligence. They ought to be men who know how to handle prisoners. I think the warden would substantiate this statement, as he has repeatedly recommended to the department that the salaries of these guards be increased. Here is the trouble at the Atlanta Penitentiary, and I presume it has been the trouble at Leavenworth, as has been related to me by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]: The cost of living has much increased since the salaries of these men were fixed. For instance, take the case of a guard who has a wife and three children. Under the law he has to buy two uniforms a year. He has to pay his house rent. He has to buy schoolbooks. If he is on the morning watch, he must get up at 12 o'clock at night. He must remain on his feet all day long. He is not allowed to sit down even for a minute. He gets absolutely no gratuities from the Government. He even has to pay for the food that he eats inside the prison. Now, here is the trouble, and it has been the trouble at Atlanta.

Just as soon as one of these guards gets intimately acquainted with a squad of prisoners and they understand him and he understands them and their disposition, and they get to liking him, this man will find something better and he will leave. Out of the whole force in Atlanta I do not believe there are over 18 or 19 men in the entire prison that you might term old men or men who have been there any length of time. They come in and go out because the caliber of men at these prisons are offered something better on the outside. I believe the men are entitled to this increase. They have not had a penny increase in salary since 1897. They have asked for this and the warden has recommended it. It is a mere bagatelle, as far as the appropriation is concerned, and guards that are now in the Federal penitentiary are men from all over the United States. They are not all my constituents; they are from practically every State in the Union. I ask that these men be given this little increase, which will satisfy them, and I hope the gentleman from New York will not make the point of order, because the men deserve the increased salary.

Mr. MANN. How many are there at Atlanta?

Mr. HOWARD. I think 56, in all.

Mr. MANN. The bill says $70 a month and the appropriation is $52,080.

Mr. HOWARD. That is at Fort Leavenworth. My recollection is that there are 56 at Atlanta, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there has recently been appointed a gentleman in charge of the Federal prison service, who has some recommendations that the salary of some of the guards of these penitentiaries be increased. The committee hopes at the next session to make some readjustment that I think will satisfy everybody. We can not deal easily with it now, but I hope at the next session we can readjust the matter.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will remember, I spoke to him once about a graduated scale, based on the length of service, which would amount to about $85 a month, on an average.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of the National Training School for Boys, District of Columbia: Superintendent, $2,500; assistant superintendent, $1,500; teachers and assistant teachers, $9,120; chief clerk, $1,000; storekeeper and steward, 600; matron of school, $600; parole officer, $900; office clerk, $720; assistant office clerk, $480; six matrons of families, at $240 each; foremen of, and skilled helpers in industries, $3,800; farmer, $600; assistant farmer, $420; teamster, $360; florist and engineer, at $540 each; shoemaker, $540; baker, $600; tailor, $600; cook, $480; assistant engineer, $420; laundress, $360; dining-room attendant, boys', $300; dining-room attendant, officers', $240; housemaid, $216; seamstress, $240; assistant cook, $300; nurse, $600; watchmen, not to exceed eight in number, $3,360; secretary and treasurer, $900; in all, $34,276.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to know of the chairman of the committee what is the National Training School for Boys?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a Federal institution out on the Bladensburg Road, where young boys are committed.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is it what is ordinarily known as a reformatory?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a reformatory. It has been in existence 30 or 40 years.

The Clerk read as follows:

On and after June 30, 1914, the per capita cost of persons committed from the District of Columbia and maintained in the National Training School for Boys shall be fixed at a rate not less than $4.50 per week for each person.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. POU, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 160. Joint resolution providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortification and coast-defense purposes.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that there will be several conference reports to be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will there not have to be a quorum present when these conference reports are considered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There will have to be.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, I think we will only waste time by coming in at 11 o'clock.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 23, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 23, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee in the midst of the ample provision Thou hast made for our lives, surrounded by tokens of Thy continued providence. Thou hast given to us ample and abundant harvests. Thou dost give to us the blessing of internal peace. Thou dost inspire us with the highest national ideals. Thou thus hast been calling upon us, appealing to the best within us to lead us upward and onward to the attainment of God's great purpose in us and in our Nation. We thank Thee for the unsullied flag, for what it means, for what it leads to, for what it tokens for the future. Grant us the courage and the character to keep it unsullied and to maintain inviolate the trust that Thou hast committed to our hands. Hear us; guide us this day in the discharge of every duty; give to us a consciousness of fellowship with God. We ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LAND AT FORT WASHINGTON, MD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, calling attention to an item in the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1913, for the purchase of swamp lands, Fort Washington, Md., $350, and owing to delay in acquiring title to the land requests that this amount be reappropriated, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FEDERAL BUILDING, HONOLULU, HAWAII.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back, with amendments, the bill (S. 5295) to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 608) thereon. I venture to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It costs no money, it is a short measure, and relieves a situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 6, before the word "May," to insert "May 30, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 490)"; on page 2, line 14, after the word "title," to insert "or to their successors in interest"; on the same page, line 17, after the word "owners," to insert "or by their successors in interest"; on the same page, line 20, after the word "site," to insert "or to their successors in interest"; on the same page, line 25, after the word "site," to insert "or such enlargement of the present site"; on page 3, line 1, after the word "building," to strike out the word "thereon" and the proviso thereto and insert "heretofore authorized: Provided, That the cost of the present site, including the enlargement thereof, or of such new site and of said building, shall not exceed the total of the limits of the cost heretofore fixed, to wit, $1,325,000: Provided further, That all appropriations heretofore made toward the acquisition of the present site and enlargement thereof and the construction of said building, together with the proceeds of such sale of the present site, are hereby made available toward the acquisition of such new site or the enlargement of said present site, and the construction of said building upon either the new or the present site," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the acts of June 30, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 782); June 30, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 794); May 30, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 490); May 30, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 541); March 4, 1909 (35 Stats., p. 951); June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 696); March 4, 1911 (36 Stats., p. 1373); March 4, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 866); and October 22, 1913, providing for the acquisition of a site, the enlargement thereof, and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, in lieu of enlarging the site heretofore acquired for said building, to reconvey said site by the usual quitclaim deed to the person or persons from whom the United States acquired title, or to their successors in interest, upon the payment to the United States of the price the Government paid for said property, and conditioned upon the payment being first made by said previous owners, or by their successors in interest, of the sum of $35,000 to the person or persons who contributed said sum for the opening and dedication of Bishop Street, adjoining said site, or to their successors in interest; and the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a new and conveniently located site of ample area for said authorized building, and to enter into contract, within the limit of cost hereinafter fixed, for the acquisition of such new site, or such enlargement of the present site, and for the erection and completion of the building heretofore authorized: Provided, That the cost of the present site, including the enlargement thereof, or of such new site, and of said building shall not exceed the total of the limits of cost heretofore fixed, to wit, $1,325,000: Provided further, That all appropriations heretofore made toward the acquisition of the present site and the enlargement thereof and the construction of said building, together with the proceeds of such sale of the present site, are hereby made available toward the acquisition of such new site, or the enlargement of said present site, and the construction of said building upon either the new or the present site.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EX-SOLDIERS AS FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 5861) to amend the postal and civil-service laws, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 607) thereon. It is a bill that covers eight lines, and is intended to permit ex-soldiers to take the examinations for fourth-class postmasters without regard to the age limitation. Many of the examinations will take place next month; and I wish to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It was unanimously approved by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That all persons with honorable record in the military or naval service in the Civil War, either in the Federal or Confederate Army, or in the Spanish-American War, shall be exempt from any age limitation in the selection of fourth-class postmasters, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A bill (S. 5970) for the relief of Isaac Bethurum; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 5971) for the relief of Forrest V. Painter; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing that so much of the appropriation for the surveying of public lands not to exceed $25,000 be made available to bring up the arrears of office work on returns of surveys in the various surveyors general's offices, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) for the appointment of a commission to acquire by purchase or condemnation certain land for the extension of the Capitol Grounds, and providing for the payment therefor, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

GUARANTY OF BANK DEPOSITS (S. DOC. NO. 522).

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document a history of guaranty of bank deposits in certain States, prepared by George H. Shibley for the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. I will say that this document also includes a statement of the court construction of various States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the matter will be printed as a Senate document.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 25, 32, 35, 36, 44, 45, 46, 50, 62, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 97, 99, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 128, 129, 130, 131, 133, 134, 135, 138, 139, 140, 141, 145, 157, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 181, 184, 188, 199, 200, 201, 209, 210, 213, 214, and 235.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 31, 34, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 49, 51, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 98, 100, 102, 103, 109, 126, 132, 136, 142, 143, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 158, 159, 160, 161, 167, 178, 179, 180, 183, 185, 186, 187, 189, 190, 192, 193, 194, 196, 197, 198, 202, 203, 205, 206, 207, 208, 211, 216, 217, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, and 233, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$77,405"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 53, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "General Supply Committee: Superintendent of supplies, $2,250; clerks—1 of class 4, 1 of class 3, 3 of class 2, 2 of class 1; 12 temporary clerks for four months, at $75 each per month; in all, $15,850"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$32,520"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "janitor service for the Executive Mansion and Office Building, not to exceed $1,200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 127, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$8,150"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$376,620"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 144, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 76 of the bill, line 3, strike out the words "Toward the" and insert in lieu thereof the word "For"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 182, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,316,890"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 191, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That not to exceed $25,000 of this fund shall be used for the purposes above indicated"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 204, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$463,630"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 215, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on amendments numbered 1, 20, 28, 29, 30, 33, 43, 47, 48, 52, 76, 78, 79, 85, 101, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 168, 169, 176, 177, 195, 212, 218, 219, 220, and 234.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the conference report may be adopted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia as to whether or not the items concerning the assay offices in the West were disagreed to by the Senate conferees and if there has been a yielding to the House conferees on those items?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There has been no yielding. Those items are in disagreement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are in disagreement?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In disagreement.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia move that the Senate further insist on its amendments still in disagreement and request a further conference?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand the proper course is for the report to go to the House, and let the request for a further conference come from the House before such a motion is made.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from Virginia will permit me, unless there is some request from the House, the usual course is for the Senate to further insist upon its disagreement, request a further conference, and appoint conferees.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I think either course is permissible, and on the suggestion of the Senator I will make the motion. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments still in disagreement, request a further conference with the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WARREN conferees at further conference on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12579, the unfinished business.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], to strike out lines 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10, on page 23, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. The matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] reads as follows:

For improvement and sinking of wells, installation of pumping machinery, construction of tanks for domestic and stock water, and for the necessary structures for the development of a supply of water for domestic use for eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, $20,000.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, that is the amendment on which I addressed the Senate for a few minutes last evening. From the statement made that there are other reservations for the Indians in that county, I concur most heartily in the motion of the Senator from Colorado. I hope the Senate will strike that provision from the bill. I do not think there is any necessity for it. It is purely experimental and doubtful in its wisdom, to say the best of it. I am perfectly familiar not only with the Indians to whom this section applies, but equally so with the country over which they roam. When there is already an enormous Papago reservation within that county, the establishment of others is detrimental, in my judgment, not only to the Indians, but to the white people as well and to the prosperity of that part of the State.

I hope the Senate will strike this provision from the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has stated and what was said last evening, I feel as though I ought to make a further statement in reference to this matter.

I, of course, am not personally familiar with the conditions in Arizona and am obliged to rely upon the information which has come to me. I have been informed this morning by a Senator who ought to know that there is no large reservation for these Papago Indians in any part of Arizona; that there is a small executive reservation, and upon that most of these wells are proposed to be dug. In fact, I am informed that those Indians built dwellings there, monuments were erected where they are now located before the city of Tucson was located; that they had been in possession of this land from the time Arizona was recognized as a Territory and even when it was a part of Mexico. The Papago Indians were in this territory first.

I am making this statement, Mr. President, because I wish to give the reasons which actuated me in supporting this measure. My understanding is that these wells are to be dug in order to accommodate the Indians who have never received anything at the hands of the Government, but whom the Government recognizes as being entitled to some consideration; that with the digging of these wells, the furnishing of a limited supply of water which will answer their needs, it shall be made possible for the Indians to live in a civilized manner. It was with this understanding, and before the Senator on yesterday stated on the floor that there was an effort to coerce these Indians into going where they did not wish to go and to locate them on territory other than what they had theretofore occupied, that I supported this proposition.

If it be true that the committee has not been properly informed, if the facts which have been submitted to us are unreliable, it is very difficult for me to know where we are going for our facts. I am not doubting the word of the Senator from Arizona; I have known him too long for that; but I had assumed that it was my duty as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs to legislate on affairs pertaining to Indians, and that legislation was not to be left to the individual Senators in the various States where these Indians are located. I know that we ought to have their judgment and their information; they are deeply interested, not always alone for the Indians, but for their people as well; and we, acting on these committees and as Members of Congress, are called upon to settle these questions in the interest of a trust which we owe to the Indians.

I have made this statement, Mr. President, because I thought it was due that it should go into the RECORD, for I am very confident that this matter, with others, is going to be investigated and that we are going to ascertain whether we are being deceived by the officers of the Government, whose duty it is to supply information and to give us the facts under their charge, and whether that information is absolutely unreliable.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me just for a second?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I understand that the eight Papago villages referred to in the objectionable paragraph are off the reservation. If they are on the reservation, I would say to the Senator that the provision is all the more objectionable, for the reason I stated on yesterday; that is, if they put these wells on the reservation they have got to go up and tap a water supply, on the underflow of which the city itself exists.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator from Arizona refer to Tucson?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I refer to Tucson.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator if it is correct, as I stated a moment ago, that these Indians were located on this particular ground even before Tucson was established, old as that city is?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. We do not know, because the first man who was able to write the history of that country found both there.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What prior right had Tucson to the water? According to the Senator's own statement, it would necessarily be a limited amount that these Indians could use. Why should they be denied that right?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Indians are not denied the right. We had appropriated the water years before, and the Indians had made no appropriation, nor had the Government done so for them. We are not using the surplus waters; we have gone down to immense depths; we have dug great ditches across a wide valley; we have sunk deep wells and run them by electrical power in order to get water, going above, where the Indians had never dreamed nor the Indian Department had never dreamed that water could be obtained. The city has obtained it at an enormous expense. Now, to say that they can go and sink at their pleasure wells of exactly the same or of a similar kind and cut the underflow, which is as well measured as is the upper flow of the river, and take it away without any investigation at all, is unjust and the Senator must see the injustice of it, without further investigation, under every light in which we can look at it.

I again express my sympathy for these Indians, much more intensely than the Senator can feel, for I see them every day when I am at home; we all feel the same way about them; but we are legislating here or attempting to legislate on a mere conjecture as to whether this will or will not affect the underflow without any investigation whatever. In any event, it is a matter which ought to be investigated, and I will aid the Senator in any effort to see that hereafter, when statements come from any department of this Government purporting to set forth facts, that they shall know that they are facts, so that we can rely with some sort of confidence on their statements.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the Indian Bureau has conscientiously and truthfully endeavored to give to the committee all needed information or at least all information in their possession concerning this and kindred items of appropriation. Of course, no man who knows the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] will doubt for a moment that, in recommending this appropriation, he has done so because he has felt it his duty to do so in view of the information which he has received; but my objection to the paragraph under consideration is fundamental and goes beyond any question of expediency as it may concern this particular tribe of Indians.

The situation, as I understand, may be summarized in this way: The Papago Indians own a reservation in southern Arizona, and as wards of the Nation they are provided for or should be provided for as residents upon that reservation. They are in the habit of leaving the boundaries of their reservation and wandering over other portions of the country, stopping for a while in one place and then in another, but anchoring themselves nowhere in particular. Of course that is of itself a violation of the law. They have no business off their reservation, except as they may be permitted to go under departmental regulations. This appropriation is designed not only to legalize their excursions from the boundaries of their reservation, but to encourage them and to make their absence from it permanent.

Not only so, but it is proposed, according to the testimony of Mr. Meritt, that these eight wells shall be sunk for the benefit of these Indians at any point in southern Arizona which the department may determine to be desirable; and in the event that a successful supply of water is obtained, then by Executive order a new reservation, or a number of new reservations, are to be created for their benefit. I want to protest as emphatically as I know how against the exercise of such a policy either in this particular instance or at all. It is wrong not only to the Indians themselves, not only to the taxpayers of the country, but to the settlers upon the public lands in the State of Arizona. If there is any place outside of the Papago Reservation where water can be secured, it ought to be secured for the white settler who is looking for and generally disappointed in the search for land which is still a part of the public domain upon which he can make his location.

Now, let us trace this thing to its ultimate consequences. The Papago Indians, as I have said, have a reservation. They ought to stay upon that reservation and be supported so long as they do stay upon it; but they are leaving the reservation. The Government is going to sink eight wells for them in as many places; and assuming, now, that the sinking of each well results in the obtaining of a supply of water and that they are at considerable distances from each other, then it is proposed that the President by Executive order shall create a new reservation at each one of these places for these Indians, and thus enlarge the area of land excluded from settlement under the homestead and other laws of the United States designed for the benefit of the white man. It simply means the further contraction of the public domain in the State of Arizona, already contracted because of the creation of so many of these reservations beyond all reasonable limitations.

I assume that there is plenty of land and to spare in the reservation which has already been set apart for these Indians. I assume that if they do not stay upon that reservation they ought to be compelled to do so, and if compulsion proves unsuccessful, then the Government ought to withhold all supplies from them until they become tractable and submit to the powers that are above them.

I predict, Mr. President, that if this precedent is once established it will simply be used for similar practices in other States, to say nothing of Arizona itself. The principle is wrong; the consequences of it are likely to be pernicious; and instead of benefiting the Indian, it is going to prove a serious injury to the State of Arizona. I hope this paragraph will be stricken out.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and voted for this provision in the committee at the time it was acted upon; but I believe now that I voted through a misapprehension of the facts. I was under the impression that this appropriation was to develop water on the reservation; but I understand now it is possible that these wells may be dug at eight different places; and if the reservation is made to include them all, it may have to be made large enough to take in nearly the whole State, or else involve the creation of eight separate reservations.

It is certainly impracticable to have eight separate reservations for 1,400 Indians, which, as I understand from the report, is the number of these Indians; and yet the bill anticipates that when these wells are developed in these eight separate settlements, then the lands surrounding them will be constituted into reservations. I say that means either eight separate reservations, if the Indians are widely scattered through that State, or it means one enormous reservation.

It seems to me that the Indian commissioner could more definitely advise Congress as to whether or not the present reservation is sufficiently large; and if not, how much larger it should be made. If the Indians require an additional reservation, he should point out the necessity for and the location of the proposed additional reservation. I do contend that it seems absolutely impracticable to attempt to establish eight separate reservations, as may be done under this provision, in the State of Arizona for the benefit of 1,400 Indians.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will allow me for a moment to refer him to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, he will ascertain just what is proposed by the Indian Bureau. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], in his remarks yesterday afternoon, read from page 204 of the House hearings, Mr. Meritt being the witness from whose testimony he quoted, as follows:

Senator TOWNSEND. As I understand it, this is a case where the Indians do not own the land. Where are you going to dig the well? The Papagos are living, as I understand, in little villages on land that does not belong to them.

Mr. MERITT. We have created Executive-order reservations in two cases, I believe, and set aside land for these Indians. They are living in villages and we expect to get an Executive-order reservation covering all the land where the work is now in progress.

In other words, the work is in progress in different places and these Executive-order reservations are going to keep up with the progressive sinking of these wells. Of course, as the Senator from Nevada well says, it is obvious that the obtaining of water for the sinking of these wells is going to be followed by the increase of the area of the reservation for these Indians. If the wells are going to be sunk at all, perhaps they should be sunk on the reservation now in existence, and the Indians ought to be made to stay there.

Mr. PITTMAN. And if the reservation is not large enough it should be enlarged.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] says that it is ample for the number of Indians constituting this tribe, and I have no doubt it is. I have heard no one say that it is too small.

Mr. PITTMAN. If it is a fact that these villages are widely separated——

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Arizona says he knows of no such villages; that the villages are mythical.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am assuming that there are eight villages. If they are widely separated, then, it follows that, if they are included in one reservation, it must be an enormous reservation; and if they are made into eight reservations, then it is not an economical management of Indian affairs. I think the whole matter is guesswork.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Arizona a question. If I recollect aright, in looking at the map of the State of Arizona about one-third of the area of that State is in Indian reservations.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. One-half of it is in reservations of all kinds.

Mr. SHAFROTH. One-half of it is in reservations of all kinds. Now, how much of that half consists of Indian reservations?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would not be able to answer that offhand. The records show very plainly. I should judge, though, that of the number of these great reservations probably nearly half of them are Indian reservations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is, one-quarter of the State of Arizona at the present time is in Indian reservations. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that Congress, after having the experience of a number of years in regard to forest reserves in the United States, passed a law some 10 years ago prohibiting Executive-order forest reservations, and providing that no forest reserve could be established without the consent of Congress. Now, it seems to me that if we are going to allow Indian reservations to be made by Executive order, it is directly in conflict with the express policy of the Congress of the United States in respect to other reservations. It must be remembered that whenever these reservations are established they result in practically locking up the resources of the State. I am opposed to this provision of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will now state the amendment heretofore submitted by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I rise to ask as to the stage of the proceedings upon the bill. Are we through with the consideration of the committee amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The consideration of committee amendments is completed, except as to two small matters with reference to punctuation.

Mr. STERLING. Before taking up individual amendments, I wish to call attention to the committee amendment beginning with line 3, page 67, which went out the other day on a point of order, and I invite the attention of the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to this particular amendment. I desire to know if the point of order made at that time is now insisted upon? I have been assured that the point of order would be withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will not permit a point of order to be withdrawn after it has been sustained. The Chair has some rights.

Mr. STERLING. As to the procedure, Mr. President, I did not have that in mind when I called the matter up. The Chair is, of course, correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 90, after line 18, it is proposed to insert——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. There are one or two other committee amendments, or rather corrections, that the committee wishes to dispose of.

The first is that on page 6, line 17, the word "thirteen" should read "eleven," so that it will read "nineteen hundred and eleven," instead of "nineteen hundred and thirteen."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6 it is proposed to strike out, on line 17, the first word in the line, the word "thirteen," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "eleven."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. When the amendment on page 11 was before the Committee of the Whole for consideration, in reply to a question propounded to me by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I stated that the unused balance for that fiscal year was $29,500.01, but I was in error. The unused balance is $40,755.62. I ask that the figures "$29,500.01" be stricken out and "$40,755.62" inserted in lieu thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered; the amendment will be amended by unanimous consent, as stated by the Senator from Arizona, and the amendment as amended will be agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. The junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] propounded to me on yesterday an inquiry regarding the facts concerning the payment of tuition for Indian children enrolled in the public schools in Box Elder County, Utah. I desire to direct the attention of the Senator from Utah to the following provision on page 8 of the bill:

Provided further, That not more than $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools.

I have a letter on this subject from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I ask to incorporate in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 22, 1914.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR, I have an informal inquiry inviting my attention to the communication presented by Senator SUTHERLAND to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs concerning payment of tuition for Indian children enrolled in the public schools of Box Elder County, Utah (page 13 of the report; part 1 of the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate, on the Indian appropriation bill).

For the fiscal year 1913 a contract was made with the trustees of the schools of Box Elder County, which provided for payment of tuition of 16 Indian pupils at the rate of $10 per quarter per pupil, and during this year all claims presented under the contract were paid. This contract was not renewed for the fiscal year 1914, because of a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury, dated October 22, 1913, under which the office was precluded from entering into contracts to pay tuition for Indian children enrolled in public schools where under State law they were entitled to attend free of charge. It is understood that the Indians resident in Utah are so entitled in accordance with the law of that State.

If the question presented be rightly understood, it applies to future contracts with the commissioners of Box Elder County and not to reimbursement for past services, inasmuch as the county was duly advised that it was impracticable to contract with it for the fiscal year 1914 and no contract was, in fact, made. Such future remuneration during the fiscal year 1914 to the public schools for education of Indian children may be authorized if the provision in the Indian appropriation bill in its present form as reported by the Senate committee, page 8, becomes a law. This provision reads:

"Provided further, That no more than $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools."

Very truly, yours,

CATO SELLS,
Commissioner.

Mr. ASHURST. On page 78, line 10, I move to insert the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 78, after the amendment already agreed to at that place, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided further That the interest accruing from tribal funds and deposited in banks in the State of Oklahoma may be used as authorized by the act of March 3, 1911, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to defray the expense of per capita payments authorized by Congress

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, what is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. An amendment.

Mr. LANE. I object to it until I learn something about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona what is the nature of the amendment. Does it affect the Mississippi Choctaws?

Mr. ASHURST. Not at all. I have received a letter from the department requesting the adoption of an amendment to the effect that the interest on tribal funds on deposit in the banks of Oklahoma may be used for the purpose of paying any per capita payments that the law may authorize. I will ask that the amendment may be restated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all right. The Senator's statement is sufficient for me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Just one more item and I will surrender the floor.

During the discussion of the item to which the Senate refused to agree, being the amendment regarding the Papago Indians, much was said that I feel was erroneous. Of course it was accidentally stated in that way. In order that the Senate and the country may have the departmental views at least I ask that pages 322, 323, 324, 325, and 326 of the House hearings may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. MERITT. The next item reads as follows:

"For improvement and sinking of wells, installation of pumping machinery, construction of tanks for domestic and stock water, and for the necessary structures for the development of a supply of water for domestic use for eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona, $35,600."

We offer the following justification for the record:

STATISTICS, 8 PAPAGO VILLAGES.

Census, 1913		1,423
Present irrigable area, undetermined.
Irrigated area	acres	873.7
Acres under completed project, depends upon water found.
Acres cultivated by Indians		873.7
Acres cultivated by whites		None.
Value of irrigated land	per acre	$100
Expended to June 30, 1913		Nothing.
Estimate for fiscal year 1915		$35,600
Cost of completed project		$35,600

"The Indians of this territory have had little or no aid from the Government, and are a bright and energetic people, for Indians. Their principal source of revenue is that of stock raising, and this could be made a source of much greater revenue for them if it were not for the fact that the water supply for use of the stock is very limited and hard to obtain. Frequently the feed is ample in a locality, but water is at such a great distance that stock can not subsist. The estimate on this contemplates the sinking of wells, or the improvement of those already constructed, the installation of a pump and small distillate engine, the construction of excavated tanks for domestic and stock water, and the erection of a small structure over the pump and engine."

"There are eight villages which are much in need of these improvements. Others might in the future require the same. The villages included are:

Via-viau, or Cockleburr	200
Chiu-Chiuschu	200
Ko-Opke	75
Taht-Mohmeli	106
Komelih
Quajoti	100
Anegam	200
Santa Rosa	400

"As stated before, these Indians have had practically no aid from the Government, and have been a peaceful and inoffensive tribe at all times, and are almost wholly self-supporting at present, but to bring them to a state where they would be really removed from danger of actual starvation there is nothing that can be done so cheaply to add to their income, but not in any sense pauperize them or render them any less industrious. It is the intention to have one thoroughly competent white man to travel from one village to another, to see that these pumping plants are kept in good operating condition.

"The cost of individual pumping plants is estimated as follows:

Sinking well 6 inches diameter, 200 feet, at $5	$1,000
Pump	800
Gas engine	400
Domestic water storage tank	500
Stock-water storage tank	750
Structures, buildings for pump, engines, etc	500
Engineering and incidentals	500
Total	4,450

The CHAIRMAN. Your justification gives the names of these towns?

Mr. SCHANCK. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And the location of each?

Mr. MERITT. The justification does not show the exact locations. Mr. Chairman, I would like Mr. Schanck to make a statement in regard to this appropriation for the Papago Indians. We are asking for three separate appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. We would like to have Mr. Schanck's statement in the record.

Mr. SCHANCK. Probably it would be more clearly understood from this map than from a verbal description. The appropriation of $5,000 for the Papago Indians, the same being item No. 35, contemplates the sinking of wells and making other improvements to the water supply of the nomadic Papago villages, as found best by specialists in the field. In addition to this, large areas of the nomadic Papago country have been surveyed, and it has been found feasible to construct at eight villages wells and pumping plants to furnish water for stock, and perhaps in some instances for a small amount of irrigation where the villages have been established for a long time and where it is known that the Indians constantly make their homes. These villages are Via-Viau or Cockleburr, with a population of approximately 200; Chiu Chiuschu, with a population of approximately 200; Ko-opke, with a population of approximately 75; Taht-Mahmeli, with a population of approximately 100; Quajoti, with a population of approximately 100; Anegam, with a population of approximately 200; Santa Rosa, with a population of approximately 400.

Mr. CARTER. You have left out Komelih.

Mr. SCHANCK. Yes; Komelih, with a population of approximately 150.

The CHAIRMAN. How much land do these Indians own around each one of these villages?

Mr. SCHANCK. They own no land; they are on the public domain, except the Chiu Chiuschu village has a reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. How much do they own?

Mr. SCHANCK. It consists approximately of one township. The village of Ko-opke has a reservation around it of approximately 35,000 acres, and the village of Taht-Mahmeli has a reservation consisting of 12 sections, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. And none of the other towns have lands except on the public domain?

Mr. SCHANCK. No, sir; they have occupied and cultivated these lands around the villages as best they can.

The CHAIRMAN. How does the department protect them against white settlers?

Mr. SCHANCK. The department was preparing to protect them by allotting them from the public domain.

The CHAIRMAN. And nothing has been done in that direction?

Mr. SCHANCK. There has been farther east, but under the act of Congress passed last year no money is available for the allotment of lands on the public domain in Arizona and New Mexico. We expect to protect them by putting them in shape so they can cultivate their lands, and, of course, as long as they stay there and cultivate the lands, the present laws prohibit homestead entry or any form of entry upon lands thus occupied by Indians. They do need more protection, but as yet I believe the Indian Service is hardly able to say in all instances what should be done. We need some of these other appropriations to conduct our investigations to make more definite recommendations as to the future.

The CHAIRMAN. So then, under the present laws, a white man can not go in there and take land that these Indians now occupy?

Mr. SCHANCK. Is not that the fact, Mr. Meritt?

The CHAIRMAN. If it can be shown that the Indians actually occupy the land, are they protected against white settlers?

Mr. MERITT. Mr. Chairman, there was incorporated in connection with the appropriation for allotment work in the last Indian appropriation act a proviso clause which prevented the Indian Bureau from making further allotments on the public domain in the States of New Mexico and Arizona.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that good legislation? Would it be good legislation to leave that out?

Mr. MERITT. I think it is absolutely just and fair to the Papago Indians, as well as to other Indians in those States, that this legislation in the Indian appropriation act this year be omitted. The language in that act that we would like to have omitted in this year's legislation reads as follows:

"Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the survey, resurvey, classification, appraisement, or allotment of any land in severalty upon the public domain to any Indian, whether of the Navajo or other tribes, within the State of New Mexico and the State of Arizona."

That legislation has worked a hardship on these Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you leave it out of the draft of the bill this time?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCHANCK. The Indian village of Ak-chin, near Maricopa Station, is one for which we are asking an appropriation of $22,200 for the construction of wells and an irrigation system for a small area at that village, from the general irrigation fund. South of Tucson, distant about 150 miles from the village of Ak-chin, is the Papago Reservation, for which we are asking an appropriation of about $8,000 to construct a temporary pumping plant and to operate it and the one already constructed during the fiscal year, and probably the year following. These two pumping plants will water about 1,000 acres. This $8,000 is also out of the general irrigation fund. In addition to this $8,000, we are asking for the first installment, which is $50,000, for the project on the Papago Reservation south of Tucson, the total project to cost $150,000. The temporary pumping plant is needed pending the time when this large project can be put into use, and this large appropriation is urgently needed at this session of Congress to protect the water rights of the Indians, as these are being rapidly appropriated by the whites. Of the 800 Indians attached to the Papago Reservation, about 600 would be taken care of by the completion of the large project on the Papago Indian Reservation. In addition to these three items for the Papagos, we are asking for $5,000 to operate a well rig, already purchased for drilling wells, to improve the domestic and stock water supply for any so-called nomadic Papago Indians who occupy the territory west of Tucson and south of the Southern Pacific Railroad, covering a large area. In addition, we are asking for a specific appropriation of $35,600 to construct wells and pumping plants at eight villages where surveys have been completed with sufficient accuracy to indicate that water is available for stock purposes, and, in some instances, for a small amount of irrigation. These villages are distant from 40 to 90 miles south and east of the village of Ak-chin, near Maricopa Station, for which the first appropriation is requested in the general irrigation fund.

Mr. CARTER. Are all these Papagos in Arizona?

Mr. SCHANCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. How many of them are there?

Mr. SCHANCK. In the allotting work, so far as it has been carried on there, there were allotted approximately 4,000, and I should think about half of the territory they were known to occupy was covered.

Mr. CARTER. How much money all told, by this bill, do you spend in connection with irrigation work for the Papagoes?

Mr. SCHANCK. One hundred and twenty thousand eight hundred dollars.

Mr CARTER. How many items are there in the bill for the Papagoes? I mean specific items and general items of appropriation, too.

Mr. SCHANCK. Five.

Mr. CARTER. Will you name them in consecutive order in order that we may be enabled to refer to them in the hearings?

Mr. SCHANCK. Eight thousand dollars for the construction and maintenance of pumping plant, canals, and the installation of additional pumping plants on the Papago Reservation near Tucson, Ariz.; in the general irrigation appropriation, an item of $22,200 for the construction of a pumping plant at the village of Ak-chin, near Maricopa Station; specific appropriation item No. 29, carrying an appropriation of $5,000 for water supply for the nomadic Papagoes, which contemplates improving the water supply for any Indians among the nomadic Papagoes; item No. 33, carrying an appropriation of $50,000 for beginning the construction of a permanent irrigation system on the Papago Reservation near Tucson; item No. 35, carrying an appropriation of $35,600 for securing a water supply for stock and, if possible, for irrigation, for eight Papago Indian villages, five of which are on the public domain and three on small reservations in a territory about 60 miles long and 30 miles wide.

Mr. CARTER. That will be a total of $120,800.

Mr. SCHANCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARTER. How many of these Papagoes will be beneficiaries of this project?

Mr SCHANCK. Those that can be definitely determined will be.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to have that information in connection with each amount appropriated.

Mr. SCHANCK. I have prepared a statement of that, and it can appear in the record at this point.

Irrigation systems from general appropriation.

Number benefited:
Ak-chin village, 105 Indians		$22,200
Papago Reservation, 300 Indians		8,000
Special appropriations:
Nomadic Papago water supply		5,000
Eight Indian villages (stock, domestic, and irrigation water supply) number of Indians in each:
Cockleburr	200
Chin Chinschu	200
Quajote	100
Ko-Opke	75
Komilib	150	35,600
Santa Rosa	400
Taht Mahmell	100
Anegam	200
Papago Reservation; permanent irrigation system, number of Indians, 600		50,000
Total for Papagos		120,800

Mr. CARTER. I think it should. Now, you have $8,000 for the Papago Reservation and again $50,000 for the Papago Reservation. Suppose you make an explanation of that.

Mr. SCHANCK. The $8,000 for the Papago Reservation is to operate and maintain the present temporary pumping plant and to install another small pumping plant to care for the crops for the coming year and probably the next year until the large irrigation system can be put into working order.

Mr. CARTER. Then you ask $50,000?

Mr. SCHANCK. The $50,000 appropriation is the first appropriation——

Mr. CARTER (interposing). The first appropriation for what?

Mr SCHANCK. For the construction of the permanent irrigation system, which will ultimately cost $150,000.

Mr. CARTER. It is not the intention of the Indian Bureau to have any duplications in any of these items of appropriation to be made for special and definite purposes?

Mr. SCHANCK. No, sir; these Indians are most deserving and they will make use of it.

Mr. CARTER. The item of $35,600 is to be used, I notice, for the necessary structures for the development of a supply of water for domestic use for eight Papago Indian villages in southern Arizona. Explain just what you mean by domestic use.

Mr. SCHANCK. Water to drink and to cook with.

Mr. CARTER. Not for stock?

Mr. SCHANCK. Well, stock, too; the three things.

Mr. CARTER. Those are the only purposes for which it is used—cooking, drinking, and for stock?

Mr. SCHANCK. And I think irrigation, where possible.

Mr. CARTER. I think not. I think it could not be used for irrigation purposes.

Mr. SCHANCK. Of course, we do not ordinarily expect to find enough water which would be available for irrigation.

Mr. REED. I think that should be changed so as to include stock and irrigation.

Mr. CARTER. It seems to me it would be pretty hard to defend an item of $35,000 for water simply for domestic uses.

Mr. SCHANCK. For stock purposes; that is the primary object of it.

Mr. CARTER. I think you ought to provide for that in the language of the bill.

Mr. MERITT. I suggest that you incorporate after the words "domestic use," in line 9, the words "and for irrigation purposes."

Mr. CARTER. For irrigation purposes and for stock and domestic use.

Mr. MERITT. Yes; that would be all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 90, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

For enabling the Secretary of the Interior to assist the county commissioners of Stevens County, Wash., in the construction of a county road across the Spokane Indian Reservation, $500, reimbursable out of any proceeds arising from the sale or disposition of surplus lands of said reservation or out of any moneys to the credit of the Spokane Indians.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I think I should explain this amendment briefly.

The amendment was referred to the committee and the committee referred it to the department. Through the kindness of the chairman, I have a letter from the department reporting upon the amendment. I think that letter sets out clearly the reasons for this amendment and will convince the Senate that it is a meritorious proposition.

I shall not read the letter in full; but the Secretary states that these Indians have approximately $20,000 in the Treasury to their credit, and he says the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has had correspondence with reference to this road work. The commissioner says:

For your information there is inclosed herewith copy of a report received by the commissioner from the superintendent of the Spokane Indian Reservation on the subject.

From the records it appears that the construction of the road across the reservation would be a decided benefit to the Indians. However, owing to the depleted condition of the available funds at the disposal of the service at the present time which might be used in connection with this road work, if Federal aid is to be given the county commissioners in building this highway a special appropriation will be necessary.

In view of the above facts, it is recommended that the proposed amendment receive favorable consideration.

He incloses with that an extended report from the superintendent in charge, from which I will read just an extract or two. He says:

Until good wagon roads are provided for the Spokane Reservation progress among the Spokane Indians will necessarily be slow because of the lack of transportation facilities for marketing their products, now confined to three indifferent hill roads that during certain seasons are very bad, and at all times require very long hauls for a large majority of the Indians.

The situation, in brief, with reference to this road, is that this reservation is situated in Stevens County, Wash., and there is quite a settlement in a certain locality that can be reached only by crossing the reservation. The county commissioners contemplate building a road to reach this section, crossing the reservation. The county funds are very low; and, furthermore, this road appears to be of very great service and very great benefit to these Indians. Therefore they have asked that there should be some help on he part of the Indians in the construction of the road. The matter was carefully looked into by the superintendent, and he says this:

For the foregoing reasons—

He gives the location of the road, the situation of the Indians, the location of the white people, and the benefits that will accrue from the road, and then he says:

For the foregoing reasons I strongly recommend that some means be found to enable the Spokane Indians to contribute a fair share of money toward the construction of the proposed road, for every public utility that improves conditions among the whites in the vicinity of the reservation will bring the homes of these Indians in closer touch with civilization, while good roads will aid them equally with the whites and hasten the day of their independence.

Unfortunately the Spokanes are practically destitute of tribal funds, although possessing timber resources of nearly one billion feet, this being so isolated at present that it can not be economically or profitably marketed until convenient railway transportation facilities and good wagon roads are provided. * * *

In comparison with many other tribes the Spokanes have not fared well at the hands of the Government, though among the most deserving—

I call the attention of the Senate to this language of the superintendent:

In comparison with many other tribes the Spokanes have not fared well at the hands of the Government, though among the most deserving, and a good opportunity is here offered to do a double act of justice by aiding worthy settlers who are struggling against adverse circumstances to develop a most promising section of this new country, at the same time assisting our willing but ignorant red wards in getting on their feet.

If $500 contributed in behalf of the Spokane Indians will assure the building of this road, it will be about the most profitable investment that could be made for them with that amount of money, which would be many times returned in future benefit. It would also go far toward removing a natural and almost excusable prejudice existing in the minds of many good western people against the Indian and his reservation as obstacles in the path of progress.

That is from the superintendent of the reservation. I submit that this small amount, as he says here, would be really of double benefit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. I ask that I may put in the RECORD, so that the RECORD will show them in full, the letter from the Secretary and the letter from the superintendent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 2, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have received your letter of March 11 submitting for report an amendment proposed by Mr. JONES to H. R. 12579, for an expenditure of $500 to assist the county commissioners of Stevens County, Wash., in the construction of a county road across the Spokane Indian Reservation, to be reimbursed out of any proceeds arising from the sale or disposition of surplus lands on said reservation.

There is approximately $20,000 in the Treasury to the credit of these Indians, derived from the sale of lands belonging to them, but there is no authority of law to use any part thereof except in connection with the allotment, classification, and sale of lands.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has had correspondence with reference to this road work. For your information, there is inclosed herewith copy of a report received by the commissioner from the superintendent of the Spokane Indian Reservation on the subject.

From the records it appears that the construction of the road across the reservation would be a decided benefit to the Indians. However, owing to the depleted condition of the available funds at the disposal of the service at the present time which might be used in connection with this road work, if Federal aid is to be given the county commissioners in building this highway, a special appropriation will be necessary.

In view of the above facts, it is recommended that the proposed amendment receive favorable consideration.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES.
First Assistant Secretary.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

[Department of the Interior, United States Indian Service. The Spokane Indian Agency, Room 423, Federal Building.]

SPOKANE, WASH., February 23, 1914.

The COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Answering office letter of January 19, 1913, regarding a request for Indian Office assistance in the matter of building a county road across the Spokane Indian Reservation, right of way for which was recently granted by the department to the commissioners of Stevens County, Wash., the following report is submitted:

Until good wagon roads are provided for the Spokane Reservation progress among the Spokane Indians will necessarily be slow because of the lack of transportation facilities for marketing their products, now confined to three indifferent hill roads that during certain seasons are very bad, and at all times require very long hauls for a large majority of the Indians. This road deficiency also prevents, or handicaps, the development of nearly all allotments except those in the immediate vicinity of the present poor roads over which the Indians are obliged to travel with their cayuse teams. With such a handicap and the poor prospect of better conditions, there is little or no incentive for most of them to do much more than cultivate enough land to furnish them with a bare living. Among intelligent and experienced white pioneers or settlers these obstacles to development would gradually be overcome, but such energy can not be expected from the long dependent red man.

The valley of the Columbia River north of the west end of the Spokane Reservation is very fertile and rapidly being peopled by a fine lot of settlers, practically all of whom have come into the valley with sufficient means to purchase tracts of land that they are vigorously proceeding to develop, but now find themselves unexpectedly in a pocket. Across the river to the west lies the Colville Reservation; eastward is the mountainous divide between the Columbia and Colville Rivers, while to the south the Spokane Reservation is a formidable barrier that must be pierced to enable them to have an outlet to markets on the south side of the river, there being no railroad in the entire territory. To reach these markets at present a long detour must be made from the lower end of the almost water-grade road down the Columbia to the eastward along the reservation boundary lines, thence southward over the hilly, sandy, and rocky road through the reservation to the Nee bridge over the Spokane River near its mouth, all of which entails a real hardship and great loss of time for the settlers, who have not as much time to spare as their red brethren.

The proposed road follows the water grade down the Columbia until it reaches a point a short distance north of the Government town site at the junction of the Columbia and Spokane Rivers, where it diverges to the east, passing along the east and west dividing line between the town site and the Spokane Agency Reserve; thence south by twists and turns to the Nee bridge. This diversion involves a series of steep grades in getting down to the bridge, which could undoubtedly be avoided by crossing the town site nearer the Columbia, over such of the platted streets as may offer a better grade and shorter line of travel.

Stevens County, in which the Spokane Reservation wholly lies, has a very large area, much of which is but thinly settled, and its financial resources are very limited, so much so that it will not be able to construct the proposed road without assistance, owing to an unusual expense that will be necessitated by a lot of rockwork at a point on the reservation known as the Big Rock, where a bluff butts into the river. Excepting at that point construction will not be a difficult matter, and a water grade can be made practically the entire distance across the reservation, affording an easy and scenic line of communication that would be a godsend to these isolated white settlers and of equal or greater benefit to the Indians of the west end; for while only seven allotments would be crossed, all with a minimum amount of damage, that would be more than offset by the resulting increase in their value, a great many other allotments now unimproved would be placed within easy access to the road, thus leading to their occupancy by the allottees or give to them a good rental value, now lacking by reason of their isolation.

Of the seven allotments crossed, two are those of deceased children of an old blind widower, whose nearby allotment will be greatly enhanced in value and bring a fine rental or sale price. Another is that of an intelligent woman to whom a fee-simple patent has been issued. Two others belong to an old man and an old woman, who will be much benefited, for they are unable to make any improvements and are now dependent upon agency assistance. The remaining allotment directly affected is that of a little schoolgirl. Many miners are allotted in that vicinity, their lands not yet fenced, and no development of the property by parents or lessees can be expected until wagon-road facilities, now nonexistant, are provided.

For the foregoing reasons I strongly recommend that some means be found to enable the Spokane Indians to contribute a fair share of money toward the construction of the proposed road, for every public utility that improves conditions among the whites in the vicinity of the reservation will bring the homes of these Indians in closer touch with civilization, while good roads will aid them equally with the whites and hasten the day of their independence.

Unfortunately the Spokanes are practically destitute of tribal funds, although possessing timber resources of nearly 1,000,000,000 feet, this being so isolated at present that it can not be economically or profitably marketed until convenient railway transportation facilities and good wagon roads are provided, so that any sum set aside to assist in the building of this much-needed county project would have to come from the general reimbursable fund or else be specifically appropriated by Congress.

In comparison with many other tribes, the Spokanes have not fared well at the hands of the Government, though among the most deserving, and a good opportunity is here offered to do a double act of justice by aiding worthy settlers who are struggling against adverse circumstances to develop a most promising section of this new country, at the same time assisting our willing but ignorant red wards in getting on their feet.

If $500 contributed in behalf of the Spokane Indians will assure the building of this road, it will be about the most profitable investment that could be made for them with that amount of money, which would be many times returned in future benefit. It would also go far toward removing a natural and almost excusable prejudice existing in the minds of many good western people against the Indian and his reservation as obstacles in the path of progress.

I have marked the course of the proposed road across the reservation on the map accompanying the office letter, and this, with the letter from Senator W. L. JONES and its inclosure is herewith returned.

Respectfully,

JOHN MCA. WEBSTER,
Superintendent and S. D. A.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to have a correction made in the RECORD.

On page 10854, in answer to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], I stated that there were something like $300,000 in deficits which had been passed in the Indian appropriation bill of last year. In looking over the statement afterwards I came to the conclusion that there was but $100,000 of those deficits which had not been reported to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the other $200,000 having been reported to that committee, but not to the Senate, so I changed the figures to $100,000. The proof reader, however, read it "$700,000," which is entirely out of line with the facts. It was $100,000. There were about $300,000 of deficits, $100,000 of which was not reported either to the committee or to the Senate, and $200,000 of which, if I remember now, or thereabouts, had been reported to the committee but not to the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. On page 65, after the figures "$200,000" in line 21, I move to strike out all of the proviso down to and including the word "Interior," in line 10, page 66.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 21, it is proposed to strike out the remainder of line 21, all of lines 22, 23, and 24, on page 65, and all on page 61, down to and including line 10.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this is an amendment which involves, as I believe, a great principle in the management of Indian affairs. There probably is no bill which comes before the Senate which is given less attention and incites less interest generally on the part of Senators than the Indian appropriation bill. I regret that this is so. I believe this condition is due to the fact that the Indian has been regarded throughout the country as an incompetent person, in the way of the white man's progress, blocking civilization or modern development. He is an Indian, and men seem to think that the only good Indian is the dead one. If the expressed intention had been to dispose of and exterminate him, it is difficult to imagine more effective means to those ends than the treatment he has received at the hands of the white man.

I have felt since I came to Congress that the Indian, being a ward of the Government and under its charge, should be given the consideration to which his rights and our obligations entitled him. A sense of duty was upon me which I had not felt in unofficial life. I know that he has been neglected. I feel that he has been despoiled of his natural heritage and been made the helpless victim of his guardian. What guardian or trustee of a white person would have been permitted to treat his cesti que trust as this Government has treated its wards? The Indian has been driven from place to place throughout the United States, generally with the idea of locating him in some position where he will not be too much in the way upon land which was thought to be worthless for the white man's use. Later it was found that the lands assigned him were valuable, and again he has been compelled to move on. In cases where he could not be moved farther, the effort has been to divest him of whatever of value he held and render him as small an equivalent as possible. It is this disposition to wrong the Indian that every conscientious man connected with Indian affairs either as legislator or administrator has been trying to combat. This to the man without an Indian constituency is certainly an impersonal task. He must work, if he works at all, from a sense of duty and without hope of personal reward; and if the rights of the Indian are to be preserved and his wrongs requited, it must be through men who believe that the rights of a red man are at least equal to those of the white man.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I think what the Senator from Michigan is saying is worthy of careful attention on the part of the Senate, and I think it is worthy of a larger audience of Senators. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	James	Perkins	Smoot
Bankhead	Jones	Pittman	Sterling
Bristow	Lane	Poindexter	Stone
Bryan	Martin, Va.	Pomerene	Sutherland
Camden	Martine, N. J.	Reed	Thompson

Hughes	Penrose	Smith, Mich.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for calling a quorum, but I realize that Senators are not interested in what may be said about the Indian. Outside of Oklahoma he can not vote; he has not large influence, and his interests attract little public attention. I, however, propose to state my views on this particular amendment.

When interrupted I was discussing the situation which maintains throughout the United States and has maintained for some years as to our attitude in reference to the American Indian. I had stated that he had been moved about from place to place, and by almost common consent was considered as a being of an inferior race, the people having lost sight of the fact that he is not an interloper, that he is not an intruder here, but that this is his native land. He is the aborigine, and the paleface is the foreigner. He was here in possession when Columbus discovered America, his native land. In theory we have recognized his prior right, and by statutes have acknowledged that right. Thousands of illustrious examples in letters, in art, in industry, and in statesmanship testify to the fact that he is not of an inferior race, and where he has not been corrupted by the white man he stands as an example to all men of honor and integrity.

This great Indian problem has been complicated by the fact that it has been difficult sometimes to get men of the right understanding, the right training, and the right sympathies to handle it. That the Indian in his native primitive condition is capable of assimilating at once our ideas of government no one will claim. He is the child of the forest and plain, and to the Anglo-Saxon method of civilization he must yield. It is the business of our Government to fit him for the new condition. Necessarily the work of preparing him for citizenship and of preserving his rights must be worked out through governmental agencies. Much of this work must be done among the Indians in the field, and by agents or representatives of the Government. These agents have always been subject to local interests and influences, so much so that I think most men who have given careful study to the matter have concluded that it has been and will continue to be absolutely impossible to secure anything like approximate justice to the Indians if their affairs are left to local representatives. They will reflect the local sentiment, which invariably is in favor of the dominant and against the weaker and less influential race.

The questions, first, of a just and comprehensive plan, and, second, of agencies for carrying out such a plan, are and should be the transcendent ones with the Department of Indian Affairs. The greatest obstacle in the way of proper administration is the spirit of greed and graft which works its ends through unconscionable political influence. The provision in the House bill was intended by its instigators to place the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes under the supervision of a politician who would be subservient to the advice of men who know what they want.

The tendency of the times has been toward the merit system in public service. In no department of the Government is the civil service more imperatively needed than in the administration of Indian affairs. Fortunately, during all of our experience with the Indians there have been connected with the service some men who were capable and honest. They have generally incurred the ill will and opposition of corrupt Indian exploiters, but they have kept alive the spirit of American duty, and have demonstrated, in a measure at least, the possibilities of development for the American Indian. Such are the men whom it is proposed in the pending bill to legislate out of office. The Indians have confidence in them; the Board of Indian Commissioners commend them for their great efficiency. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs would not think of removing them if he were uninfluenced by Oklahoma politicians.

The Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma comprise about 101,000 Indians, approximately one-third of all the Indians in the United States. They are known as the Cherokees, the Seminoles, the Creeks, the Choctaws, and the Chickasaws. I suppose they were called civilized tribes because they attained a civilization of their own, having their separate form of government. That government was effective and in a measure progressive. It is believed by many that their condition under their own government was much better than it has been since the United States compelled them to abandon self-government and to submit to that imposed by the United States.

The affairs of these tribes are now administered in Oklahoma by a commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes, in the person of Mr. J. G. Wright, and by a superintendent of the Union Agency, a Mr. Kelsey. The duties of the former relate to tribal affairs, and those of the latter to the affairs of individual Indians. These duties are separate and distinct, and if properly done they are all that two honest, capable, and experienced men can perform.

The proposition I have moved to strike from the bill is to abolish these two positions and to create a superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In other words, officers now under the civil service, men of tried and proven ability, are to be supplanted by a man who may be a politician, selected by political influences, which have been ineffectual under present management.

My apprehensions of the wrongs which may result to the Indians from this change in existing law are based upon facts and circumstances developed in the committee hearings, and which seem to me to be closely related. Let us first review the history of this particular provision and the reasons given for its enactment. Members of the Board of Indian Commissioners who had made a personal investigation of the work of Wright and Kelsey were before the committee, and strongly recommended that these men be retained and that their force of inspectors be increased rather than diminished. Their reasons were strong and convincing, and they were men actuated by the highest and most unselfish motives. After their statements the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Merritt, was interrogated by the chairman and others of the committee. On pages 363, 364, 367, and 368 is found the following:

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask what reason induces the House of Representatives to incorporate this provision? What was the argument? Do you know, Mr. Meritt?

Mr. MERITT. Mr. Chairman, this item was incorporated in the House bill on the recommendation of Representative CARTER, of Oklahoma, and has the support, I understand, of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress. The conditions in eastern Oklahoma among the Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes justify the legislation that is now in the Indian bill, and I am authorized to state to this committee that the Indian Office and the department are in favor of the legislation now contained in the bill, with two amendments. We shall ask for an increase in the appropriation allowed by the House. The House allowed $150,000, and we shall ask that that amount be increased to $225,000. Probably we can, in view of the consolidation, get along with $200,000, which will be a decrease over last year's appropriation of $50,000 for administrative work. We will also ask that there be incorporated in the bill after the word "that," in line 6, these words: "Effective July 1, 1914," so that it will be clear when these two offices shall be consolidated.

Senator TOWNSEND. Why do you ask to have them consolidated?

Mr. MERITT. Because the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes has been engaged in strictly tribal work, and the superintendent of the Union Agency is engaged in individual Indian work. In addition to those two officials, we have another official at Muskogee, who is at the head of the Indian schools of the Five Civilized Tribes. The Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes has been in charge of tribal work for a number of years. Congress has, by direct provisions, required that the tribal work of the Five Civilized Tribes be wound up. This work has slowly continued from year to year over the earnest protest of the Representatives from that State. The tribal work has practically been wound up at this time, except the disposal of the coal lands. The unallotted lands of the different nations have practically all been sold, or will be sold by the 1st of July. We have the affairs of the Cherokee Nation now practically wound up, and they will be wound up by the 1st of July. The tribal affairs of the Seminole Nation are practically wound up, and the affairs of the Creek Nation will be wound up very shortly after the 1st of July if we can procure legislation which will equalize Creek allotments. We have that legislation now in the department already prepared, and we shall ask that that legislation be incorporated in this bill. That will enable us to wind up the tribal affairs of the Creek Nation. The surplus tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations is very largely disposed of, except the coal lands. The surface of those lands will soon be advertised and will be sold this spring or summer. Part of the coal lands has been leased, and that property will continue tribal and the proceeds be used for tribal purposes for a number of years.

* * * * * * *

Senator TOWNSEND. Now, here is an appointment that somebody has suggested. There must have been some reason in somebody's mind why this should be done this way. I do not believe your department originated it.

Mr. MERITT. No, sir; our department did not originate this legislation. It was incorporated in the bill in the House of Representatives; and, I might say, if there is any extended discussion on this item I would be glad if Senator OWEN and Senator GORE could be present. I probably have answered as extensively as I can regarding this matter.

Senator TOWNSEND. Thus far there has not been a word said here that furnishes a sufficient reason for making that change. Now, if you had said to me, if it was true, that you could not get a man to fill this larger position possibly under the civil service, why there might have been some reason for that, but it would seem to me that the very suggestion that we have local representatives here to explain this item shows conclusively the very evil which these gentlemen have anticipated in making this possible change.

Mr. MERITT. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the conditions which have prevailed at Muskogee and among the Five Civilized Tribes during the last 16 years can be justified. We have had appointed to positions in that office politicians from practically half the States of this Union; men have held their positions because they would distribute political patronage to the various Senators and Congressmen. They have gotten their appropriations because they had certain employees from certain districts who aided them in the past in their work. These employees were appointed largely through the efforts of the officials now in charge of the work at Muskogee. I believe all those political appointees have been covered under by the civil service. Those men will be protected in their positions, but the department and the Indian Office believe that the efficiency of that work can probably be increased by the appointment of a man who has not been connected with that work in the past. That tribal work should have been wound up several years ago. It is because of politics and these political appointments that has made the Five Civilized Tribes work inefficient, which has strung the work along for a long period of years, when the tribal affairs should have been wound up some time ago.

From this it appears that the provision under discussion was proposed by a Representative from Oklahoma and had the support of the Oklahoma State delegation, that it did not originate in the Indian Office, and that the acting commissioner could not explain it satisfactorily, but requested that the two Senators from Oklahoma be present if there was to be "extended discussion."

It is well to remember this fact in order to understand another matter to which I shall call attention shortly. It should also be remembered that the acting commissioner stated as a reason for this new law that the tribal affairs of these Indians have been about wound up; that they ought under law to be wound up; that the work has slowly continued from year to year "over the earnest protest" of Representatives from Oklahoma. He thinks or states that these affairs should have been wound up years ago, and that they were not was due to political influence exerted by Senators and Representatives through Mr. Wright, now in charge of the tribal matters of these five nations. No one familiar with Indian affairs in Oklahoma will doubt that politicians have exerted their influence, but here is a proposition to make the exercise of that influence more potent. There are, however, serious doubts in my mind as to the accuracy of the acting commissioner's suggestion that Mr. Wright is responsible for any of the political appointments in the Five Civilized Tribes.

After Mr. Meritt made his statement before the committee Commissioner Wright made his report to the Indian Office covering these matters. I received a copy from Commissioner Sells, and I desire to submit it here, as it is a complete and conclusive answer to the alleged reasons for the pending legislation:

MUSKOGEE, OKLA., May 29, 1914.

Hon. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior.

MY DEAR MR. LANE: There has recently been forwarded me from the department a printed copy of hearings on the pending Indian appropriation bill before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, in which appear discussions of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes and the status of the unfinished tribal work.

Hon. E. B. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, appearing before the committee, has made certain observations with reference especially to the tribal work, which indicate that he has been misinformed, and to which I beg the privilege of taking a few exceptions.

I trust I may not be considered as criticizing Mr. Meritt, with whom I have been closely and pleasantly associated since his connection with the service, other than to say that had he been more accurately informed or more familiar with conditions, I am convinced he would not have made these conclusions.

In view of the facts, however, and as I was not present to correct impressions which may prevail among members of the committee because of statements that might be considered a reflection upon the department, as well as upon this office and myself personally, I feel it incumbent upon me to submit to you the following facts:

On pages 363 and 364, of said hearings, Mr. Meritt is reported to have said in part, as follows:

"The Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes has been engaged in strictly tribal work and the superintendent of the Union Agency is engaged in individual Indian work. * * * The Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes has been in charge of tribal work for a number of years. Congress has by direct provisions required that the tribal work of the Five Civilized Tribes be wound up. This work has slowly continued from year to year over the earnest protest of the Representatives from that State. The tribal work has practically been wound up at this time except the disposal of the coal lands. The unallotted lands of the different nations have practically all been sold or will be sold by the 1st of July. We have the affairs of the Cherokee Nation now practically wound up, and they will be wound up by the 1st of July. The tribal affairs of the Seminole Nation are practically wound up, and the affairs of the Creek Nation will be wound up very shortly after the 1st of July if we can procure legislation which will equalize Creek allotments. * * * The surplus tribal property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations is very largely disposed of except the coal lands. The surface of those lands will soon be advertised and will be sold this spring or summer. Part of the coal lands has been leased and that property will continue tribal and the proceeds be used for tribal purposes for a number of years."

The tribal affairs of the Cherokee Nation ought to be practically completed by June 30 next, with the exception of distributing approximately $836,000 tribal moneys to 41,690 citizens. The Creek tribal affairs should also be practically disposed of by such time with the exception of the distribution of about $3,800,000 to approximately 17,700 citizens to equalize their allotments when so authorized by Congress. The tribal affairs of the Seminoles are also nearly completed, although under instructions from the department the allotment deeds are not yet all executed. About $1,800,000 tribal moneys must be distributed or individualized to 3,119 members before the affairs of this tribe can be entirely finished.

In the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations there remain about 970,000 acres of unallotted timber lands, approximately 25,000 acres of other unallotted lands, and about 430,000 acres of the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands yet to be disposed of, together with such land heretofore sold as may not be finally paid for. There have been 2,088,440 acres of tribal lands in these two nations disposed of since 1910, embraced in 25,516 separate tracts, for the aggregate amount of approximately $11,590,600, separate ledger accounts being required for each tract; and interest must be computed on amounts received on deferred payments until they are completed, final payments not being due for about two years. Of the lands heretofore sold in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations there are 19,235 tracts not yet paid for in full. There are also approximately 2,500 town lots in said nations yet to be disposed of. The tribal coal and asphalt deposits under the segregated coal and asphalt lands can not be disposed of, and therefore the tribal affairs of these nations can not be closed until the sale of the mineral deposits is authorized by Congress.

The final proceeds of all tribal properties of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, including the coal and asphalt, together with amounts on hand, will probably reach twenty or thirty millions of dollars, and these must be distributed per capita or individualized before the tribal affairs can be closed.

In view of these facts, it would seem that Mr. Meritt has not been adequately informed in regard to the unfinished tribal work of these tribes.

The details in connection with the sale of the unallotted lands can not be easily understood, such lands, excepting coal lands, being more or less intermingled with allotted lands; and the work of separating them, tabulating descriptions, preparing maps showing the location of each tract, printing lists of descriptions for each sale, replying to letters of inquiry, furnishing desired information, selling lands at auction, recording sales, issuing receipts to purchasers for the amount paid at time of sale and thereafter opening ledger accounts for each tract purchased, receiving remittances due, together with computing interest thereon; issuing certificates of purchase to purchasers for each sale and upon full payment finally preparing deeds to purchasers, having same executed by the proper tribal officers and approved by the department, and thereafter recording and delivering them, is all work of an exacting character. Moreover, the transfers must finally be noted on all of the various township allotment plats, and checked to insure accuracy and to prevent confusion thereafter in land titles.

In response to a suggestion from a member of the committee during the hearing, that from the annual report of the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes it appeared there was still considerable work to be done, Mr. Meritt states that there is considerable clerical work remaining, but that this could as well be performed under the supervision of one official having charge of both tribal and individual Indian affairs as of two.

The remaining lands, if properly advertised and sold, should, in my opinion, realize at least $6,500,000; nor does this include the coal and asphalt deposits; while the amount remaining to be distributed to Creeks, Cherokees, and Seminoles is about $6,000,000. The advisability of leaving work of such magnitude to clerks may be questioned. I invite attention to the fact that in the distribution of about $850,000 to Cherokees in 1897, made by a special agent, different inspectors of the department, including former Inspector J. W. Zevely, Inspector McLaughlin, and myself, when an inspector prior to being assigned to duty here, were continuously detailed at various times to attend the payments in order to insure their being properly made. Yet, notwithstanding these precautions, the special agent was finally detected in irregularities in connection with the payments, suspended, and subsequently dismissed from the service.

On page 368 Mr. Meritt further states:

"Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the conditions which have prevailed at Muskogee and among the Five Civilized Tribes during the last 16 years can be justified. We have had appointed to positions in that office politicians from practically half the States of this Union; men have held their positions because they would distribute political patronage to the various Senators and Congressmen. They have gotten their appropriations because they have had certain employees from certain districts who aided them in the past in their work. These employees were appointed largely through the efforts of the officials now in charge of the work at Muskogee. I believe all of those political appointees have been covered under by the civil service. Those men will be protected in their positions, but the department and the Indian Office believe that the efficiency of that work can probably be increased by the appointment of a man who has not been connected with that work in the past. That tribal work should have been wound up several years ago. It is because of politics and these political appointments that has made the Five Civilized Tribes work inefficient, which has strung the work along for a long period of years, when the tribal affairs should have been wound up some time ago."

From these remarks Mr. Meritt seems to have reference to this office, and indicates that the cause of delay in closing the tribal affairs is principally due to inefficiency of political employees, who, as he states, were appointed "largely through the efforts of the officials now in charge of the work at Muskogee."

As the affairs of the restricted individual Indians under the supervision of the superintendent do not pertain to the winding up of tribal affairs, my statements are confined to matters of this office and not those under the supervision of the superintendent Union Agency.

I was appointed to my present position, having been transferred from the position of inspector July 1, 1907, since which time Secretaries Garfield and Ballinger, and also Assistant Secretaries Ryan (subsequently assigned to duty in this office for a period of five years as special assistant to the Secretary), Wilson, Pierce, and Adams, the assistant attorney general of the department, Mr. Woodruff, and other representatives, have visited and inspected the work and procedure of this office. Furthermore, reports to the department, with suggestions concerning the progress of the work, have always been forwarded through the Indian Office for consideration and indorsement, and this office has been guided in all matters by instructions received. Annual reports have also shown the status of tribal work, and, in compliance with instructions, I have in the past appeared before the Senate committee at different times with specific information. Tribal executives and attorneys have also from time to time been consulted, and the records will show that the department has approved of procedure and work accomplished in tribal affairs, including the sale of unallotted lands.

Concerning employees of this office, I beg to state that at the time I assumed charge there were 181 employees, as the records show. Although I had previously not inquired, I have recently ascertained that of this number there were 47 admitted Democrats, 61 Republicans, 56 women, 27 of whom were connected with families considered Democratic and 24 of Republican families. There were also 16 colored janitors or messengers. I was verbally directed by Secretary Garfield to make no changes except in the interest of the service. From that time to the present not a single appointment to positions in this office has been recommended by me outside of the civil-service list of eligibles or by transfer, with the exception of three temporary stenographers and a few temporary employees, lately authorized by Commissioner Sells and approved by the department. As the tribal work has approached completion persons employed have been relieved as circumstances warranted, until at present there are 50 persons employed, all of whom, with the exception of the two or three recent temporary appointees just mentioned, were employed in 1907 and have been retained because they were considered the most efficient, although a number of others who had rendered highly satisfactory service resigned to accept more desirable employment. Of those now connected with this office, 17 are and always have been considered Democrats, 12 are Republicans, 18 are women, 10 of whom are from Democratic and 8 from Republican families, and there are 3 colored messengers.

Of persons employed in connection with tribal work, including those engaged prior to July, 1907, are Hon. CHARLES CARTER, Congressman, former tribal coal trustee; Hon. H. M. JACOWAY, Congressman from Arkansas; and others have since been elected or have served in positions in Oklahoma as follows:

1 mayor of Muskogee, 1 mayor of Wilburton, 1 mayor of Ardmore, 1 mayor of Purcell (now postmaster), 2 county judges, 3 county surveyors, 1 deputy warden Oklahoma State Penitentiary, 2 district judges, 2 members of State legislature, 2 United States commissioners, 2 city attorneys, 1 master in chancery, 1 justice of the peace, 1 stenographer to Federal judge, 1 city councilman of Muskogee, the present private secretary to Senator OWEN, 1 private secretary to governor, 1 delegate to Oklahoma constitutional convention, 1 clerk United States court, 1 State bank examiner, 12 employees in various other official positions; total, 39.

In addition, 49 are now or have at different times after leaving the service practiced law, all of whom have been members of the Oklahoma bar in good standing.

Of those heretofore and still employed in this office, I venture to assert that there does not exist anywhere in the service a more efficient, faithful, or loyal corps of employees. When necessity required their being called upon to do so they have frequently and willingly worked overtime, and even into the night, to accomplish work in hand. In no instance has any employee been faithless to the department or involved in transactions with Indians while employed, or concerned in any scandal either in official or private life, so far as I am aware.

After an investigation of this office, Inspector James McLaughlin, in a report to the department under date of June 4, 1910, as embodied in a communication from Hon. Samuel Adams, Acting Secretary of the Interior, dated March 9, 1912, to Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE, House of Representatives, and subsequently printed as a public document, stated:

"I have inspected the different branches or divisions of both offices above mentioned and find that the work of the commissioner is confined to undivided property of these tribes up to and including allotment, while the Union Agency has supervision of the affairs of the individual Indian after allotment.

* * * * * * *

"There were no complaints offered against any officer or employee of the department, and in my judgment matters are being attended to and the work in hand pertaining to the winding up of the tribal affairs of the Five Tribes is being expedited as rapidly and promptly as the complicated and existing conditions will permit."

The work in connection with making agreements with the Five Tribes, receiving applications for enrollment, allotting the land, surveying, platting, and disposing of town lots, collecting tribal revenues from an approximate area of 19,000,000 acres of land, disposing of the remaining tribal property, involving the rights of over 101,000 Indians—practically one-third of the Indian population of the United States, intermingled with whom are over 1,000,000 white people—and the contests and litigation which have necessarily ensued, has been more complicated than any other work connected with the Indian Service in the history of the Government, and this the records will show.

The expense of all the work, covering the entire time to June 30, 1912, was $34.95 per capita. This included the making of the agreements from 1893, when the Dawes Commission was first created; receiving applications for citizenship from all parts of the country, aggregating some 250,000, about 101,000 of whom were enrolled; appraising the land and making allotments; the disposition of contests; issuing certificates of allotment and preparing the final allotment deeds, these deeds requiring to be executed by the proper tribal officer, approved by the department, and recorded. As shown by statements heretofore made by officials of the Indian Office in hearings before the House Indian Committee, this expense is less than the cost during the same period of allotments on Indian reservations where the same complications and conditions do not exist. The cost of the sale of tribal lands made since 1910, embracing 2,157,000 acres, on which $12,045,182.52 was realized, not including interest on deferred payments, which aggregates to the present time approximately $568,665.53, has been about 4 cents per acre, and this has included the cost of preparing data and maps, of advertising, attending sales, thereafter receiving remittances, computing interest on deferred payments, preparing records, deeds, etc.

In 1909 the Indian Committee of the House desired information before making further appropriations for the work of the Five Tribes as estimated for by the department, and in compliance with instructions I appeared before the full committee for three days, explaining what had been accomplished, the manner of procedure, and the work yet to be done in connection with tribal affairs. In a printed report of the hearings there appears in part the following:

"The CHAIRMAN [the late Hon. J. S. Sherman, Vice President]. We want to know all about the situation down in Oklahoma, so far as it has come under your control or observation, in reference to the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, and the necessity for future appropriations, as well as the condition of the work at the present time."

At the conclusion of the hearing appears the following:

"Mr. MARSHALL. You have given us more detailed information than I have ever heard before, and the result is that it leaves an impression upon my mind that it will be practically impossible to close this work up with the money that you now ask for. It looks to me as if the situation down there will call for more or less money and work of some sort of an organization for years to come.

"Mr. WRIGHT. That is true. I think the committee must realize that appropriations must be made in connection with the Five Civilized Tribes for a number of years.

* * * * * * *

"Mr. CARTER. At intervals the Committee on Indian Affairs have been providing for this as far as it should be done at a certain time, with the hope of dispensing with the commission and enabling it to wind up its business. It does not seem that we have ever made appropriations whereby the commission could wind the matter up.

"Mr. WRIGHT. That has been the difficulty in getting through, and on account of the suits that are pending and the additional ones that come up."

Furthermore, the chairman at the same hearing publicly stated in substance that it was apparent from statements presented that the work was being expedited as rapidly as circumstances and complications would permit, considering the interests of the Indians, and the committee, including the present chairman, Mr. STEPHENS, and Congressman CARTER, voted unanimously, I was informed, to appropriate the amounts asked for.

Upon the recommendation of the department the committee also favorably considered and Congress subsequently authorized payments of money in lieu of land to citizens having $50 or less of appraised value of land due them to complete their allotments, there being 76,056 citizens to whom such remnants were due. These persons, although repeatedly requested, had declined to select or make application for such additional land, and the law prohibited the sale of unallotted lands until all allotments were completed. Immediately thereafter payments aggregating $523,849.34 to such Indians were commenced and steps also taken to tabulate and prepare data for the sale of the unallotted lands aggregating 1,787,972 acres, exclusive of 1,289,554 acres of timberlands directed by the department to be offered, and 432,000 acres of coal lands not then authorized by Congress to be sold. These unallotted lands to be sold were in 26,607 separate tracts, containing from 5 to 160 acres each, intermingled and scattered throughout the allotted lands. In 1910 the department authorized and directed that said lands be advertised and sold at not less than certain minimum prices, which were fixed by Secretary Ballinger after his personal visit here. At such sale 588,992 acres were sold, the minimum price required not being realized for the remainder. In 1911 Secretary Fisher directed that the remaining lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, aggregating about 1,141,882 acres, be again offered at the same minimum price, although this office suggested that such price be reduced. At such sale 360,555 acres were disposed of. The remaining unallotted lands in the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Nations, aggregating about 57,000 acres, were also disposed of, with the exception of a few tracts containing about 2,910 acres, which remained unsold owing to various complications. In 1912 the remaining Choctaw and Chickasaw lands, aggregating 816,826 acres, were again offered at one-half the former minimum price, and 697,545 acres were sold. In 1913 practically all of the remaining lands were offered and sold to the highest bidder without any minimum price, including 94,571 acres withdrawn from the timber area which were offered at a certain minimum price.

In 1912 under direction of the department the timber on 1,278,000 acres of timberlands previously reserved was appraised. This work was completed June 30, 1911, and the timber first advertised in February, 1912, for a period of 90 days. Sealed bids were received and opened on May 1, 1912, which were rejected by the department for the reason that it considered the prices offered were inadequate. Said lands were not authorized by the department to be again offered until October 1, 1913, when they were advertised for 90 days under regulations of the department and offered in January, 1914, at which time approximately 306,000 acres of such lands were sold, no offers being received for the remainder at the minimum prices required. Regulations have recently been approved by the department for the offering of the remaining 967,000 acres to be sold in November next, after which such lands as may no be disposed of at the minimum price required must again be offered at some subsequent date.

It must therefore be evident that these lands could not have been more rapidly disposed of without sacrificing the interests of the Indians and accepting lower prices. The result of these sales has been highly satisfactory to all concerned, and much more realized for the tribes than was anticipated.

The department has at different times favorably considered the numerous applications and earnest requests of Oklahoma Congressmen, and has granted extensions of time for deferred payments due for land sold, the last extension of one year for payments due from November, 1913, to March, 1914, having been authorized September 13, 1913, as recommended by Commissioner Sells. The wisdom of such action can not be questioned, for the reason that farmers and others, on account of repeated crop failures, have not been able to meet such payments.

The sale of the surface of the coal lands was not authorized by Congress until 1912, and immediately thereafter three men were appointed by the President, and who were unknown to me, to appraise same, but the work of these men was unsatisfactory, and they subsequently resigned. During nearly the entire time of their employment I was in Washington by direction of the department.

The reappraisement of these lands has recently been completed, but the delay in their sale is because of complications in connection with the coal operators relinquishing part of the surface covered by their leases. The preparation of these lands for sale at the earliest practicable date, however, has and is now having the earliest personal attention of Commissioner Sells.

During the progress of the sales above mentioned, important and necessary work in connection with disposing of other tribal properties, preparing pay rolls, and making payments of amounts to equalize allotments aggregating about $1,854,989.82 to 78,703 citizens, including Cherokees having over $50 due each, excepting $542,656.90, due to 1,017 restricted Indians, turned over to the superintendent of Union Agency for payment, and completing final office records in connection with allotments and other tribal work have been vigorously prosecuted.

Furthermore, the prolongation of the work pertaining to enrollment of and allotment of lands to the members of the Five Civilized Tribes, and the fact that such work was not long since completed, is due in the main to new legislation and to litigation affecting the lands.

Of the court decisions bearing on this work the most far-reaching are the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the following cases:

The Red Bird case: Involved claims to enrollment of 3,600 persons as intermarried Cherokees, decided November 5, 1906. Of this number only 286 were finally enrolled. This necessitated the cancellation of all tentative selections made to those who had been denied under this decision and the allotment of land to other citizens; also the appraisement of improvements located thereon, and determination of the owners thereof, under the provisions of the act of Congress of March 2, 1907.

The Goldsby-Allison case: Wherein it was held that the Secretary was without authority to cancel the enrollment of any person without first giving due notice, decided November 30, 1908. This necessitated the restoring of the allotments of several hundred persons whose enrollment had been cancelled, and the cancellation of allotments of the lands involved which had been allotted to other persons.

The Whitmire case: Involved the rights of 1,720 Cherokee freedmen, decided January 29, 1912. This necessitated the adjustment of numerous allotments that had been made of the lands claimed by these Cherokee freedmen.

The Gritts-Muskrat case: Involved the right of minor Cherokees to enrollment under the provisions of the act of April 26, 1906; decided May 13, 1912. This decision affected the allotments of 5,600 newborn children, which could not be made regular and patents thereto issued until after its rendition.

The acts of Congress of March 3, 1905, and April 26, 1906, which provided for the enrollment of infant children, resulted in placing 13,032 new names upon the approved rolls of said nations, of which 5,610 are Cherokees, 3,210 are Choctaws, 909 are Chickasaws, 2,926 are Creeks, and 377 are Seminoles, to whom allotments had to be made.

The Choctaw-Chickasaw Citizenship Court, created under the act of July 1, 1902, to hear and determine the rights to enrollment of persons admitted to citizenship by decisions of the United States court in the Indian Territory under the act of June 10, 1906, was in session until December 31, 1904, and heard and determined the rights of 3,487 claimants to citizenship and rendered decisions holding that practically all such persons were not entitled to enrollment. This involved a vast amount of additional work upon this office.

The Indian appropriation act of April 30, 1908, made provision to investigate all conveyances made by citizens in violation of the terms of existing agreements in the Five Civilized Tribes, and under direction of the department data was compiled for the purpose of instituting suits to set aside conveyances of allotted lands made prior to the time that the Indians were authorized by law to convey. Examination of all conveyances recorded in each of the 40 counties covering a period of two years, or from date of statehood, was made and transcripts of over 300,000 transfers made and checked with the records of this office, with the result that 27,800 cases were reported to the department and subsequently referred to the Department of Justice with request that suits be instituted to set aside such illegal transactions.

On July 22, 1910, the Secretary of the Interior promulgated regulations governing the purchase of land by Choctaw and Chickasaw freedmen under the provisions of the act of Congress of April 26, 1906. Immediately thereafter all of such freedmen entitled to purchase land under said act were notified of their rights and 1,412 applications were received. This involved considerable extra work and required the services of several clerks for at least six months to complete it.

The act of Congress approved May 29, 1908, section 7, authorized the survey of additional town sites on segregated coal and asphalt lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, under which provision of law 8 towns and 14 additions to towns were surveyed, platted, and lots appraised and sold. In addition thereto 300 towns had previously been surveyed, platted, appraised, and the lots disposed of.

The act of Congress approved May 27, 1908, authorized the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the various counties in eastern Oklahoma certified copies of all allotment records as affected the title to lands in such counties. This data was prepared at this office and required the constant services of a large number of clerks for a period of five months.

The magnitude of the work originally provided for by Congress through its acts from the creation of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes was never fully realized until it was well under way, and Congress has deemed it necessary to enact new legislation from time to time pertaining thereto.

This office also supervises the work of collecting royalty from tribal coal and asphalt leases and the work of the mining trustees of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. There are a total of 109 tribal coal leases, covering 99,800 acres, and 7 asphalt leases, covering 4,960 acres. Under said leases about 3,000,000 tons of coal are mined annually, the royalty amounting to about $240,000. This office also has charge of the work of collecting rentals for the surface of the segregated coal and asphalt lands from about 4,000 occupants, for grazing and farming purposes, amounting to about $80,000 annually.

The annual report of this office for the year ending June 30, 1913, shows that there were received 56,541 communications and mailed out 137,813 letters, circulars, and other papers, and $3,535,878.15 received, all pertaining to tribal matters.

The office of the superintendent, Union Agency, also received in connection with the affairs of individual Indians 148,274 communications, vouchers, remittances, circulars, etc., and mailed 215,944 letters, vouchers, circulars, etc., and received $4,984,181.95. A total of $8,520,080 was therefore received and handled and in turn disbursed or accounted for during the year by the two offices.

Since January 1, 1914, to date there have been received at this office 21,632 letters and 14,703 remittances of money, aggregating $1,018,485.54, pertaining to tribal affairs.

There is also at the present time $4,892,733.82 tribal funds on deposit in 246 banks in Oklahoma, in connection with which this office is required under instructions to receive and forward applications and bonds, and after moneys are forwarded direct to banks upon requisition from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the interest on which, aggregating $200,000 per annum, is remitted to and accounted for by this office.

I therefore contend that the settlement of tribal affairs has been and is being expedited as rapidly as possible, considering legislation, the continual litigation, and the interest of the Indians in the disposition of their tribal properties. Moreover, it can not be finally completed until further legislation is enacted. Under the circumstances it was impossible that the tribal affairs "should have been wound up several years ago," as intimated, nor has there been any delay on account of the appointment of incompetent and inefficient employees "appointed largely through the efforts of the officials now in charge of the work at Muskogee," as alleged.

In 1912 the department called a conference before the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to discuss the advisability of creating a separate agency for the Choctaws and Chickasaws or consolidating this office with that of the Union Agency. At that time there were present Mr. Meritt and Mr. Pollock, representing the department; the principal chief; governor and attorneys of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations; Mr. Kelsey, superintendent of the Union Agency; and myself. At such conference the subject was exhaustively discussed, and Mr. Meritt insisted that the superintendent of the Union Agency, by reason of the vast amount of detail, the number of Indians, and the extent of territory—which Commissioner Valentine stated was over 10 times more than any other superintendent in the service—was unable to properly supervise the details of his office, and for that reason strongly advocated a separate agency for the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Mr. Meritt on page 364 of the hearing before the Senate committee makes a personal reference to myself, and states:

"Mr. Wright had no civil-service status until two years ago, when he was covered under by Executive order, and I hardly believe that a point can be made on his position along civil-service lines."

Mr. Meritt is again in error. I was covered into the civil service by Executive order of President Roosevelt in 1908, six years ago. I beg to refer also to my 31 years' continuous service among Indians, as shown by the records of the department, having been reappointed Indian agent among the Sioux in 1893 and promoted in 1896 to the position of inspector by President Cleveland upon the recommendation of Hon. HOKE SMITH, then Secretary of the Interior, now Senator from Georgia. The circumstances in connection with my original appointment in the service in 1883, or the promotions following, or the subsequent civil-service status, have been absolutely without political significance, as can be ascertained.

During all my service with the department I have never attended a political meeting or taken any active part in politics, but have given my entire time to the interest of the service, carrying out instructions of my superiors to the best of my ability.

In conclusion, Mr. Secretary, I desire to state that in this communication I am not seeking to justify conditions which have prevailed at Muskogee, according to Mr. Meritt; I have merely endeavored to submit a statement of facts concerning tribal matters for your consideration in view of those which have been made by Mr. Meritt.

Respectfully,

J. G. WRIGHT, Commissioner.

Mr. President, there are many things connected with this which throw some light upon the situation, and which I desire to present to the Senate, or to those Senators who care to hear. The assistant commissioner says that this provision was incorporated in the House bill by a Representative from Oklahoma and supported by the Oklahoma delegation. He further states that the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes are about to be concluded, and that it will be economy to do away with these two officers and create a new one, that one to be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. He says this is to be done in the name of economy, yet he asks in the same bill that there be $50,000 additional appropriated for administrative purposes, a larger appropriation for administering affairs about to be closed up. Where is the economy of such a proposition? The department has also asked that an appropriation of $85,000 be made by the Government out of its Treasury for the purpose of assisting in administering Indian affairs in the courts of Oklahoma, and it has been allowed. I will refer to this item later.

We are proposing in this bill to distribute among the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or Tribes $100 per capita. There are about 41,000 Oklahoma Indians in these two tribes. This means a distribution from this source alone of over $4,000,000 in that State. We are distributing in Oklahoma among the Cherokees $15 per capita, and there are 41,690 of those Indians. This means $600,000 more money in that State.

This is a very large amount of money for distribution in one State. It seems especially large in a campaign year. It becomes a valuable political asset, or may become such. Even a crop failure in Oklahoma can not materially affect the prosperity of that State. This is a more certain crop than those of the field. It does not cost so much to harvest and it is more readily distributed.

There should be every care thrown around the Indian's property in order to protect him against fraud. What the Government owes him and pays to him should be his to enjoy. The political influences which surround the Oklahoma Indians are not right. As further proof of this statement I now desire to refer to another matter, which, while it is not directly and visibly connected with the provision of the bill under consideration, nevertheless it will throw light on the motive or scheme back of it.

Each of the Five Tribes employ a tribal attorney. He is selected by the chief or by a council of the tribe, who enters into a contract with the attorney to serve for a stated term at an agreed salary the Indians in their tribal relations. This contract must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior before it is of binding force. The Secretary may approve or disapprove it, as he chooses.

Some 10 years ago the Creek Nation entered into a contract with one M. L. Mott whereby he became attorney for that nation. He served his clients with great ability and fidelity. It was through his efforts that the frauds against Creek Indians, and especially against minor children, were unearthed. In the performance of his duty to his clients, the Creek Indians, he won their confidence and support, and by that course incurred the hostility of the Oklahoma politicians. When Mr. Mott's contract with the Creeks expired their chief, Moty Tiger, entered into a new contract with him and wrote a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Sells, asking that the contract be approved and giving his reasons for such request. I will insert that letter in the RECORD. This contract was not approved. A Member of the Oklahoma delegation in the House of Representatives appeared before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and congratulated the Creek Nation upon the fact that Mott's contract had not been approved. He further stated that Mott had delayed certain payments to the Indians and insinuated that Mott might in some way be interested in certain contracts with the Indians. Mr. Mott, having heard of these statements, came before the committee and asked permission to be heard, which was granted to him. Inasmuch as his statement gives a full and complete history of the proposed contract, the reasons for its disapproval, and reveals the situation, as I believe, in its true light, I quote his testimony as given. I quote from pages 654 to 664, inclusive, of the hearings:

PERSONAL STATEMENT BY MR. M. L. MOTT.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the indulgence of the committee to make a personal statement.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Mr. Mott.

Mr. MOTT. I think when the gentleman appears before this committee, either at the instance or upon the courtesy of the committee, and when a statement is made by him that is to the discredit of any citizen of our country, that it will be the pleasure of the committee, not only as individuals but as a body collectively, to give that citizen so discredited an opportunity to be heard.

On last Thursday, during your sittings, a Member of Congress from the other end of the Capitol took occasion to make a personal reference to me. He made the statement that he congratulated the Creek Nation that it had been relieved of my services as its attorney. He congratulated the State of Oklahoma that it had been relieved of my services as attorney for the Creek Tribe of Indians. He further made the statement that the Creek equalization payment had been deferred and delayed because of an interest he believed I had in a contract depending upon a contingency in favor of Butler and Vale, and Kappler and Merillat. I want to give an answer to those things. I want the permission of the committee to do it freely. It is a personal matter, as I say, and with your consent I will proceed to make my statement.

I have been attorney for the Creek Tribe of Indians for a period of 10 years. I left their service satisfied in conscience that I had done my duty, and I left the service with the commendation and indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior. The statement that he congratulated the Creeks upon my elimination is an intimation that it was to the tribe's interest that I serve them no longer. My contract as attorney for the Creek Nation terminated on the 14th of January of this year. Prior to that time, on the 15th of January, 1909, I made a contract with the chief of the Creek Nation to represent the Creek Tribe of Indians for three years, not subject to termination for any cause and to continue after the expiration of that three years until the affairs of the tribe were finally closed.

I am a Republican. Upon the success of the last administration it was heralded by the Oklahoma delegation that Mr. Mott must be eliminated in Oklahoma as attorney for the Creek Tribe of Indians. As the time approached for the termination of my contract and the renewal of another, another was made between the chief of the tribe [and he sits over there] and myself. It was evident from the attitude of the department, assuming what the press of the State contained, that my contract would be approved. It was stated that if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs favored the approval of my contract they would go over his head to the Secretary of the Interior. If the Secretary was favorable to the approval of my contract they would go over his head to the President of the United States. If the President of the United States favored the approval of my contract they would come to Congress and enact legislation denying the President and the Secretary of the Interior authority to pay me. Not until two days after my former contract expired did I appear at the department and make any inquiry as to its approval. The commissioner had been in Oklahoma for a month or some time prior to the expiration of that contract. He had familiarized himself with the conditions in that locality. He had full knowledge of my work. He had full knowledge of my efforts on behalf of those people. I was content to leave the situation with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for whom and toward whom I have the kindest feelings and hold in the highest esteem. I regarded the relationship as attorney for the Creek Tribe as not a political matter. If it had been I would not have entered into a contract with the present Democratic chief for the continuation of my services. It is a contract between a party and an attorney for services rendered the tribe, paid for out of the tribal money. The demand was made that I be eliminated because I was a Republican. I took the position then that if the department regarded the place as a political one I would not ask for the approval of the contract. The demand of the delegation became so persistent for my elimination that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs passed up the whole question to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior sent for me and asked me if I objected to an inquiry and a hearing before him affecting the matter of the approval of my contract. I told him I did not. Thereupon he notified the Oklahoma delegation that he would begin and have a hearing in his office on a certain day touching the question of the approval of Mr. Mott's contract.

Now, I want it understood here that in speaking of the Oklahoma delegation I do not speak of it as a whole. I think Senator OWEN and Mr. MURRAY and Mr. WEAVER simply contented themselves with indorsing some one else and did not enter into the controversy or make any fight on me in any other way than to make an indorsement of another on political grounds alone.

We had six days' hearings before the Secretary of the Interior and every minute of that time the commissioner sat by his side. The Oklahoma delegation presented every view possible against the approval of my contract as attorney for the Creek Tribe of Indians. They gleaned Oklahoma with a fine-toothed comb from the time I first went there, 10 years ago, and when that hearing closed it was admitted that they had offered nothing that reflected upon me as a man; that reflected upon me in my private life or in my official relation to this tribe. They admitted my ability. They conceded my integrity, and the only thing that they offered was that I was a Republican and that the courts of Oklahoma would not cooperate with the department in the protection of the Indians so long as I was retained as tribal attorney.

The hearing, as I say, lasted six days. Every Democratic member of the Oklahoma delegation, which included all except the three gentlemen I have mentioned, was given full opportunity to offer everything on earth they had and could get against me, and when it was over the Secretary of the Interior turned to them in my presence and stated that they had failed to present anything that reflected on me in any way as heretofore enumerated. Then, as a last desperate stand to defeat that contract, they stated that the Oklahoma courts would not cooperate in the policy of the department to correct the abuses in Oklahoma unless the man, meaning me, who had exposed them was eliminated. That declaration staggered that great Secretary of the Interior—that the sworn judicial officers of a State, vouched for by Members of Congress, would not enforce the law to protect babes in swaddling clothes unless the man who exposed the crime as having heretofore existed was eliminated.

I have made, in a modest, dignified, and conservative way, criticisms of conditions in Oklahoma, of things that have been done in the Oklahoma courts, but never in my life have I known of any instance where men made a charge against the judiciary of their own State that carried with it the putrified degradation that that charge did. I felt the force of it myself, but I repelled it in defense of the judiciary that these men condemned, and I do so now. I want it to go down on that record that if the Secretary of the Interior is called on he will make the statement that Mr. Mott's contract was disapproved solely on that one statement, and that alone.

The Secretary of the Interior, when these hearings closed, saw fit to address to the chief of the Creek Tribe, who had entered into a contract with me, a letter with the avowed statement that he could give it whatever publicity he saw fit. Not only did he give the chief a letter, but he also gave me a letter, my dear Senators. I have these letters at home in my office. I had not contemplated being on Capitol Hill this winter. After hearing what had been stated here on last Thursday I called Saturday morning at the Department of the Interior and secured a copy of the Secretary's letter to me. In his letter to the chief of the Creek Nation he says that the estates and interests of the Indians in Oklahoma have been preyed upon by bad lawyers and bad guardians like carrion birds, and the elimination of Mr. Mott is a test to their good faith. In that letter, speaking of me, he says to the chief: "Mr. Mott is an honest man, an able man, and a courageous man."

He likewise addressed a letter to me a few days after the contract with me was disposed of, and with the permission and authority to use it wherever I saw fit, and however I saw fit. He no doubt anticipated that there would be some effort to prejudice me in the matter of failure to approve the contract. He had seen me unsinged dragged through the fire. He knew what was in the fight on me, and at its conclusion he sat down and wrote me the following letter:

WASHINGTON, February 14, 1914.

MY DEAR MR. MOTT: Chief Moty Tiger and myself have agreed upon Judge Allen as your successor as attorney for the Creek Nation. The reason for this change is set forth in my letter to the chief, a copy of which is inclosed.

I shall always take pleasure in contemplating the manner in which you conducted yourself during the inquiry here. That you have been honest under difficulties and fearless at all times in doing your duty seems to be admitted even by those to whom you have been most antipathetic.

I am glad to know that you are going to return to Oklahoma, and I trust that by mingling freely with those people they will come to see you as a man of ideals.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE.

M. L. MOTT, Esq.,
Washington, D. C.

I hand that letter to the stenographer, and I want to accompany it, by permission of the committee, with a letter from the chief asking for the approval of my contract. Without taking up your time, this letter sets out my connection with the tribe as its attorney and my services and the estimate in which they are held by him. I will ask that the letter of the chief be made a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of Mr. Mott that certain documents, which he has described, appear in the record of the committee? There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE CREEK NATION,
Muskogee, Okla., December 30, 1913.

Hon. CATO SELLS,
Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Last fall, in November, I was in your office in Washington, where the other chiefs and their lawyers met, and we had a long talk about what should be done about taking care of the children of Indians in Oklahoma. After this talk was over you took me by the hand and told me, through my interpreter, that if I could not understand your language I could feel your hand and know that your heart was beating strong for my people. I believed then that it was settled what should be done to stop the wrongs that have been done to these children. My interpreter told me that you said things would be made right. I understood that it was the time to make a new contract with my lawyer, so that the work which he and his assistants had been doing could go on and not stop. I made a contract then with Mr. M. L. Mott, who has been the lawyer for my tribe since 1904, and left it with you. Thinking that everything was all settled, I left it with you without a letter, as I thought you would understand it. So much time has passed since then and I have heard nothing about it that I will write a letter to you about it.

You may not have got around to it because you are so busy. The papers say that the Oklahoma men in Congress will not let you approve my contract with Mr. Mott without walking over their dead bodies. I have always thought that when a man hires a lawyer he got one if he could find him who could do the work and who would be true to the man and the people who hired him and paid him. That is what I do when I hire one for myself.

I made a contract with Mr. Mott on January 15, 1913, for one year, and its ends on January 15, 1914. That is only a few days off now, and this new contract I speak about ought to be approved. Ever since early last spring, in planting time, and all through the summer and fall I have heard much talk about getting Mr. Mott out when his time is up and not hiring him again. Lots of people seem to want to get a new man for a lawyer for the tribe. Ever since I have been chief of the Creek people I have heard talk of this kind. But it almost always comes from some one who is also hoping that Congress will make a law to let the Indian sell his land. Such people are white men and part Indians, mostly. It is by these men that the Indians have been made to suffer much in the past, and they do not want the Indians to have anything. They are against him and are glad to see anything done that will make it easier for them to get what the Indian has. Most all the white people in Oklahoma feel that way about it, and many of the mixed bloods do, too. The full bloods and the children can not speak for themselves and do not know what is best for them, and are often misled into thinking that these people—grafters, I call them—are their friends. They get the full blood to say things he does not understand and in this way try to fool the Government at Washington and get more restrictions removed. The Government has always acted as though they thought the full blood could not take care of himself, and has tried to look after him, and this is right. But sometimes these grafters fool the Government, and then it is a sad day for the Indian.

Now, these people who want Mr. Mott to go out, they are the ones who have always been against my people. They have always done everything they could to get our property away from us and to make the Government believe that we are able to take care of ourselves. This they know is not true. Now, if these people are trying to fool you into thinking that it will be good for Mr. Mott to be put out and some one put in that they want, it is not right, and I think you ought to know about it. If one of my full-blood friends gets into trouble and needs a lawyer, I do not let him hire a lawyer that is picked out by the fellow who is fighting him, but tell him to get some man who will be his friend. It is the same with me when I hire a lawyer for my people. They are in trouble, and I do not hire a lawyer that is picked out by the ones who are doing so much to make them more trouble, but get one who has been a friend and who will fight for the Indians.

I know Mr. Mott will do this, because he has always done it for nine years. Here are some of the things he has done:

In 1904, just before Mr. Mott was hired the first time, Congress took the restrictions off of the surplus lands of all freedmen citizens of the tribe. In 60 days after this nearly every one of these people who could sell did not have any land or money either. Mr. Mott did not think this was a good thing and made a big fight against any more laws like that; and in 1906 Congress, after they learned the facts from Mr. Mott, passed a law so that full bloods could not sell their land for 25 years, and this law made a deed to lands of Indians who died, when the heir was a full blood, no good without the approval of the Secretary. That was a good law, and if it had not been passed not a full blood in the tribe would have had any land or home to-day, and it would not have been passed had it not been for Mr. Mott.

Then all the lawyers down here thought this law was unconstitutional, and lots of white people and mixed-blood grafters bought the full-blood lands anyway. Mr. Mott thought it was a good law, and after a long fight in the courts got the United States Supreme Court and every judge on it to say that it was constitutional. This saved many millions of dollars to the full blood and made the grafters give up lots of land that they had got deeds for without paying anything to the Indian. This case was Marchie Tiger, a full-blood Creek Indian.

The Supreme Court of Oklahoma said the law was no good. Maybe they thought it was not good for the State to have so much land owned by Indians, and if it had not been for Mr. Mott it would have been like they wanted it.

In 1908, after statehood, Congress listened to the men sent there by the people of Oklahoma and passed a law removing more restrictions and making a lot of the Indian lands subject to taxation by the State. Taxes are awful high in Oklahoma. It seems to cost a lot of money to run the State, and the white man who wanted statehood so much does not seem to be willing to pay what it costs, but wants the Indian to pay, too, after the Government had made a treaty with my people that they would not have to pay these taxes. Mr. Mott told Congress that it was in the Creek treaties that the Indians' homesteads should not be taxable, and tried to keep them from passing this law, but they passed the law anyway. Then right away he went into the courts and stopped the collection of the tax, and after a long time got the Supreme Court of the United States to say that the Indians' homesteads could not be taxed. The Supreme Court of Oklahoma in this case said the land should be taxed, but, like in the other case, they learned that they were wrong about this. The other of the Five Civilized Tribes followed along after the Creek suit was started, and they all profited by this decision. This has saved and will save for the Indians many millions of dollars.

In 1906 Mr. Mott got the department to look into the way town lots in the Creek Nation had been scheduled, and it was found that much trickery had been done and the tribe had been cheated out of much property of great value. He started many suits against a lot of people, and a great many were high up. A lot of these high-up people were indicted for this fraud and did not get out until they showed the court that what they had done was done more than three years before and they could not be punished for it. But Mr. Mott has already collected from these people and turned over for the tribe in money and property more than $200,000. This paid the tribe pretty good, but it made lots of people mad at Mr. Mott, and they have all the time been wanting to get him out where he could not do these things.

This law that was passed by Congress in 1908 said that the Indian children should have their property managed by the probate courts of Oklahoma. When Congress was passing this law Mr. Mott tried hard to get them not to do this and asked to have the Government do this business, and told them that the children would be robbed in the courts of Oklahoma. But they would not listen to him, and so the law was passed.

Then last year, when everybody thought Mr. Mott was through with these things and would not try to do any more for the Indian, he looked into the way the courts and guardians and lawyers handled the children's estates and made a report on it to Congress. The papers in Oklahoma made fun of this at first, but after a while they didn't say so much about it. Mr. Mott showed that it costs about one-fifth of what the estate is worth for the guardians and court to take care of it for the Indian minor, but it only costs about 3 per cent to take care of white folks' children's property. This one-fifth he showed them it cost didn't take in the big waste by stealing of money, buying land and things for more than what they were worth, lending money with nothing behind it to make it good pay, and many other ways to beat the children. He showed Congress that the children had been robbed just like he said they would be. The men from Oklahoma in Congress abused Mr. Mott and said it wasn't so. Then the governor of Oklahoma looked into it and said it was so. So that is why they didn't make so much fun of it afterwards. These men in Congress who had said so much against Mr. Mott and his report after a while sent word to the governor in a telegram and said it was so and asked him to have some laws passed to fix it so it would put them where they could get some more restrictions off. All this made some of the judges mad, and a good many lawyers and guardians, so they don't like him and would like to see him get out.

The reason they got so mad, too, was because everybody thought when the Democrats got in everything the Indian had would be turned loose and the grafters would then have a happy day. No one else had ever said anything much about it before, and Congress did not know, until he told them about it, what an awful stealing had been going on. And so when they heard about this they thought maybe it would not do to turn the Indian loose, like the people of Oklahoma wanted them to do. These people who do not want Mr. Mott any more are the ones who wanted this done. They thought it would be a good thing for the white people that voted for them. When this was stopped these white folks and grafters and the men they sent to Congress didn't any of them like Mr. Mott at all and they all got together to fight him, and are fighting him now.

Here lately he has been having a lot of lawyers and guardians indicted for stealing from Indian children, and is still working at it. So they want him stopped. They don't know what he will do next for the Indian, but seem to think that he will keep on doing something if he is left in. And it seems to me that that is what the Indian needs. There is much that should be done, and this guardianship work and these indictments have stopped a lot of grafting; and it makes these lawyers and guardians want to see Mr. Mott put where he can't go on with this work.

It ought to go on right away, and I want Mr. Mott to do this work. There has never been a man who has done as much for my people as he has. He is a good lawyer, a good man, and a good fighter, and is not afraid to do his duty. I do not think any other thing ought to have anything to do with his hiring than that, just like any other lawyer is hired. It is talked much that this is a political job. This is, of course, wrong. It is a contract for service to my people, and there can not be any reason why I should hire some one who is not a friend and who is wanted by those who are our enemies. I have been chief of the Creek Tribe since 1907 and have always been a Democrat. I can not see any difference in the way Democrats and Republicans try to rob the Indians. They do it all alike, and they all want to do it just as fast as they can. Mr. Mott is a Republican, but he is true to us and has done well for the Indian. I am a Democrat, and have tried to do what is right for my people. You see, then, we have both tried to do our best, and being of different parties has made no difference. He has fought Republicans just as hard as he has Democrats. If they are trying to rob the Indian, it has made no difference to him or to me whether they were Democrats or Republicans. Those who want him out and who want to put in some man friendly to them do not want him out because he is a Republican, but because they know he will fight them. That is why I want to keep him in. A lot of both Republicans and Democrats want him out.

Some of these white grafters who have made lots of money out of the Indian are using some of this money now to pay the Indians who can be used this way to hold meetings to pass resolutions against Mr. Mott, so that Congress and the Government will think the Indians want him out. It is this way that they try to fool you.

Now, Mr. Commissioner, I will not say much more. You will know now why I write you. But one other thing I want to say. The full-blood Indian is not like other people. The Great Father has so made him that he can not become as the white man. From the beginning he has lived on from father to son in a simple way. The woods and streams and prairies have all been his to roam about upon. He does not know and can never learn that property has anything but a value for the moment of its use. The freedom of outdoor life has been his for so long that he can not change. He is not able to take on the ways of civilized life, and from a great and powerful people the Creek Tribe is fast going the way of its forefathers, with no increase to keep it up. The land has been divided and much of it has been taken from him. Most every man's hand where he lives is against him, and his real friends are few. Against the white man he is helpless. The younger members of the tribe have now their full inheritance. This is being wasted and destroyed. It may so be that I will be the last chief of this race which is soon to be no more. Before me have been many other chiefs, for so long a time that I do not know, who have served their people as best they could and have passed away. To my people in their last stand against the white man I owe the duty of doing what is right. When I do this I know that I will be doing my duty to my people, to myself, and to those chiefs who have gone before me. As the last of these, should this be, should I not do what will be a credit to them, too? I do not want to be known as the chief who showed that he was afraid to stand up for his people, but the man who had proved he was their friend.

For many years the Government has used the money of the people to help the Indian. This has been done and the Indians have not asked to have the right to say who should be hired by the Government and paid out of this money. All these years the Government, by the use of much money in this way, has not been able to stop the grafting by the white man in Oklahoma. From year to year and one by one the safeguards of the Government have been taken away from the Indian and he has been left alone to deal with his enemies. This has been done because the people of Oklahoma and the men they have sent to Congress have wanted it done and have made the other men in Congress believe that the Indians wanted it done. All this is what has made the Indian in such a bad way to-day. We now want to see if we can't do something for ourselves, and I can not understand why those who have always been against us and who have always fought for the things that have done us the most harm should have anything to say about who we shall hire and pay with our own money to protect us. It is not right, and as chief of my people I stand against it and insist that these men have no word in it.

Mr. Mott has had six contracts hiring him as lawyer for my tribe, and not one time has any Republican from Oklahoma or anywhere else been behind him, and so he has never owed anybody any duty but the people who hired him. He has always said it wasn't the business of any politician to say what lawyer we should hire, so long as the tribe was well served; and I have always felt that way about it, too.

When I ask that this probate work go on and that Mr. Mott, who has served us so long, so well, and so faithfully, be given the right to go on with it, I am doing what I know is right and what I know is for the best. I am a soldier, and fought for four years on the side of the South in the Civil War. I have been in many battles. Never have I run, and I will not run now. The war upon the Indians has been going on for years and years. It looks as though the Indian may get the worst of it in the end. There are few to fight for him. As their chief and their leader, I will not leave them now when they need me. You, as the representative of the chief of a great Government and people, are charged with the duty to help in this fight. I appeal to you for the help which you can give. With good will,

Yours, truly,

MOTY TIGER,
Principal Chief of the Creek Nation.

Interpreted into English by G. W. Grayson, official interpreter to the chief.

Mr. MOTT. Now, Mr. Chairman, the other reference to me was to the effect that the payment of the funds in the Treasury to the credit of the Creek Nation had been delayed because he, Mr. DAVENPORT, suspected that Mr. Mott had an interest in a contract that had been favorably recommended by the Creek council, and executed by the chief, looking to their employment in connection with the deficit to make up the $1,040 under the agreement to equalize the Creek allotments.

In 1908 Mr. Merrilat and Mr. Kappler appeared before a committee of the House on behalf of the individual members of the tribe relative to the equalization of the allotments. I appeared before the committee and heard their representations. After the committee meeting adjourned I made my protest there. I said to them that I thought if they were going to represent the tribe in the matter they ought to have some authority either from the tribe or from the department; that I had no objection to their employment; that I favored the Creek council passing resolutions looking to their employment contingent on their securing a judgment against the Government for the deficit. Senator Butler had been employed by the Creeks in connection with the loyal Creeks' claim, in which they had recently, or some time prior to that, been paid $600,000. Gen. Porter, before his death, went to Senator Butler in connection with this matter, and some of the tribe thought it would be well to include Senator Butler in that contract. So I myself am responsible for the resolution presented to the Creek council favoring the employment of Kappler and Merrilat and Butler and Valle, but I hedged it around with such safeguards that they were to get no compensation whatever except in the event they secured a judgment in favor of the tribe against the Government. They were to have no compensation whatever out of any funds that were in the Treasury, and in no sense were they to receive any compensation unless in the event of a judgment against the Government. If I were attorney for the tribe to-day I would favor a similar contract with anybody.

I want to state to you gentlemen that I have no special feeling and no special resentment in the references made to me.

As I say to you now, I am perfectly content with my situation in the matter. I only ask to be let alone. I bear no resentment toward anybody. I simply do not want and do not think that I should permit a statement to stand in the record of the committee that is prejudicial to me, and I want to say that I think you have accorded me an unusual courtesy in permitting me to make this statement. I appreciate that fully. I have no interest in anything that is on the Indian bill. I have not been in the Capitol this winter. I have not seen a Senator or Member of Congress until I spoke to Senator LA FOLLETTE and another Senator and told them I probably would make a statement here to-day. With that exception, I do not anticipate having any future interest in Indian matters.

Mr. Allen, my successor, is entirely agreeable to me, and if there is anything I can do to further the interest of the tribe or to give him any support I would be glad to do it. I hope the opportunity will not present itself again to make it necessary for me to be called on in connection with this matter, or any other matter. I simply do not want to be left in a light before the committee that is calculated to prejudice and wrong me.

Senator TOWNSEND. I want to ask you a question, Mr. Mott. You mentioned a little while ago in your statement that you had been instrumental in uncovering certain frauds affecting the Indians in Oklahoma. Will you tell us what you did in that respect, and what the situation is?

Mr. MOTT. I think the greatest opposition brought against me was because of a report that I filed here last December a year ago with the department, which the Secretary transmitted to Congress, affecting conditions in the probate courts of that State. The report has been printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and I think that contributed to the opposition to me and I think the men affected by that report were the ones who were most persistent in their demands on the delegation that I be eliminated. I have filed a great number of suits down there in connection with the Creek town-site frauds against a number of prominent citizens and individuals, and recovered a quarter of a million dollars in money and property, and that brought me much opposition. I filed the celebrated Manchie Tiger case, which resulted in an annulment of all deeds executed by full-blood heirs under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the benefit of which has been the saving of millions in property to the Five Tribes.

I was also instrumental in litigation that nullified the act of Congress declaring certain lands of the Indians in Oklahoma nontaxable; and then, latterly, in the fall—Judge Allen being on the bench as district judge—called a grand jury and gave me an invitation to appear there and offer what testimony I might have against any parties affecting the maladministration of estates under the jurisdiction of the probate courts. I did so, and it resulted in the indictment of a number of prominent attorneys and business men, and I think that intensified the opposition. The chief's letter sets out in full all matters of detail in the way of my services to the tribe.

Senator TOWNSEND. Did you acquire any interest while you were there with the Indians in any of their property?

Mr. MOTT. None whatever. I never owned a foot of dirt in Oklahoma, a town lot, or anything of that kind during my service as their attorney. I never had any interest in any property there.

Senator TOWNSEND. Your contract was terminated with the Indians, was it, or was not approved, rather—the last one?

Mr. MOTT. I beg pardon?

Senator TOWNSEND. Your last contract was not approved by the department?

Mr. MOTT. No, sir; it was not, but since I have been asked that question I want to say this: I have never known a man in my life for whom I entertained a more profound regard than Secretary Lane.

As to the Secretary, I can understand his position about it. The Oklahoma courts had jurisdiction of unrestricted minors' lands and over the estates of lands of full-blood heirs. Certain members of the Oklahoma delegation stood up in my presence in the face of the Secretary and said that if I were not eliminated they, the courts, would not cooperate with the policy of the commissioner in the correction of those abuses that had theretofore existed. The department was powerless in the matter. In other words, the situation was simply this, from the standpoint of the delegation: We hold within our grasp the property rights and destiny of thousands of unrestricted babes in swaddling clothes and the property rights of restricted full-blood heirs. The price for their liberation was Mott's head. That was the question. That is what they meant when they said to the Secretary, "If you do not do this, we will not cooperate."

It was once said to a howling mob, "I find no fault in Him, but take Him out and crucify Him." The Secretary of the Interior felt that it was my head or a massacre of babes, and he said, "I find no fault in him; take him; I wash my hands," in the verbiage of this letter, and "commend him for his courage, his ability, and his faithfulness."

I think it will be admitted that an agreement was made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with the Oklahoma judges to the effect that those judges would perform the duty which the law imposed upon them in administering justice to the Indians, and especially to the Indian minors. Certain Oklahoma Representatives told the Secretary of the Interior that such agreement would not be carried out by the courts if Mott was retained as attorney for the Creeks. Had Mott been recreant to his duties as attorney for the Indians? The records do not so disclose. On the contrary, the only inference that can be drawn from the opposition to him was that he stood between the Indians and their despoilers. That the department still has some doubts about the ability of the Indians to get justice if left to the State control is evidenced by the provision of the bill which follows the one under discussion. It is this:

For salaries and expenses of such attorneys and other employees as the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, deem necessary in connection with probate matters affecting individual allottees in the Five Civilized Tribes, $85,000.

I am informed that it is the intention of the department to hire probate attorneys for each of these separate tribes, who will handle matters that are properly under the jurisdiction of the courts of Oklahoma. Why should the Federal Government be compelled to hire and pay attorneys for looking after the interests of Indian children in Oklahoma courts more than they should to protect the interests of white children in that State? The very insertion of that item indicates—and I believe it is true—that the department believes that it is absolutely necessary to make an appropriation for this purpose in order to secure the rights of Indian minors.

Mr. President, the influences which secured the separation of Mr. Mott from Creek service is the same which has removed Mr. Wright and Mr. Kelsey. These gentlemen have been faithful, competent, and honest representatives of the Indians and of the Government. They have blocked, or at least impeded, the course of the spoilsman. The Congress has had no opportunity to speak on the Mott matter; but this provision is our business, and I had hoped the Senate might prevent the mistake now about to be made.

Mr. President, it has been very difficult for me to discuss this matter impassionately and without bitterness. If all the facts connected with Indian affairs could be disclosed, the already blotted record would be more offensive. Some day the truth may be fully disclosed. As for myself, I shall, as far as possible, do my duty to the Indian. I will not knowingly cast unjust reflections upon any man in public or private life; neither will I wink at or cover up any wrong known to me, whoever the offender may be. I realize very fully, I think, how readily false and malicious rumors float in the Indian atmosphere, and I shall not knowingly assist in embarking them; but the way to reward virtue is to punish wrong. This provision ought to be killed.

Mr. President, I realize that I should not occupy more time; but I have made this statement because I believe it was due to the Senate; certainly it was due to me that I should make it before we came to a vote. I ask that the words I have indicated be stricken from the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator surrenders the floor, will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Gladly.

Mr. NORRIS. I have listened to the latter part of the Senator's remarks with very great interest; and I should like to know, in reference to this board or these employees about whom the Senator has been talking, whether there is a provision in the bill changing conditions so that they will lose their places, and the places be given as a reward for political services?

Mr. TOWNSEND. There is no proposition in this amendment of which I have been speaking except to remove the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, Mr. Wright, and the superintendent of the Union Agency, Mr. Kelsey, and that those positions shall be consolidated into one, to be filled by some one to be nominated by the President, and confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator desire to convey the idea that the object of such legislation is to legislate these desirable men out of office?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I believe it is.

Mr. NORRIS. What is the proposition in the bill that involves that question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The proviso, beginning in line 21, page 65, which I have moved to strike out.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume the object of the provision is claimed, at least, to be one of economy, is it not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have so stated. That is what the assistant commissioner claims, and I have attempted to show what the facts are in reference to that matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the change involve a discharge of the forty-odd employees or just the two principal ones?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just the two principal ones who have charge of the work.

Mr. NORRIS. I am much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the item which the Senator from Michigan proposes to strike out was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House and also by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and those committees refused to make the changes which the Senator now advocates, and the reason is very simple. Three of these tribes are about to have their affairs wound up. In the case of the Cherokees, the Creeks, and the Seminoles all that remains to be done is simply to distribute a balance which they have now per capita, so that the affairs of those tribes are practically concluded. There is no longer the need which heretofore existed for these two different offices, as one man can discharge the duties of the service there just as well as is necessary for the protection of the public business. The Senator himself states that this reorganization will make a difference of $25,000 a year, and I think $25,000 is worth saving to the Treasury.

The charge which the Senator makes that it will necessarily retire one of these two men is, of course, true, because if only one man is going to do the work one of the men will have to go out. Whether one of those who is now in office should be given the function which is to be put upon one would be determined by the attitude of the administrative branch of the Government; but I do not think that the Senator is justified in making it appear that this is merely a political matter with a view of giving somebody an office. The Indian Bureau estimates that there will be $25,000 saved.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate to go into a long answer defending Oklahoma and its administration. It was true that there was found a judge in one of the counties who was corrupt, but he was put out of office by the people of Oklahoma. Doubtless there was some corruption, more or less, in some of the other offices; but the judges have all come together and adopted a plan of mutual cooperation and a system of rules by which to prevent any injustice in the administration of the minors' estates. That has been done under the advice and counsel of the Indian Bureau. Oklahoma has done everything in its power to establish good order and justice toward these probate estates. The judges, as I have said, have all come together, and in common counsel with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have agreed upon rules and regulations by which to prevent the attorneys taking any advantage in any way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator a question there? I referred to that fact, although I did not perhaps elaborate it. Mr. Sells, the commissioner, went out to Oklahoma to meet the judges, to see if they would cooperate with the department; and he had a working scheme with the courts whereby they would give proper care to the Indian cases. Does the Senator deny that it was charged before Mr. Lane by members of the Oklahoma delegation that that arrangement could not be carried out and would not be carried out if Mr. Mott was retained as attorney for the Creek Nation?

Mr. OWEN. I understand that there was a controversy over Mr. Mott. I understand that Mr. Mott was regarded with a good deal of hostility by some of the members of the Oklahoma delegation. I understand that; and I understand that they used every argument they could to defeat him. That, however, does not affect the central question that these courts did come together with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and did what they could to bring about a good condition of administration, and that is all I was presenting. I am not going into Mr. Mott, nor am I going to discuss Mr. Mott's affairs. I care nothing about that. The only thing is that I do not want the Senator to leave the United States Senate under the impression that the probate courts of Oklahoma are worse than the probate courts of Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What does the Senator think of the proposition, if it be true, that the courts of Oklahoma have stated that unless a certain man is deposed they will not perform the duties that they have agreed with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to perform and that under the law they were obligated to perform?

Mr. OWEN. I have no information upon the point suggested by the Senator, and I do not believe it is true.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to say, further, that when Mr. Mott made that statement before the committee the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was sitting at the table in the committee room. Mr. Mott said that the Oklahoma delegation stated the same thing to Secretary Lane in the presence of the commissioner.

Mr. OWEN. By the courts?

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; by the delegation from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator said the courts said that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I say, suppose the delegates from Oklahoma told the truth about it, and the judges did say it? It was not denied that they did say it. The delegates stated it as a fact.

Mr. OWEN. I do not know what the testimony is to which the Senator refers; but I do know that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs went down, and these judges met him and agreed upon a plan to protect the interests of minors out there; and I believe they will do it just as well as the probate courts of any of the other States, including the State of Michigan.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to his colleague?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I think I ought to say here that it is my understanding that Secretary Lane wired the probate attorneys of the Creek Nation asking whether they would discharge their duties in the event that Mr. Mott was retained in office, and they answered back that they would, but that they thought the appointment of some one else would contribute to the improvement of the service. I understand that telegram was in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, and I think that is the attitude taken by the delegation so far as I know. I was not here when the hearings were had before the Secretary, but I think that is the attitude they took.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire from someone who knows—the Senator from Michigan, who has spoken on the subject, or the Senator from Oklahoma, or any other Senator—why it is that there seems to be this bitter opposition to Mr. Mott. What is the matter with Mr. Mott, if anything? What has he done? Has he a duty to perform that is unpleasant or has he failed to do his duty?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the question of Mr. Mott's feuds in Oklahoma does not affect the question as to whether or not these two offices shall be merged into one, to be occupied by some one approved by the Senate of the United States. He never held either one of these offices. He was a probate attorney or, rather, an attorney for the Creek Nation, and in that way took an active interest in some of the probate proceedings.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that it seems to me that this question of Mr. Mott is just as much involved in this amendment as this talk about the agreement of the courts to do or not to do a certain thing or to do something in a certain way.

Mr. OWEN. I agree to that. That is irrelevant. I spoke of that simply because the Senator spoke for an hour and a half, and in that speech he was commenting upon the probate courts of Oklahoma in such a way as to leave a bad impression with regard to those courts, and I felt it my duty to my State to make a comment upon it. That was all. I did it as mildly as I could.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no information whatever with regard to this controversy; but if there is such a condition somewhere that the performance by a judge of his duty is dependent upon some one else being appointed to office, either there is something wrong with the other party or with the judge, one or the other. It may be with Mr. Mott; I do not know. It may be with the court.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the appointment or nonappointment of either one or two men in the positions now occupied by Mr. Kelsey and Mr. Wright has nothing to do with Mr. Mott.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that it has not any direct connection with these two officials; but it does go to the administration of the laws, it seems to me, in a general way, and that is what we are dealing with to a great extent in this bill.

Mr. OWEN. I hope the Senate will sustain the committee and sustain the department in this matter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. In connection with what the Senator from Nebraska has said, if I have correctly stated the facts that have been disclosed in the record, I think there is a vital relation between the failure to confirm Mr. Mott's contract and the particular proposition which I have asked to strike from the bill. It all goes to the proper administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes.

If it is true that there was a concerted effort to remove Mr. Mott because he was enforcing the law, because he was bringing big and little criminals to justice; if it is true that the Creek Indians wanted Mr. Mott for their attorney because they knew he would look out for their interests and care for their orphan children; if it is true that the same influences which inserted this provision in the bill instigated the movement to get rid of Mr. Mott and to put in a man who, though he is nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, we all know is to be a political appointee; if it is true that there is enough influence out in Oklahoma to swerve the courts and induce them to suggest that a man of proven integrity and ability be set aside because he is too active in protecting the rights of his clients, the Indians, and they succeed, and it is known that the same influence is responsible for the provision in this bill which I am asking to have stricken out; if it is clear, as I think it is, that the motive for removing Mott is the same as the motive for removing the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes, viz, the despoiling the Indian of his property, the relevance of the Mott matter to this amendment is clear and close.

The political influences which have been brought from outside to control the action of the Government's representatives in the administration of Indian affairs have been the curse of the Indian. I say that all of this, if I have read the testimony correctly, and if I heard the witnesses as they intended to be heard, is a part of the same scheme.

The Senator has stated that we are about to close up the affairs of three of these tribes. They are not yet closed up. When they are closed up this vast fund of money will be scattered out in driblets to those one hundred and one thousand Indians. I think it is of the utmost importance that that money shall be distributed properly. If what Moty Tiger says, and if what Mr. Meritt says, is true, namely, that the proposition to close up the affairs has always been delayed by the Oklahoma delegation, it is a suggestion to me that they do not want to kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

I do not object to this money going to the Indians if it belongs to them; not at all. But I want to know that it goes to the Indians. It will not reach them if it filters through political hands. The man whom it is proposed to supplant with a politician is an officer of tried and acknowledged courage, character, and ability. He should not be removed to give place to some political worker.

Mr. OWEN. Nobody has ever questioned the legality of the per capita payments made by these gentlemen. They are made on checks, and made directly, and they have the vouchers for them. No matter who makes the per capita payment, of course it was made under the safeguards of the law. The amount due to the Cherokees was $15 apiece. It is true that there were a large number of them, but I want to remind the Senate that they have been waiting now since 1902. They have been waiting 12 years. We sent the Dawes Commission down there in 1893. It has been 21 years since we sent the Dawes Commission down there to wind up the affairs of these tribes. Does it seem like undue haste on the part of the representatives of Oklahoma to ask for a conclusion of these matters?

Men do not live always. Thousands of these Indians have died without getting their proportionate part; but that has nothing to do with this case. The Senator simply moves to strike out a provision by which the House of Representatives proposed to drop one of these officials and have one man instead of two, at a saving of $25,000. The reasons which were given in the evidence before the committees have justified the committee in retaining it as it is, and I hope the Senate will stand by the committee and by the department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, on page 58, after line 8, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, and I invite the attention of the chairman of the committee to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 58, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

> The Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion to grant a further extension or extensions of time on the payments described in the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide and extend the deferred payments of settlers in the Kiowa-Comanche and Apache ceded lands in Oklahoma," approved April 27, 1912: Provided, That accrued and unpaid interest shall be treated as principal: Provided further, That no payment shall be deferred beyond the time prescribed in the act herein cited, and no forfeiture of entry shall be declared except for fraud, and all entries heretofore canceled except for fraud may be reinstated without prejudice.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator please explain this amendment?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Some five or six years ago about four or five hundred thousand acres of land were sold in Oklahoma, which was then a Territory, comprising what was known as the Big Pasture, the Wood Reserve, and Pasture No. 3. The lands were appraised by the Government. The appraisement was made when crops were most promising in the surrounding country. The appraisements were high and the lands were sold through competitive bidding. They brought high and remunerative prices, in many instances more than the real value of the land.

The lands have been improved. We have had a series of unfortunate years in Oklahoma—some five dry years. Under the act of April 27, 1912, the Secretary was authorized to divide each of the outstanding payments into two payments. That carried some of the payments forward to 1920. Some of them were carried forward only one or two years.

In view of the short crops in that country, some of these farmers have been unable to make their payments. A great many have made final payments and final proof. Under the act of April 27, 1912, the Secretary must cancel these entries if the payments are not made. He is vested with no discretion whatever. The law is arbitrary and mandatory. Some of these entries have been canceled. Some of the best farmers in my State—and some of them are in my county—have had their entries canceled. Some of them have made as much as $600 or $800 of the payments required, and have constructed improvements worth from $600 to $1,000. Their entries are being canceled.

There is no reason why this amendment should not be adopted. It gives the Secretary discretion to extend the other payments, and allows the accumulated interest to be treated as principal so that it will also bear interest, and it authorizes him to reinstate the canceled entries. It is a meritorious measure that surely ought to be adopted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if this matter was brought before the committee?

Mr. GORE. It was not. I will say to the Senator that two farmers came up here since the bill came in from the committee. The farmers took up a collection, and sent two of their number up here, and they called on me about a week or 10 days ago and presented the matter, and it was so meritorious that I felt that I ought to present it to the Senate. Of course I realize that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GORE. I will.

Mr. ASHURST. The same situation obtains with respect to reservations that have been opened in the State of Arizona. I think the legislation is meritorious and proper, if the Senator will strike out lines 2 and 3, on page 2. I do not believe the legislation should go so far as to reinstate entries that have been canceled. I see no objection to granting extensions on those that are now pending.

Mr. GORE. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that, for the reason that if he does some of these farmers who have made the most payments will be hurt the worst. Some of these farmers have already paid from six to eight hundred dollars, and have made improvements valued at from five hundred to a thousand dollars. Their entries have been canceled, really through no fault of their own, but as a result of the unfortunate season. I believe the Secretary at least ought to have the discretion to reinstate these entrymen where there has been no fraud, where strict good faith has prevailed.

I hope the Senator will allow that part of the amendment to remain in, and he can consider it further in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from Utah; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. It is a very dangerous thing to legislate, without more information than we have, in the way of reinstating a man who has failed to pay for the lands purchased by him from the Government. I wish to ask the Senator if there are any adverse claimants to any of these lands?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; there are none at all. I will explain to the Senator that these were not entered as public lands. The lands really belonged to the Indians. The Government conducted the sale. There have been no contests whatever. There could not be under the act authorizing the sale.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that they were Indian lands, and I understood that they were sold as such.

Mr. GORE. Yes. There have been no adverse claims.

Mr. SMOOT. But what I intended to ask the Senator was, Have any of these lands been resold by the Government?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; they have not. Of course that would give rise to a different situation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GORE. I yield; but I shou'd like to say, first, that while I feel the force of the observation of the Senator from Utah, this matter was called to my attention only about a week or 10 days ago, I should say. The date of the amendment will indicate the exact time. It was at the urgent solicitation of two actual farmers, who came to Washington in order to request what I believe to be just consideration at the hands of the Government, that I introduced the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have noticed in considering the bill that has been before us heretofore there have been many things put into the bills which had not been properly considered. I recall two or three such instances that have a similar bearing upon the amendment proposed now. I do not want to do any injustice to anyone; I am perfectly willing to do what I can; but I feel it incumbent upon me, inasmuch as this is legislation brought up for the first time about which I have had some doubts at least in my own mind to make a point of order.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that if there is any further question which occurs to the Senator I should be glad to present it. This matter ought to have been introduced in regular form, and I have introduced a bill covering the same ground as the amendment, but at this late day in the session I feel that I would not be able to secure the enactment of the bill as an organic law. I may say, if the Secretary of the Interior had been given any discretion as to the cancellation of these entries, I should not insist upon the adoption of this amendment; but the Senator will realize that under the act of 1912 the Secretary has absolutely no discretion. These farmers who have gone upon these lands and converted the raw prairie into a civilized community have done as much for the General Government as the General Government can do for them, and in view of the extremely harsh law stripping the Secretary of all discretion I hope the Senator will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Michigan. It is my desire and my disposition to protect these Indians in their just rights, but it seems to me that if the entrymen obtained what is sought by this amendment, the Government or the Indians can lose nothing; the debt will have to be paid that was contracted to be paid for these lands. I understand that that which has accrued and that which is to accrue will have to be paid before title will be divested from the Government. Therefore the Indian and the Government can not be injured and the entryman who has been subjected to unfortunate conditions in that territory might be saved a great hardship that would be inflicted upon him if the amendment does not prevail.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I would have no objection to that if I were quite clear that we had all the facts before us and that the Senator from Oklahoma had all the facts.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will yield in just a moment. I recall that just a few years ago we had a proposition to take care of some payments to make extensions. A very plausible case was made out on the floor of the Senate, but there were some conditions there which afterwards appealed to me, as I think they did to the majority, as being not entitled to the consideration of the Senate. It depends much upon the conditions of the sale. For instance, town lots were supposed to be sold at a cash price, and afterwards it was understood that bids were made by some with the understanding that they were to have time on the payment, and thus, perhaps, the bidding was not what it ought to have been. Now, I do not know anything about these cases.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to make this suggestion to the Senator: If he will consent that the amendment may go in, I will request the chairman of the committee of conference to abide by the judgment of the Senator from Michigan after he has had an opportunity to investigate it. It is such a strong case, and there are so many reasons why the amendment should be made, I hope the Senator will take that course.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Has the Senator even asked the department about this matter?

Mr. GORE. I have not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan make the point of order?

Mr. WHITE. I wish to make a further suggestion to the Senator from Michigan, if he will yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. WHITE. Most of the public domain has either been given away or has been sold at a nominal price. The persons who will be affected by this amendment, I understand, bought their lands at a competitive sale, where the land was sold to the highest bidder, and in that way the lands must have brought a reasonably fair price.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator assumes something, and I am going to take for granted that what he says is true; but I, as a member of the committee, feel as though when a matter of this character comes up we ought to know something about it. I do not like this way of legislating on the floor of the Senate, bringing in measures here to do things we do not understand and which may come up to plague us hereafter.

Inasmuch as the two Senators seem to understand it, or think they do at least, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GORE. I wish to express profound consideration for the action of the Senator from Michigan. I hope he will investigate it, and if he has the slightest objection after an investigation, that he will convey that to the chairman of the conference committee.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I think, so as to make it all right, I will make a point on this legislation. I do not know how far it reaches. I have not that amount of confidence in it which the Senator from Oklahoma has. Perhaps it is for the reason that I am ignorant of it; but it is a species of legislation which is very dangerous. There are lots of old claims down there of different kinds which have been questioned and upon which loans have been made, and the deferred payments have never been made. Whether this applies to them or not, I do not know.

It seems to me that this would reach them and confirm a species of doing business which is not what it ought to be.

Mr. GORE. I should like to say to the Senator that the lands embraced in this amendment were purchased from the Indians by the Government of the United States, but out of generosity the Government afterwards consented to sell these lands and give the Indians the proceeds. They have been sold in many instances at very high prices—at $15, $20, and $25 an acre. The sales were conducted at public bidding and the lands were awarded to the highest bidder. While they were not public lands, the purchasers had to conform to the homestead requirements, which, as the Senator knows, are more or less severe in a new country. They have been making improvements, they have been perfecting the title, but, unfortunately, their crops have not enabled them to meet the payments as they accrue. A great many of the payments have already been extended. This is to extend others, in the discretion of the Secretary. The Senator from Oregon has that safeguard and that discretion, at least.

Mr. LANE. How many cases are there to which it applies?

Mr. GORE. I could not state. Some of them have paid out and have made final proof.

Mr. LANE. That is what I thought.

Mr. GORE. Others have not.

Mr. LANE. In my view, this is loose legislation.

Mr. GORE. I know how intensely the Senator from Oregon is devoted to the interests of the Indians, and I am perfectly willing he should make an investigation of this matter.

Mr. LANE. I suggest to the Senator to let us put it out now on a point of order, and let him bring in a bill and have the committee investigate it. The committee can report upon it and it can be passed perhaps in 10 days.

Mr. GORE. I will say to the Senator that I am leaving this afternoon and I will not be back perhaps during the session, and I am afraid to follow that course. The Senator is undoubtedly correct in his contention that this ought to pass as an independent bill, but I do not believe that that could be done at this late stage of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon make a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. LANE. I will ask the Senator one question: Is he not willing to trust this legislation in our hands during his absence?

Mr. GORE. I am entirely willing to trust the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GORE. On page 68, line 20, before the word "Seminole"—one amendment has already been adopted in that line—I move to strike out "and" and after the word "Seminole" to insert the word "Osage."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma proposes an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 20, strike out the first word in the line, "and," and after the word "Seminole" insert the words "and Osage."

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the senior Senator from Oklahoma, who has offered the amendment——

Mr. GORE. That appropriation in this place is for the benefit of certain schools in the Five Civilized Tribes. On account of the exemption of certain lands from taxation the same condition with respect to taxing lands exists in this Osage country, and it seems to me the benefits of the act ought to apply to that country as well as to the others.

I have here a letter from the Superintendent of Education giving the Osage Nation statistics, stating that there are 380,000 acres of homestead allotments in Osage County. These are exempt by law and by patent from taxation. There are 1,335,000 acres of surface allotments. The State contends that those lands are subject to taxation. The Indians contend that they are not subject to taxation. That question has been involved in the courts, I think, ever since statehood, or at least for some years. There are only 4,000 acres of land in Osage County subject to taxation. It simply gives the same benefit. I have a letter here from the assistant commissioner setting forth the facts. There is no reason why the provision of the act should not be extended for the benefit of the Osages.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, referring to the committee amendment, beginning on line 3, page 67, to which a point of order was made and sustained, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be resubmitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. The request is that the amendment be resubmitted to the Senate. The point of order was sustained on the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent now that it be resubmitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair does not think the Chair has power to submit an amendment which has been excluded on a point of order.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, after line 2, insert the following:

That full legal and equitable jurisdiction, without regard to lapse of time, is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and adjudicate, as justice and equity shall require, all claims against the Cherokee Nation by the estate of John W. West, deceased, or by the heirs or any heir of said John W. West, and particularly the claim of the said estate and the heirs thereof against the said Cherokee Nation for the deprivation of the said John W. West, deceased, his estate and his heirs, of the beneficial use of certain property, wherein it is alleged that the said John W. West was interested as owner; and any judgment rendered under this act against said nation shall be paid to the administrator of the estate of John W. West, deceased, out of any funds standing to the credit of said nation, and the amount necessary to pay any such judgment is hereby appropriated out of any money of the Cherokee Nation under control of, or held in trust by, the United States. Suit shall be begun within 30 days after the approval of this act by petition filed by the administrator of the estate and service thereof shall be made on the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, who shall appear by attorney within 20 days after service of said suit is made upon him and defend said suit on behalf of the nation; the record heretofore made in the proceedings relating to the award made in favor of said heirs under said claim May 25, 1883, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, together with any material evidence on file with the Department of the Interior pertaining to said claim, shall be considered by the court, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to transmit to said court all such records in his department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota whether this is the same amendment that was excluded upon a point of order?

Mr. STERLING. I was just about to state before the inquiry made by the Presiding Officer that it is substantially the same amendment then offered. I have made some alterations in the amendment, but in substance the amendment is the same. The purpose is to refer the question to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from South Dakota before he takes his seat when these claims accrued—how many years ago?

Mr. STERLING. There was an award made on this claim in 1883, in pursuance of a treaty made with the Cherokee Nation, between the Cherokee Nation and the United States. That award has been sustained by two successive decisions of Secretaries of the Interior. Secretary Teller and Secretary Lamar both have sustained it. A bill for a direct appropriation has passed the Senate five times appropriating $5,000. It has been favorably reported on by House committees, I think, four times, and it appeals to me as a most just and meritorious claim.

I will say to the Senator from Colorado, as I said the other day, there ought to be a direct appropriation for the payment of this money, and a bill was introduced for a direct appropriation, but the Committee on Indian Affairs concluded that it should be submitted to the Court of Claims and reported an amendment to that effect.

Mr. THOMAS. If the claim has been allowed and award made upon it and it has been recognized by two Secretaries of the Interior, what is there for the Court of Claims to pass upon and adjudicate?

Mr. STERLING. I hardly know. I will say to the Senator I think there is some little contention as to the identity of the John W. West whose heirs make this claim with the John W. West whose property was taken away back in 1843, when the claim originated.

Mr. THOMAS. The identity of the heir, then, is the only question that has to be reported on.

Mr. STERLING. That is the only question. I do not think there can be any question about that, I will say to the Senator; but surely there should be no objection to a submission of the whole matter to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, the Chair will submit the amendment to the Senate.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I feel compelled to raise a point of order that this amendment violates paragraph 4 of Rule XVI. It is a private claim on an appropriation bill. If there is any merit in it, it can as well be presented to the Committee on Claims, and by a resolution it can go from there to the Court of Claims without putting it in an appropriation bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I trust the Senator from Florida will withhold his point of order. I would not have introduced the original bill nor now offered this amendment but for the fact that after thorough investigation I deemed it a most meritorious claim. There are other amendments to this same bill subject to the point of order that they are general legislation, but because they are meritorious no objections have been made to them, or if made have been withdrawn. I trust that the Senator will not insist upon his objection now to this amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. That is a pretty strong appeal, but I stand by my objection nevertheless.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida makes the point of order, and the Chair, following the precedent set by the regular occupant of the chair, sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES. After the amendment last adopted on page 90, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GORE. I desire to give notice, if necessary, that the amendment put out on a point of order I will submit in the Senate, and I give notice that I desire to contest the amendment adopted the other day offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma makes an announcement which the Senate will take notice of. The Secretary will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The SECRETARY. On page 90, in the Washington items, line 18, after the amendment agreed to at that point, insert:

That the conveyance from John Teoul and his wife, Susan, to John Robinson of the west half of the southwest quarter of section 26, township 18 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian, Washington, made and executed on the 23d day of May, 1903, be, and the same hereby is, approved, ratified, and confirmed, and as an evidence of such conveyance the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple for the said described lands to the widow and heirs of John Robinson, deceased, the purchaser of said lands.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I will say: I know this amendment is subject to a point of order, but this matter has been referred to the committee and the committee has reported it favorably, and the department also was called upon for a report, and the department recommends it. So I hope that no point of order will be made under those circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. In connection with the amendment I ask that the report of the committee be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the matter being inserted in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 596, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

HANNAH ROBINSON.

Mr. LEWIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 5674:

Your committee, having under investigation S. 5674, "A bill confirming the title of Hannah Robinson to certain lands, and authorizing and directing the issuance of patent therefor," reports the said bill favorably, with the following amendments: In line 12 of the bill strike out the words "Hannah Robinson" and insert after the word "widow," in said line 12, the words "and heirs," so that the proposed measure shall read as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the conveyance from John Teopil and his wife, Susan, to John Robinson of the west half of the southwest quarter of section 26, township 18 north, range 18 east of the Willamette meridian, Washington, made and executed on the 23d day of May, 1903, be, and the same hereby is, approved, ratified, and confirmed, and as an evidence of such conveyance the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple for the said described lands to the widow and heirs of John Robinson, deceased, the purchaser of said lands."

The Secretary of the Interior, after a thorough investigation of the case, makes a report to the effect that the legislation proposed is necessary and indispensable to perfection of title in the present rightful owners thereof, and as error arose in the title many years ago the proposed act (S. 5674) is necessary to cure defect in title.

The report of the Interior Department is made a part of this report, and is as follows:

JUNE 9, 1914.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to state that the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs has invited my attention to your letter dated May 27, 1914, transmitting for special report thereon S. 5674 and an amendment intended to be proposed to H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1915.

The language of the bill and of the amendment are substantially the same, and have for their purpose the same object, which is that a conveyance made by an Indian, John Teopil, and his wife Susan, to one John Robinson, dated May 23, 1903, covering the west half of the southwest quarter of section 26, township 18 north, range 18 east, of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Washington, be approved, ratified, and confirmed; and as an evidence of such conveyance, that the Secretary of the Interior cause to be issued to Hannah Robinson, widow of John Robinson, deceased, a patent in fee for said land.

The facts in this case are that John Teopil, an Indian, on May 10, 1881, made homestead entry for certain lands in the State of Washington under the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat. L., 402–420), and a patent was issued to him on January 25, 1892, under the act of January 18, 1861 (21 Stat. L., 315). The latter act applies only to the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin, and the issuance of a patent under this act to John Teopil for the homestead in Washington taken up by him was a mistake.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals, eighth district, in the case of Louis Hemmer et al. v. United States of America, held, April 25, 1913, in effect that land taken up under the act of 1875, supra, was subject to the provisions of that act, i e., the land was nonalienable for a period of five years from the date of patent. This period of limitation in the case of John Teopil expired in 1897, a patent having issued under date of January 25, 1892. It is the contention of the Government, however, that an entry made under the act of 1875, for which a patent had not issued at the time of the act of July 4, 1884 (23 Stat. L., 76–96), was subject to the provisions of the latter act, in that a 25-year restricted trust patent should be issued, and an appeal has been taken in the case.

The act of 1875 provides for but one patent, which is a fee with restraint on alienation for a period of five years, whereas the act of 1884 cited provides for the issuance of two patents, a trust and a fee.

In view of the above there is doubt as to the validity of the conveyance made by John Teopil to John Robinson, in 1903, and for this reason the heirs of the purchaser, who is now deceased, have asked for the special legislation herein reported on.

I have caused an investigation to be made of this case, and have learned that the Indian actually received the consideration for the land he conveyed to Mr. Robinson, and that it was adequate at the time of sale. I am of opinion that the special legislation is necessary, and I have no objection, therefore, to the enactment of S. 5674, or to the insertion of the amendment in the Indian appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1915, provided, however, that the bill be so worded as to provide that the patent in fee be issued to the widow and heirs of John Robinson, deceased. It is respectfully recommended, therefore, that the words "Hannah Robinson," in line 12 of S. 5674, be eliminated and he words "and heirs" be inserted in the same line after the word "widow." If consideration is given to the proposed amendment to H. R. 12579, the same changes should be made in line 10 of the proposed amendment.

If the suggested changes are adopted, the department would be glad to see the legislation given favorable consideration at an early date.

For such use of it as you may desire to make, I am inclosing a copy of this report.

Cordially, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to offer the following amendment:

That to carry into effect the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, and the supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, providing for a minimum allotment to each Creek citizen whose name has been placed on the roll by the Government of the United States under authority of said agreements and laws, of the standard value of $1,040; and in order that the claim of said citizens of the Creek Nation who have received allotments in land and money of a less value than the standard allotment of 160 acres of the standard value of $1,040 might be determined and finally adjudicated, jurisdiction is hereby conferred, upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear, determine, and render final judgment against the United States for such amount, if any, as may be found due by the United States, and as may be necessary to equalize all of Creek allotments up to the treaty standard value of allotments of $1,040. Said suit shall be begun by petitions filed within six months after the approval of this act, be verified, and prosecuted by the national attorney for the Creek Nation.

There was an item of a similar character, but involving a number of other things, reported by the committee, and it went out on a point of order. I move this amendment now, omitting a number of names that were involved in it and abbreviating it very much, believing that it may meet the approval of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the amendment which the Senator offers?

Mr. OWEN. It is on page 73.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma will send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. BRYAN. Let me inquire of the Senator from Oklahoma if it is not the purpose of the amendment to establish a private claim?

Mr. OWEN. No; I should not say it was to establish a private claim. It is to give an opportunity to the so-called allottees of the Creek Nation to go into the Court of Claims upon certificates which they have from the Dawes Commission.

Mr. BRYAN. Why does not the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Oklahoma send the proposed amendment to the Secretary's desk, so that the Secretary may report the amendment?

Mr. BRYAN. I am not jealous, as is the chairman of the Committee on Claims, of private claims, but——

Mr. OWEN. This is an Indian matter.

Mr. BRYAN. Such matters ought to go to the committee established by Congress to investigate claims.

Mr. OWEN. If it were really a private claim, I should agree with the Senator, but it is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, after line 10, insert:

That to carry into effect the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved

March 1, 1901, and the supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, providing for a minimum allotment to each Creek citizen whose name has been placed on the roll by the Government of the United States under authority of said agreements and laws, of the standard value of $1,040; and in order that the claim of said citizens of the Creek Nation who have received allotments in land and money of a less value than the standard allotment of 160 acres of the standard value of $1,040 might be determined and finally adjudicated, jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear, determine, and render final judgment against the United States for such amount, if any, as may be found due by the United States, and as may be necessary to equalize all of Creek allotments up to the treaty standard value of allotments of $1,040. Said suits shall be begun by petitions filed within six months after the approval of this act and prosecuted by the national attorney for the Creek Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator from Oklahoma whether this is substantially the same amendment that was disposed of this morning on a point of order?

Mr. OWEN. No; it strikes out a group in regard to the boundary line of the Creek Nation, and it also strikes out the matter relating to attorneys' fees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LANE. I wish to say, with all due deference to the Senator from Oklahoma, that this is new matter and——

Mr. OWEN. I will withdraw the amendment if it is objectionable to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma withdraws the amendment.

Mr. OWEN. There is a suit pending in the Court of Claims affecting the rights of the Poncas of Oklahoma. It is a suit affecting the Omaha Tribe in Nebraska, and the Poncas of Oklahoma desire the right to intervene in the suit, which the Government authorized by law. I have here a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs approving it. Unless there is given a right at this time it will be impossible for them to appear at all before the court has disposed of the matter. I send the amendment to the desk, with the suggestions of amendment proposed by the Indian Office interlined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, and I should like to have the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] present, as it is a matter, I am informed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be presented to the Senate after the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma has been disposed of. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thought the bill was about to be reported to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Insert in the Oklahoma items the following:

That the Ponca Tribe of Indians, residing in Oklahoma and Nebraska, is hereby authorized and empowered to appear in and be made parties to any suit or suits in the Court of Claims, heretofore instituted, or which may hereafter be begun, under and by virtue of an act of Congress approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act of Congress authorizing the Omaha Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims," with full rights of appeal as therein provided for other tribes; and the Court of Claims shall thereupon have full jurisdiction, legal and equitable, to hear and determine all rights of the Ponca Indians against the United States and against any other tribe or band of Indians parties thereto, and to decree the fees to be paid to the attorney chosen by the Ponca Indians, under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with existing law, to represent them therein, and his asociates, such fees to be paid out of any money which may be found to be due said Indians.

Mr. OWEN. I ask to submit letters from the Bureau of Indian Affairs in justification of this item, and I ask that they be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

JUNE 13, 1914.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of June 10, 1914, transmitting a copy of an amendment introduced on June 5 (calendar day, June 10), 1914, to the pending Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 12579), the purpose of which is to authorize the Ponca Indians to intervene in any suit now pending in the Court of Claims and filed by the Omaha Tribe. You request that an immediate report be made to the Committee on Indian Affairs on the proposed amendment.

There is inclosed a copy of an amendment introduced on February 21, 1914, which is identical with that of June 5, except as to the last five words in the amendment of June 5. There is also inclosed a copy of departmental report of March 27, 1914. Inasmuch as the department has already submitted a report on the amendment of February 21, I do not suppose you desire a formal report on the second amendment.

Cordially, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of March 17, 1914, transmitting a copy of a proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, H. R. 12579.

The purpose of the amendment is to authorize the Ponca Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma and Nebraska to appear in and be made parties to any suit or suits pending in the Court of Claims filed by the Omaha Tribe of Indians under the act of June 22, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 580).

Senate bill 5169, having this purpose in view, was introduced in the Sixty-second Congress, second session, and a favorable report was submitted thereon by the department under date of February 26, 1912. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs reported the bill favorably, recommending certain amendments suggested by the department in its letter of February 26, 1912. (See S. Rept. 621, 62d Cong., 2d sess., copy herewith.) The proposed amendment does not conform fully to the provisions of the bill, but would not be objectionable if amended so as to provide for the employment of attorneys with the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as provided by law. It is suggested that the proposed amendment be amended as follows:

"Page 2, line 4, after the word 'Indians,' insert 'under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with existing law.'

"Page 2, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words 'funds of the tribe in the Treasury of the United States' and insert in lieu thereof the words 'money which may be found to be due said Indians: Provided, That the amount of the attorneys' fees shall not be greater than that named in the approved contract.'"

Cordially, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, transmitted resolutions of the House on the life and public services of Hon. TIMOTHY D. SULLIVAN, late a Representative from the State of New York.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 160) providing for the procurement of title to land at Cape Henry, in the State of Virginia, for works for fortifications and coast-defense purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I now ask that the Secretary state the amendment that I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 20, after the word "expended," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That except as to maintenance not more than one-third of this amount, nor of any money hereby appropriated for this project, shall be expended until the State of Montana shall have provided, by legislative enactment, that Indian water rights, or applications for State permits to appropriate water, or State permits to appropriate water for use on Indian lands, shall be incontestable for nonuse of water during the time said Indian land is held in trust by the United States, and that beneficial use of water on allotted land made during the time said land is held in trust shall perfect the priority of the water right as of the date of application for permit to appropriate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the subject matter of this proposed amendment was discussed at great length in the Senate on last Saturday. It was stated by some Senators that, under the prevailing conditions, large appropriations in some instances have been made out of Indian funds for the construction of irrigation works designed to reclaim Indian lands, and that on account of certain conditions and limitations as to the time when the water rights may be exercised by the Indians the benefits of those appropriations have, in some instances at least, accrued largely to white persons. This amendment is intended to prevent that occurring in connection with the irrigation work to which it applies on the Flathead Reservation, in the State of Montana.

The amendment is in the nature of a limitation upon the appropriation. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] is interested in this amendment. It is not my purpose now to review the discussion which we had here on last Saturday. I then contended, and presented some authorities to support the contention, that where the United States by treaty with Indians sets aside an Indian reservation for agricultural purposes, and water rights are necessary to carry out the purposes of the treaty, there is an implied reservation of water rights by the Government for the use and benefit of the Indians owning the reservation, and that the Indians could not be deprived of those rights under State laws or by any adversary action under State laws. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senators from Utah, and other Senators presented very forcibly and ably a contrary contention, supported in some authorities, to the effect that the question of water rights is governed almost exclusively, if not exclusively, by State laws.

In this provision we are proposing to make an appropriation of $250,000 for the carrying forward of an Indian irrigation work. This appropriation is reimbursable. As has been disclosed, I think, and shown clearly by the debate which has heretofore taken place on subjects kindred to this, in all probability unless there is some precaution taken by Congress to safeguard the rights of these Indians to water, they will not avail themselves of them within a short time, and until after the water has been appropriated under State laws by white settlers in the State of Montana.

This limitation on the appropriation, I think, is a fair one. It contemplates that the reservation of water rights for the benefit of Indian lands under this irrigation project shall be continued until the expiration of the trust. It provides that not more than one-third of this $250,000 "appropriated for this project, shall be expended until the State of Montana shall have provided, by legislative enactment, that Indian water rights or applications for State permits to appropriate water, or State permits to appropriate water for use on Indian lands, shall be incontestable for nonuse of water during the time said Indian land is held in trust by the United States, and the beneficial use of water on allotted land made during the time said land is held in trust shall perfect the priority of the water right as of the date of application for a permit to appropriate."

This amendment was prepared by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], myself, and a representative of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, who is familiar with irrigation laws and irrigation projects. I desire to state, however, that the department is not committed to this. The work that was done by the representative of the bureau was done at the request of the Senator from Vermont and at my request; and I did not mean to imply that the department is bound by this proposed amendment or by anything which it contains.

I hope that the Senator from Montana may, upon an examination of the amendment, find that it is consistent with his view, and that he will agree to it, or at least, raise no objection concerning it.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas a question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Montana for that purpose.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Arkansas holds that under the Winters case all necessary water for the irrigation of Indian lands on Indian reservations is reserved. If that be the law, what is the use of this amendment? What good can it serve?

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, he has stated entirely too broadly the contention which I made on last Saturday. I held that in the case of a certain reservation, which had been set aside by treaty stipulation between the Indians and the Government for an agricultural Indian reservation, there was an implied reservation of water rights; but the fact that able Senators who are familiar with irrigation laws and irrigation questions present forcibly a contrary contention leads me, from an abundance of caution and a sincere desire to safeguard the rights of the Indians, to present this amendment.

If this amendment is agreed to, then, whether my contention of last Saturday was correct or the contention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and of the Senators from Utah was correct, the rights of the Indians to water will be conserved.

I take it that no Senator here believes that the Government ought to appropriate the Indians' money to construct irrigation works for the benefit of Indian lands and at the same time to permit such a condition to arise as will prevent the Indians from obtaining the water necessary to cultivate those lands when they get ready and able to cultivate them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Just one moment, please. The progress of agriculture among the Indians has been slow; and that has been due to many causes. It is due in part to the fact that the Indian is not naturally, as a race, devoted to the art and science of agriculture; it is due in part to the fact that while irrigation works have been established and the Indian lands have been watered, which could have been possibly cultivated, the Indians have not been supplied with the necessary implements and means of cultivating plots upon them. If now we are going to do a substantial work for the Indians, if we are going to try to make the Indians an agricultural people, we ought, while appropriating large sums of their money, to take such precautions as will preserve to them the necessary water rights. If we are not going to do that, we ought not to make the appropriations and to permit some one else to get the benefit of works constructed at the Indian's expense.

The fact that the Indian is not quick at availing himself of these rights, the fact that he is not a skillful agriculturist, makes it the more our duty, if we are going to try to make him such, when we expend his money for that purpose, to use that intelligence which has come to us from experience and observation during the history of works of this character; and that makes it our duty to see that when these moneys are expended the Indians get the primary benefit of the expenditure.

As I said in the beginning, I do not care to prolong this discussion. This measure has been under consideration for a long while. I regard this as a very important matter; and, as I said a moment ago, I hope that the Senators who feel an interest in it will find it consistent with their duty here to consent to the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, if I understand the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], it proposes to withhold two-thirds of this appropriation, unless the State shall pass such legislation?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Suppose the State declines to do it?

Mr. ROBINSON. Then the appropriation would not be expended without additional legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then these irrigation works would never be completed.

Mr. ROBINSON. It would leave it open to Congress, when the attitude of the State of Montana concerning the subject is known, to determine whether or not it will go ahead and expend the Indians' money to create an irrigation work for the benefit of white persons. It will still leave us with that right to withhold the remainder of the appropriation necessary to complete the work. That is the design of the amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, we can only look at the legislation that is now proposed, and I do not suppose this matter ought to be considered in the light of what Congress may conclude to do at some time in the future. This proposed amendment is, in effect, that these irrigation enterprises shall never be completed unless the State of Montana shall pass the legislation which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] thinks it ought to pass.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me for an interruption—I believe I have yielded the floor and the Senator from Utah has the floor—I will say that I do not think that that is a correct statement of the proposition. Congress is expending Indian money presumably for Indian benefit, and Congress has the right to place upon the expenditure of that money such limitations as it believes are necessary to carry out the primary purpose of the original legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It does not help the Senator from Arkansas any if that be conceded. Of course, Congress has the right to put upon the expenditure——

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me ask the Senator from Utah a question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me finish the sentence. Of course, Congress has the right to put upon the expenditure of the money that it appropriates any limitation which it pleases, at least within proper limits; but that does not alter the situation as I have stated it, that, if this amendment be adopted, the effect of it will be to declare that unless the State of Montana does pass the legislation which the Senator from Arkansas thinks it ought to pass, then these Indian irrigation works will never be completed at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; that is not the design. The Senator from Utah is surely too good a lawyer and too clear a reasoner to make that contention. The only effect of that provision is that, if the State of Montana does not pass the legislation contemplated in the amendment, then two-thirds of this appropriation will not be expended for the purpose of completing this improvement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is what I have said—that two-thirds of it would not be expended.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not mean that the project will never be completed at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let us read it:

Provided, That, except as to maintenance, not more than one-third of this amount nor of any money hereby appropriated for this project shall be expended until the State of Montana shall have provided, by legislative enactment, that Indian water rights or applications for State permits to appropriate water or State permits to appropriate water for use on Indian lands shall be incontestible for nonuse of water during the time said Indian land is held in trust by the United States, and that beneficial use of water on allotted land made during the time said land is held in trust shall perfect the priority of the water right as of the date of application for permit to appropriate.

It expressly provides that two-thirds of this appropriation shall never be expended unless this thing be done by the State legislature.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. Now, let me——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Wait a moment. We are appropriating the whole amount on the theory that it is necessary to complete this work, and we shall appropriate money hereafter upon the theory that that shall be necessary. Now, we say that, notwithstanding the whole amount is necessary to complete the work, only one-third of it shall be expended, unless this thing is done by the Legislature of Montana.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Suppose it should be brought to the notice of the Senator and to his knowledge that, as a matter of fact, unless some such legislation is enacted by the State of Montana, the benefits of this appropriation will not accrue to the Indians, but will be indirectly obtained by white persons, would be Senator think it fair to continue the improvement at the Indians' expense?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If that is going to be the situation, do not make the appropriation at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not concede the Senator's point at all. I concede that the improvement is a great and a beneficial one, and that it ought to be carried forward as speedily as is reasonably practicable, but that the primary consideration is that the benefits of the legislation shall accrue to the Indians. I am not willing to vote Indian money unless I am satisfied that it will be used for the benefit of the Indians.

The Senator has contended very forcefully that nothing the United States can do will preserve to these Indians any water rights whatever; that it all depends upon either the magnanimity or the generosity of the State of Montana in dealing with this subject. If the contention of the Senator from Utah in that particular is correct, it becomes more important to have this limitation upon this appropriation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understood the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, it was that if two-thirds of this money is withheld this project will never be completed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it is always withheld; yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This appropriation is for continuing an existing work. It does not state that it is for completing it. A portion of this irrigation system is already in use. Does the Senator contend that it would be necessarily an evil to maintain the portion of the irrigation system already constructed and withhold any further appropriation for continuing it until the condition provided for in the amendment is complied with? We will have accomplished something for the benefit of the Indians by maintaining the portion of the irrigation system already in use, even if we only expend a third of the amount appropriated in the paragraph, it being calculated that a third—and I think the calculation correct—would be sufficient to meet the present demands of the Indians. In every similar instance in this bill, if we had in mind simply the benefit of the Indians, a third of the amount appropriated would supply the needs of those particular Indians, if they took advantage of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Michigan thinks that we ought not to complete more than a third of these contemplated works, or that portion which a third of the money appropriated under this provision will construct, of course he is right in also thinking that it ought to be limited. I do not know anything about the condition in Montana.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think, if the Senator please, that in most of these projects—there may be some exceptions, of course—unless we can secure sufficient time to allow the Indians to make beneficial use of this water, a third of this money is all, and perhaps more, than we ought to expend.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then we ought to cut down the appropriation to a third.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think that is true——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the legislative situation in this matter is this: We appropriate $250,000 to continue the work of building this irrigation enterprise. We do that, and we must do it, upon the theory that that amount of money is necessary; that ditches and reservoirs and dams which that amount of money will build are necessary. We make the appropriation upon this theory, and then we immediately turn around and say that unless the State of Montana shall enact certain legislation we shall only expend one-third of the amount.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But if the Senator please——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, the two things are utterly inconsistent. The appropriation is made upon the theory that it is all necessary, and then we put in a proviso which strikes out two-thirds of this necessary appropriation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not believe the Senator is stating it correctly. We did not make an appropriation of $250,000 with the idea that under all conditions that amount is necessary. We increased the amount allowed by the House by $150,000, having in mind the fact that we are going to secure the adoption of a proviso that would allow the Indians to make beneficial use of this water. That proviso goes out on a point of order. The original appropriation was $100,000. We increased it by $150,000, having in mind, as I have said, the fact that we did make another provision, whereby the water could be used by the Indians.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not rise——

Mr. PAGE. May I interrupt the Senator from Utah for just a moment upon the point which the Senator from Michigan makes?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will be brief, I will yield to him.

Mr. PAGE. I want to say to the Senator that the estimate for this appropriation was $100,000, and the House appropriated the amount estimated by the department. The Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate have been for a long time insisting that these appropriations be cut down unless some proviso could be introduced into the bill to safeguard the rights of the Indians. The assistant commissioner says: "I have arranged that; I have made a proviso that protects the Indians, and with that proviso I am willing that the request of the Senator from Montana shall be agreed to and the appropriation increased from $100,000 to $250,000."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, Mr. President, that is aside from anything that I have been discussing or intended to discuss. If $250,000 is not justified, the Senator from Vermont ought not to vote for it; if $100,000 is all we ought to appropriate, then the Senator from Vermont ought to move to strike out the excessive amount of $150,000.

What I rose primarily, however, to say was that, if I understand the constitution of the State of Montana—and I think it is the same as the constitution of my own State in that respect—this amendment calls upon the Legislature of Montana to enact legislation which the constitution of Montana forbids. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] provides:

> Provided, That except as to maintenance not more than one-third of this amount, nor of any money hereby appropriated for this project, shall be expended until the State of Montana shall have provided by legislative enactment that Indian water rights, or applications for State permits to appropriate water or State permits to appropriate water for use on Indian lands, shall be incontestable for nonuse of water during the time said Indian land is held in trust by the United States.

No matter how long it takes the Indians to make beneficial use of the water—50 years or 100 years—the State of Montana is asked to pass legislation which will tie that water up for the use of these Indians whenever they get ready to use it. The constitution of the State, I think, provides—the Senator from Montana can correct me if I am wrong—that no special legislation shall be passed. It is a very good rule; it is a rule which ought to be enforced with reference to Federal legislation as well, because if there is any kind of legislation that is generally objectionable it is special legislation, which carves out of the general rules special exceptions and makes favored classes under the law. That is precisely what this amendment proposes to do.

The State of Montana has a general law providing—and I am only quoting it because, I assume, it is the same as the law in my own State—that in order to secure a right to water for irrigation purposes there shall, first of all, be a notice given of the intended appropriation, specifying the quantity of water to be appropriated, the works to be erected in order to make the appropriation, the land on which the appropriation is to be utilized, and then, after the notice has been given, that must be followed by a construction of the necessary works within a reasonable time, and then the application of the water to the land within a reasonable time. That is the general law of the State of Montana. This amendment proposes that the State of Montana shall make a favored class of these Indians. They are citizens of the United States; their lands have been allotted to them, and they are citizens the same as the white men. The Legislature of the State of Montana has no more power under its constitution to pass an act of this kind than it would have to select a lot of white men in the State and say that their rights shall be incontestable for a hundred years or for 50 years.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I misunderstood the Senator the other day, then, when he was talking about Utah. I understood him to say that the State of Utah had made special arrangements for the Indians.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That the State had extended their rights to 1919.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But it did so by general law, which provided that anybody could make application to the State engineer, and upon showing a certain state of facts the time could be extended by the State engineer. It was not a law passed saying that Indians alone could do so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood the Senator to say the other day that they paid particular attention to the Indians out there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was passed primarily for the benefit of the Indians, but it was a general law. I read it to the Senator the other day. I am unable to put my hands upon it at this moment, but it was a general law. Of course, if we passed a law saying that everybody could have this right to have their water rights held in abeyance and their claims incontestable, then it would not be obnoxious to the provision of the Constitution.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator explain to me, if he kindly will, whether there is or is not a difference between a white voter or a citizen and the Indian in Montana? Is it not true that the Indian is restricted to the extent that the Government disposes of his land, acts as his guardian, and allows him no privilege in that respect to act for himself? If that is true, in that event is he not entitled to certain exemptions due to the fact that he has certain restrictions placed upon him?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We thrashed that question out the other day. I think not, so far as water rights are concerned. I think the Indian stands upon exactly the same footing as the white citizen stands, and that there is no difference whatever when it comes to the appropriation of water.

Mr. LANE. I will say, then, for the Senator's information, that in Montana they do not stand on the same terms, for the reason that the Indian is only allowed a limited period of two years, whereas the white settler has been granted a greater length of time, and the Indian is deprived of the means of improving his land, and therefore there is a special injustice being done him.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator will not find any such statute in Montana as that.

Mr. LANE. We are assured that there is in the act of 1907.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator will not find, I think, a statute in Montana which provides or contemplates that the Indian shall have only two years to do a certain thing, and that the white man shall have more than two years in which to do it.

Mr. LANE. I refer to the Federal law, the act of 1907, which, I think, makes that provision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know anything about the Federal law. All I am saying is that this is clearly special legislation. I think there can not be the slightest doubt about it, and we are by this proviso insisting that the Legislature of Montana shall pass an act which the constitution of Montana expressly forbids it from passing.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he is certain that there is a provision in the constitution of the State of Montana which would make this legislation impossible? I have understood that there was none.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Can the Senator from Montana answer that question?

Mr. MYERS. What is the question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Whether or not there is a provision in the constitution of Montana which forbids special legislation?

Mr. MYERS. There is; and I think it is precisely as the Senator from Utah has stated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator from Montana maintain that there are no special laws in his State with regard to the Indians—that no special legislation with reference to the Indians on any subject has been passed in Montana?

Mr. MYERS. I do not believe we have any law on the statute books of Montana which could be characterized to the least extent as special legislation, because it is forbidden by the constitution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Utah has said that there is a constitutional provision which prevents special legislation in the State of Montana. I will state that such a provision exists in the State of Colorado.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to permit me to read the provision of the Montana constitution?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON. And to make the observation that if it has any application to this controversy, I am unable to see it.

I read from section 26 of the constitution:

> The legislative assembly shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: For granting divorces; laying out, opening, altering, or working roads or highways; vacating roads, town plats, streets, alleys—

And so forth.

The section then goes ahead and enumerates perhaps 100 specific cases in which special laws shall not be passed, and then it concludes with the following general declaration:

> In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted.

Mr. President, that is exactly the same as the Arkansas constitution, word for word and letter for letter; and in a large number of cases the courts have held that the legislature itself is the sole judge as to whether a general law can be made applicable. Under this provision of the Arkansas constitution the general assembly of that State has enacted five times as many so-called special acts as it has so-called general acts, and not one of them has ever been declared invalid by any court on the theory that it was a violation of that constitutional provision.

Upon an examination of the enumerated cases in which special legislation shall not be enacted, it does not appear that this provision comes within any of those classes; and I think I have shown that it can not come within the general provision which I have read, namely:

> In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted—

Because all the courts hold, upon a construction of exactly the same provision in other States, that the legislature itself is the sole judge as to when a general law can be made applicable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What does the Senator from Arkansas himself say as to whether or not the general law of Montana with reference to the appropriation of water is applicable to the Indians? I am not asking whether it is burdensome or unjust, but is it applicable?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think it is applicable to the case of Indians, for the reasons that I have stated here this evening. I think the general law of Montana is not applicable and should not be applicable, and that a different rule should prevail, and that the rule set forth in the amendment ought to be applied.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the trouble with passing any law such as is contemplated by the Senator here is that it interferes with rights that other people have acquired by virtue of complying with the law, and not only rights given by statutes but rights guaranteed by the Constitution.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has argued that this is special legislation; but there must be contained within the constitution of Montana another provision, which provides, as in my State, that the right to appropriate water for beneficial purposes shall never be denied. That does not mean, as a matter of fact, that by declaring that water is appropriated for beneficial uses a person can hold it. It means that anybody can come in, and if there is any water that is not used for beneficial purposes, he acquires a right under the constitution to take it. Consequently, if you extend the time of one person who is entitled to that right, it must of necessity interfere with the rights of other persons who have acquired rights by appropriation for beneficial purposes.

I want to see, now, if there is not a provision in this constitution—I know there is in the constitution of Colorado—which says that the right to appropriate water for beneficial purposes shall never be denied; and that applies not only to Indians but to white people or any other people.

The situation with respect to the appropriation of water is simply this: It is necessary to have water upon those lands in order to raise crops. The law as propounded by the supreme court of my State, at least—and that has always been the law, irrespective of any constitutional amendment and irrespective of any statute; it is the law of necessity—is that the land can be put to the best use only by the appropriation of water for beneficial purposes. Consequently, it has been recognized by the Constitution; and you will find in this very constitution of Montana a provision of similar import to that which I have referred to, namely, that the right to appropriate water for beneficial purposes shall never be denied to anybody—Indian, or white man, or anybody else.

The Western States, in order to carry out that constitutional provision, have enacted certain laws. They provide that when a man desires to take out water from a stream and lead it to higher ground, and thereby let the water flow upon the irrigable lands below, he must in my State file a plat of his irrigation scheme, together with a description of his right of way, a statement as to the quantity of water he proposes to appropriate, and the time in which he expects to complete his work. He files that in the State engineer's office. That is notice to the world. He gives the point of diversion on the stream, and not only the general course but the specific course of the irrigating ditch. Then, when he does that, he has initiated his right. He gets no right unless he follows it up. He has to follow it up within a reasonable time, in the first place; but if he does follow it up his right to water accrues and begins at the time of the filing with the State engineer. Consequently, there is the initiation of his right. Then he completes his work; he keeps on at it, and if it is a great, big enterprise it may take years for him to accomplish the end. In addition to that, it may be a long time before he can put the water on the land. The courts take all of that into consideration, and in some instances they have said that it is not unreasonable for them to take 10 years to have all the water under the irrigation system applied to the land. It is only by applying the water to the land that the appropriation is complete.

That is true as to Indians as well as to white people. You can not make a discrimination between them. If you do, you will interfere with the rights of somebody else who has started an irrigation scheme. If he goes to the records and finds that no irrigation project has been filed with the State engineer upon a certain stream, or, if a number have been filed, that they do not consume all the water, he then, under his right under the constitution, can file upon that water and can complete his work.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In just a moment. When that occurs the right of a person becomes a vested right in him, and to say that somebody who has not filed or has abandoned his work can come in ahead of him, after he has spent perhaps hundreds of thousands of dollars, is saying something that would be a hardship and that would be wrong.

I now yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado whether, conceding all that he says to be true, it is right for us, as the guardians of the Indian, to continue to appropriate this money, thereby placing upon his property mortgage upon mortgage, year after year, and for millions and millions of dollars, when it is practically conceded by the Senator that the Indian may lose the whole or the greater part of the amount appropriated by us and made a charge upon his property?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will tell the Senator what I think ought to be done. I think there ought to be some officer of the Indian Bureau who will watch these irrigation enterprises and make an appropriation when he finds it is necessary to complete the enterprise, so that its rights may be preserved. The courts are not closed upon that matter in a year or two years. As a matter of fact, if there is good faith manifested, there can be no difficulty about it.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. Can we not preserve in this bill the same right that we could preserve by having some agent to make an appropriation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, certainly you can. The only trouble is that the complaint has been made that Congress has not been appropriating the money to do these things, and it ought to do it.

Mr. WHITE. Does not the amendment of the Senator from Vermont have exactly the same effect that the Senator says would be had if an officer were designated to make an appropriation for these Indians?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know about that; but a law, you know, does not administer itself. There has to be some person who will see that it is needed, and report it, and get the necessary appropriation. I will say to the Senator that this same law of the appropriation of water and the abandonment of water applies to the States exactly as it does to the individuals and to the Indians.

Mr. WHITE. One further question, Mr. President.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The State of Colorado has passed laws under which the State itself may file upon the water. It has done so in a number of instances, and it has lost its right because in subsequent years the legislature would not provide the appropriation necessary to complete the work. You might as well say that there ought to be an exception; that the State of Colorado should have a right to do this. It could not interfere with the requirements of its constitution. It would lose its right, and has lost its right.

State Canal No. 2, in the State of Colorado, had an appropriation of $132,000, and every dollar of it went to naught, because the subsequent legislature said: "Well, it will not pay. We will not do it. This is a scheme that it was thought would be of great benefit, but we find that there are many objections to it," and they would not appropriate. Now, to say that subsequent appropriators, who invest hundreds of thousands of dollars, should not be permitted to take that water when the State has practically abandoned it, and that the State should try by some kind of a law to hold that right in perpetuity, would be a wrong to every investor in irrigation enterprises.

I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. WHITE. The State of Colorado lost that right by its own law, did it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly it did.

Mr. WHITE. As a sovereign the statute would not run against it or time would not run against the State. It would have to abandon it by its own legislation, would it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no, no. It abandons it because there is no compliance with its constitutional provision, and whenever a man does comply with a constitutional provision he acquires the right. Here is the provision which I thought was in this constitution.

Mr. WHITE. One other question before we go to that point. Whose water is this that we are dealing with?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that it belongs to the States.

Mr. WHITE. Then how are we giving it to the Indians?

Mr. SHAFROTH. You can not give it to the Indians. All of this legislation would be of no avail.

Mr. WHITE. Then why should we appropriate the money?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not asking Congress to appropriate the money. I must say that I have as much interest in the Indians and want their rights preserved as much as any man; but it is absurd to say that we shall pass a law here which will recognize that the United States Government could interfere in the matter of appropriation, which is fixed by the constitution of each one of these Western States.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. MYERS. I will answer the question of the Senator from Alabama by saying that the reason is because the United States Government has recognized the conditions and has already appropriated sufficient water to cover all the lands of both the Indians and the whites on this reservation, and they will all get water for their lands.

Mr. WHITE. One minute, now. Then what right has the United States to appropriate this water, which belongs to the State of Montana?

Mr. MYERS. The United States has just as much right to go into a State and appropriate water as an individual has. It is an individual when it comes to that, and it is done all the time. All the water for our reclamation projects is appropriated by the Government of the United States as it would be by an individual in the first instance.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is appropriated by filing a plat with the State engineer and complying with the State laws. Every one of these reclamation projects has to do that before any rights can be obtained. That is the initiation of their rights.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator before he proceeds further?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAGE. The amendment which was introduced this morning was introduced here over the protest rather than with the favor of the Indian Bureau. They insist that the United States already has the right, not only under the Winters case, but because there were treaties with the Indians, which gave them certain rights before the State of Montana was admitted to the Union, rights which can not now be disturbed by anything which Montana can do.

I want to read, if the Senator will allow me—it will take only a moment—what the department said on this point:

The purpose of this and other similar legislation in this bill is to protect the rights of Indians to water on Indian reservations and on allotted Indian lands held under trust or by other patents containing restrictions on alienation.

To establish more certainly and securely water rights of Indians is a matter of the greatest importance in administering satisfactorily their affairs. On a number of reservations where Indians have been allotted, the land is practically of no value for agricultural purposes without irrigation. Water on these reservations is a vital factor in developing the Indians living thereon so that they may become self-supporting and be raised to a higher standard of civilization.

The Supreme Court, in the case of Winters v. United States (207 U. S., 564), said that "The power of the Government to reserve waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied, and could not be."

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is a discussion of the same thing that we had here Saturday afternoon.

Mr. PAGE. Just one sentence more:

The Supreme Court further said in this case that there was an implied reservation for the benefit of the Indians of a sufficient amount of water from the Milk River for irrigation purposes which was not affected by the subsequent act of February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 676), admitting Montana to the Union, and that the water of the Milk River can not be diverted so as to prejudice the rights of the Indians by settlers on the public lands and those claiming riparian rights on that river.

This is the attitude of the Indian Department. They objected to our referring this matter to the State, as we have proposed to do in this amendment, but we wanted to avoid, if possible, the conflict of law which we have been discussing for the last three or four days, and this amendment was consequently offered.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. That decision is from the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. When it speaks of the Government impliedly reserving the right of water for Indian lands, it means the Government of the United States reserves it?

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WHITE. Then how can it belong to the State of Montana?

Mr. PAGE. The department insists that it does not belong to the State of Montana, and that the United States Government has full power to regulate it, because of certain rights held by the United States or the Indians prior to the admission of Montana to the Union.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator what is the use of this amendment, then?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama evidently was not here Saturday afternoon——

Mr. MYERS. I have asked the Senator from Vermont a question. Will the Senator from Colorado yield long enough for him to answer it?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; I am willing to have the answer given.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to go back a moment, if I am to answer that question.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw the question, then, because it is not fair for me to interrupt the Senator from Colorado for that purpose.

Mr. PAGE. I will take only a minute.

The Committee on Indian Affairs a year ago was asked by the Senator from Montana to increase this appropriation from $200,000 to some $600,000. We then questioned seriously whether the Indian money was not going to be wrongfully taken.

Mr. MYERS. Has any of it been wrongfully taken?

Mr. PAGE. I can not say. I only know that after a long discussion we raised the estimate last year to about $325,000. As the Senator will remember, the discussion last year was quite extended, but this year it was even more so, and the committee were of the belief, as it seemed to me, that a very strong sense of duty was resting upon them to see that no further large increase be permitted in this item unless it could be properly safeguarded. The department estimates for this item this year were $100,000. The House adopted this estimate. The Senator from Montana thereupon came before the Committee on Indian Affairs and asked that we treble the amount. I think he asked for $300,000. A long discussion ensued, in which we raised the question with the commissioner: "Can this money be safeguarded, so that the Indians will not suffer?" He said, "It can be"; and the way he proposed to do it was by adding the several provisos which have all gone out on points of order. In brief, we have destroyed the proposed safeguards but are continuing the very large additional appropriation, which I feel certain the Indian Committee would not have consented to but for the expectation or belief that the safeguards thrown around the appropriation by the proposed provisos would be effective to protect the Indians' rights. Let me repeat and again especially emphasize this very important point, namely, that upon the supposition that the Indians' rights could be safeguarded we raised the department estimates two and a half times to please the Senator from Montana. I think I know that this great increase would not have been agreed to by the Committee on Indian Affairs but for this proviso, which has been ruled out upon a point or order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the question which is raised here by the Senator from Vermont is the one that was discussed so thoroughly and so long on Saturday. Nearly the entire day was taken up for that purpose. The Senator from Arkansas raised the question by reading a case from the Supreme Court of the United States, in Two hundred and seventh United States Reports. In the discussion of that case it developed that that was a case in which there were some vested rights, and it was claimed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that it was determined upon that question as to the appropriation which had already been made, but which, it seemed, had not been made in exact compliance with the statute. At that time I cited a case from the State of Colorado to the effect that inasmuch as the right to water is a constitutional right, the legislature can not prevent any person from appropriating water by any legislative enactment. That case was one where, without regard to law, without regard to the statutory provisions as to filing in the State engineer's office, a person had made a head gate in a stream, opened it, conducted the water out, appropriated the water to beneficial uses, and had not even attempted to give notice to the world except by the actual construction of the ditch. The court held that notwithstanding it was not a statutory appropriation of water, yet it was an appropriation under the Constitution, and therefore that a subsequent appropriator could not acquire his rights.

Whether that is true or not, as the Senator from Montana has said—if that is true, as contended by the Senator from Vermont with relation to this decision, what is the use of having any enactment at all? You will find that when the decisions are finally made the people who honestly go and acquire rights to water under the constitutional provisions of these Western States will be entitled to that water; and it is right that they should be entitled to that water; and Congress should be alert to appropriate all the water that is necessary in order to give to the Indians the means of completing their works and appropriating the water to the land. Nobody has any objection to an Indian having this right; nobody has any objection to his getting the priority and preserving the priority; but there is such a thing as an abandonment under the principles of irrigation. I can not go and appropriate water to beneficial uses, and then, after removing the appropriation for beneficial uses, keep that water. If I could, you would not have any such thing as an irrigation system in your State. You would be doing a wrong to the development of the State. You would be doing a wrong to the persons who saw the water in the stream and acquired it, and had a right to take it out.

I want these Indians and all the Indians in every irrigation enterprise protected; but it can not be done by interfering with the general laws of a State. If you do that, you interfere with people who have a right to rely upon conditions, who have a right to appropriate water if they see it going to waste; and consequently, when they appropriate it under the laws of the State they become entitled to it, if the other parties have either abandoned their rights or have never preserved their rights.

That being the case, it seems to me that this amendment can do no good whatever. In the first place, it can not override a constitutional provision. The legislature itself would not have a right to interfere in a case of that kind and make a specific appropriation or reservation of water unless it were actually used for beneficial purposes. If you can do it in one year—or not one year, because they do give a reasonable time—but if you can do it beyond a reasonable time, you can do it for 100 or 200 years, and if you can do it in 1 case you can do it in 100 cases, and thereby you would have the irrigation laws of the Western States absolutely nullified.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me, Mr. President, that what we will have to do is to have some one watch the interests of the Indian, secure the money that is necessary to complete their works within the proper time, and thereby preserve their rights; and I for one am perfectly willing to assist in every way possible with respect to that.

In my State, when I first went to Colorado, it was said that the Platte River had been appropriated eight times over.

What I mean is that plats had been filed in the engineer's office and notices thereby given of constructing irrigation works with capacities that would exhaust the stream eight times over; and I do not believe at that time there were 150,000 acres of land in that valley that were being irrigated. Since that time, although the figures seemed to indicate that the number of cubic feet per second that the prior appropriators were claiming had more than exhausted the stream, yet, as a matter of fact, the appropriation grew. Whenever you appropriate water upon land it makes a more steady flow in the stream; it makes the water go much farther, by reason of the return flow, when you appropriate the water high up on the stream; and we have to-day on the Platte Valley no less than 800,000 acres under cultivation by means of irrigation. The very fact that these economical uses of the water have been improved upon has made the capacity for irrigation in that one valley alone from five to six times as much as it was supposed that it could be.

Now, I have not any doubt, as the Senator from Montana has said, that this stream is sufficient to accommodate all the land that is in that valley. The Platte Valley is a valley which widens out into a plain, and consequently there would not be enough water in the Platte Valley to irrigate everything in eastern Colorado, but in the Milk Valley I understand there is a very limited area. Consequently, if the Indians go and reappropriate it, notwithstanding the fact that they are not quick and avail themselves of the appropriation for beneficial uses, the chances are that there will be ample water for both. If there is not ample water for both, the Indians ought to have it, if they comply with their law, or the white man ought to have it, if he invested his money upon the faith of the fact that there was water there, and he had a right to assume it under the constitution and laws of the State.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator says there is plenty of water there, and that nobody is going to have trouble. He understands, of course, that in the consideration of Indian matters we have to go largely to the department for the facts in regard to them. I should like to call attention to a paragraph in Assistant Commissioner Meritt's statement. It is found on page 379 of our hearings. He speaks of the especial proviso in the bill, prepared to protect the Indians—the proviso which has been thrown out on a point of order—and then concludes:

> This item, we believe, will protect the water rights of Indians on a number of reservations where large appropriations have been made—> and where, if they lose their water rights, they will receive no benefit from the irrigation projects heretofore constructed.

Now, mark this—

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator understands that these irrigation rights are in the order of their priority, and if the Indian has the first right now and does not avail himself of it and does not complete his work and appropriate the water for beneficial purposes he has not lost his right when there is water in the stream. He becomes invested with a second right, and often a second right becomes nearly as valuable as the first right. For instance, you can see that whenever land has not been irrigated it takes an enormous quantity of water to bring it under cultivation; it takes a greater appropriation. When I went to Colorado 1 inch an acre was what everybody said we must have, and now nobody needs more than half an inch an acre, and in some parts of the State of Colorado it is said that one-fifth of an inch to the acre is sufficient.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator realize how much the department says we must hereafter appropriate to complete this irrigation scheme? On page 454 of our 1913 hearings the Senator will find this language:

> According to estimates of the Reclamation Service it will require nearly $3,000,000 to be further appropriated by Congress to complete this project, the money appropriated to be reimbursable out of the proceeds of the sale of land and timber of the Flathead Indians.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, if it is a good enterprise, it is all right; and if it is not a good enterprise, do not do it, that is all.

Mr. PAGE. But the Senator says we should safeguard it by some legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would safeguard them just like I would safeguard an individual. If I go and make a filing upon my land for the purpose of getting water for agricultural purposes, and I am diligent—that is, if within a reasonable time I begin the construction of my ditch, and I keep on with that—it does not do not say you have to do it one year or two years. The courts are pretty liberal. If there is an intention to complete the enterprise, then it is sufficient if in a reasonably fair time it is completed. A person in his individual affairs says, "Yes; I will do that; I will raise the money for this; I will raise the money for the next session; I will raise it for the next session"; and he goes along. What we mean is that there ought to be somebody who will take the place of the individual who owns a ditch or owns an irrigation enterprise, and then the appropriation ought to be made.

Now, if you pass that period and there is a shortage of water, that may be a different proposition.

Mr. PAGE. If I may be allowed a moment further——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. The department only recommended $100,000 for this scheme.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am not here to urge an appropriation of $100,000 or $500,000 or a million dollars. I think the appropriation should be sufficient. I know in the State of Colorado we lost a number of enterprises in just exactly the same way. Whenever the Government undertakes anything it should do it with diligence. That has been the experience in my State, at least.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator from Colorado——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to have the Senator suggest what amendment to this bill he would make in order to meet the statement which Commissioner Meritt makes that unless we protect the Indians they will receive no benefit from these projects. I would like to have him state just what legislation he thinks we ought to have to safeguard the Indians, for unless we can protect them in some way I do not think it right to put another $250,000 mortgage upon their lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think that a resolution or declaration in the form of an amendment that will go to the question of power of the Federal Government against the power of the State will do you any good. If your engineers say that this was begun in 1910, say, and that we did $100,000 worth of work on the enterprise that year, and two years after that Congress made an appropriation and put another hundred thousand dollars on it, I would say go on with the appropriation until the project is completed. But if you had begun it 40 years ago and did not do anything for 20 years, and then appropriated ten or fifteen thousand dollars, and in another 10 years' time appropriated another ten or fifteen thousand dollars, I do not think that would be reasonable diligence.

Mr. PAGE. I do not wish to criticize the action of my brother Senators, but I am constrained to say that, so far as my ears tell the story, the arguments of the Senator from Utah, of the Senator from Colorado, and of the Senator from Montana all seem to me to show great solicitude for the rights of the white man. I should like to have the Senators show some solicitude for the rights of the Indian and show us how we may safeguard his interests, for the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs assures us that unless he is safeguarded he is going to lose his rights.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In my State if an Indian or a tribe of Indians had priority of right, the courts would protect them with as much diligence as anyone on earth. There is no doubt about that. If you want to substitute for something that is not diligent and say that periods of 10, 20, 30, or 40 years can elapse and the water can be wasted for that length of time, and that no white citizens can take up that water and apply it to beneficial uses, you are going contrary to the Constitution and you can not avail yourself to any extent of that.

What I want is some officer of the Indian Department to watch these things and say that an appropriation ought to be made; that it is necessary in order to preserve his priority of right. It may be that he will have a fair water right even if it is not preserved, just as I cited in the case of the Platte Valley in my State. A great many appropriations that were made are now considered first-class appropriations.

Mr. PAGE. I still ask the Senator what he would do in this bill to safeguard the Indians' rights, in view of the fact that the department says that something must be done?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would take the department's word for it, unless you have evidence to the contrary. If the department says it is necessary to have this in order to comply with the laws of Montana and in order to secure this priority of right in the water, I would be in favor of it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think this amendment is in every way objectionable. If those who uphold the doctrine of the Winters case are correct, then there is no need for this amendment whatever; it is simply useless legislation.

I firmly believe that any such legislation by the State of Montana as is contemplated by this amendment would be declared unconstitutional. Our constitution says that there shall be no special legislation enacted where there may be general legislation on the subject, or where general legislation would be sufficient, or words to that effect.

The Supreme Court of Montana has never held, as the Senator from Arkansas says the Supreme Court of Arkansas has held, that the legislature may be the one, and the exclusive, judge as to when there may be special legislation, and when under that clause an act of general legislation should apply. I know of no such decision by the Supreme Court of Montana. The Supreme Court of Montana passes upon questions of special legislation; it has always done so; and I believe this will be held to be unconstitutional.

Furthermore, our constitution, as the Senator from Colorado has said, provides that—

> The use of all water now appropriated or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental, distribution, or other beneficial use, and the right of way over the lands of others for all ditches, drains, flumes, canals, and aqueducts necessarily used in connection therewith, as well as the sites for reservoirs necessary for collecting and storing the same, shall be held to be a public use.

Furthermore, I do not believe that the Legislature of Montana would enact any such legislation or tolerate for an instant the idea of the Federal Government dictating to it what irrigation legislation it should enact. The Legislature of Montana will not meet until next January, anyway, and this money is badly needed on that project between now and then. I do not believe the Legislature of Montana would ever enact any such legislation or submit to the Federal dictation in matters of that character. I for one never shall by my voice consent to it.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator insist that the State of Montana, either by force of its constitution or by legal enactment, can deprive the United States or the Indians of rights which they possessed prior to the admission of Montana to the Union?

Mr. MYERS. No; I do not claim that. I claim——

Mr. PAGE. Then let me read this from our committee hearings:

> The Supreme Court further said in this case—
>
> That is, the Winters case—
> that there was an implied reservation for the benefit of the Indians of a sufficient amount of water from the Milk River for irrigation purposes which was not affected by the subsequent act of February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 676), admitting Montana to the Union, and that the water of the Milk River can not be diverted so as to prejudice the rights of the Indians by settlers on the public lands and those claiming riparian rights on that river.

Mr. MYERS. If that applies to this case, then there is no legislation by the Legislature of Montana that is needed or that can have any effect or influence on the matter whatever. I want to say briefly——

Mr. PAGE. Does the Senator say that this does not apply?

Mr. MYERS. I do not admit that it applies to the Flathead Reservation. I would have to read the Flathead treaty before I passed judgment on that question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, that water had already been appropriated. If the Senator will read the statement of facts in the Winters case he will see that the water had been appropriated and put to beneficial use, and so far as that part of the decision is concerned, it simply held that by their treaty, the Government ceding some of their lands, there was reserved this water which they had appropriated. There is a dictum in the case which goes beyond that, I grant you, but it is a dictum purely.

Mr. PAGE. This says the waters of the Milk River, the very project we have before us, can not be diverted so as to prejudice the rights of the Indians.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Which they had acquired by appropriation.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to add a few more remarks, and then I am going to make a point of order. However, I have no desire to cut off the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. I want to hear all he has to say.

Mr. President, this reclamation project was started quite a number of years ago. There was a good deal of talk here about taking the money of the Indians without their consent. The opening of the Flathead Indian Reservation and the settlement and the allotment of these lands to the Indians and the inauguration of this reclamation project was consented to by the Flathead Indians. We are not taking any of their money without their consent. It was started a number of years ago, and it has progressed along nicely with such appropriations as Congress would give year by year up to this time, and I have never heard of any complaint from the Flathead Indians that they were not getting their rights in regard to getting water. None has been made to me.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. ROBINSON. A statement was made by a witness who lived upon the Blackfeet Reservation that in 21 cases of Indians who had sought to appropriate water rights under a Montana law the authorities held that they could not do that, because the rule in the Winters case applied; that they must get their rights from the Federal Government, and that as to the Flathead Reservation, the same rule had been applied there, and the Indians were unable to get any water to cultivate the land that they were ready to cultivate and wanted to cultivate principally for the reason that the State authorities would not recognize their rights.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Has the Senator a reference to the decision where the court so held?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I did not refer to a decision. I referred to the statement of a witness who states that in 21 cases the local authorities held that the Indians could not acquire water rights under State laws and absolutely denied their applications. Those applications, however, were on the Blackfeet Reservation. But the witness also made the statement——

Mr. MYERS. The Blackfeet Indian was talking about water on the Flathead Reservation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but the witness makes the same statement that the same rule applies on the Flathead Reservation; that he personally knows of Indians there who are unable to obtain the water they need, who want to cultivate their land on the reservation. Of course, I have no personal knowledge of the facts stated, but I call them to the attention of the Senator in reply to his statement that there has been no complaint made.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I say again that I have never heard of a complaint by a Flathead Indian that he was not getting his share of water on the Flathead Reservation reclamation project for any of his land. I have never heard of any complaint from them collectively, tribally, through their agents, individually, or in any other way. I know of none who have appeared before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs nor the House committee. I have had no communications from any Flathead Indians making any such complaint. On the contrary, all the settlers on the Flathead project—the white settlers and the Indians alike—want larger appropriations and they want this rushed.

Now, as to the complaint made by some Blackfeet Indians, it is absurd; it is not in accordance with the law or the fact. He did not know what he was talking about, because you do not have to get any authority to appropriate water in Montana. Anybody—a white man, an Indian, an alien, the State of Montana, or the United States Government—can go and tap a stream in the State of Montana and put water on arid and irrigable land and it is appropriated. That act itself appropriates it, makes it a common-law appropriation, which the courts of the State have recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will yield to me a moment further——

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the reclamation authorities refuse to turn the water upon the land or permit him to receive the water, practically the result to the Indian is the same; he has no water and can not cultivate his land.

Mr. MYERS. He can get his rights in court just the same as the white man, if some official who does not know the law and does not know his duty denies it to him.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. If what he says is true, why is it that Mr. Meritt, the assistant commissioner, in asking for these provisos, of which there are five or six in the bill, closes by this statement:

> This item, we believe, will protect the water rights of Indians on a number of reservations where large appropriations have been made and where, if they lose their water rights, they will receive no benefit from the irrigation projects heretofore constructed.

Why does the assistant commissioner make this very important and very emphatic statement? He speaks as one who states what he knows.

Mr. MYERS. He states merely his opinion, and probably he was unacquainted with the conditions. I will say in regard to Mr. Meritt, while as a gentleman I highly esteem him, I feel in regard to his opinion a good deal like the Senator from Vermont expressed himself in the committee time and time again. When Mr. Meritt would recommend some things and the balance of us were inclined to take his word for it, the Senator from Vermont would say: "I would like to know more about it than I do. Are you going simply to take Mr. Meritt's word for this? Are you going to take Mr. Meritt's ipse dixit in everything he has said?" The Senator from Vermont called for other information. I, like the Senator from Vermont, form my own opinion.

Mr. PAGE. I want to thank the Senator from Montana for giving me that praise. I wish, however, to state that I generally, probably always, accepted the word of the commissioner as to facts, but did not always accept his opinions and conclusions.

Mr. MYERS. Now, Mr. President, I shall take a very few minutes more. This project has been going on and Congress has appropriated from $200,000 to $400,000 each year since it started, in no year less than $200,000. I am here to say that the amount appropriated by the House this year—$100,000—was absolutely ridiculous and absurd. If we are not going to appropriate more than $100,000, we had better not appropriate any at all. I think the amount is entirely too small to be of any good effect, and it would simply delay the project. The project was started a number of years ago. It is estimated that it will take between five and six million dollars to complete it. About a million and a quarter or a million and a half have been appropriated. There are about $4,000,000 more necessary. That is my understanding.

If you are going to appropriate $100,000 a year, it will take 40 years to complete it, and the white settlers and the Indians on the project will be dead; and if not dead, they will have been starved out and gone away. It is just like building a house. If you are going to build a house worth $10,000, you might as well talk about spending $50 on it a year and extending the construction over a period of 40 years. The Indians and the white settlers want it completed, and the sooner the better. The sooner it is completed and the land sold the sooner the Indians will get their money back and the white settlers are going to make a living upon it.

Mr. PAGE. There is one further question I should like to ask the Senator: Is it not true that two-thirds of the appropriations of water on this reservation have been made by the whites and only one-third by the Indians, and is it not equally true that every dollar we appropriate becomes a mortgage upon Indian lands?

Mr. MYERS. The latter statement is true, but it will be reimbursed; the land and the timber are there; the Indians will get it back. If the whites have appropriated more water than the Indians, it is simply because there are more white settlers there ready to make farms and who have gone to farming; but I am here to say that there is plenty of water there for all. The Flathead Lake is back of this project, and they can take all the water in the Flathead Lake and all the water in the Flathead River. Here is one case where there is water for all.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the Senator if it was not stated before our committee—I do not recall the name of the witness—that we might as well have dumped the Indian's money into the river as to appropriate it for some of the irrigation projects for which we have appropriated his money or mortgaged his lands?

Mr. MYERS. I do not know but some man said that. Some men would say anything.

Mr. PAGE. Is it not true?

Mr. MYERS. No; I am not that man. I deny it. I know the facts in this case, because I live close to this reclamation project.

I want to ask if you would quit appropriating money for this project? It was started in good faith, and the Indians and the whites supposed it would be prosecuted with reasonable diligence and completed in a few years. White people left their homes back in the old States expecting water to be put on this land in a reasonable time.

I am here to say that however much the white man may suffer, if this is stopped or virtually stopped on account of dribbling, insignificant appropriations, the Indian will be the worst sufferer. This land was allotted to the Indian in tracts of 80 acres, being sold as irrigable land. The Indians had first choice. They took the land along the watercourses, the richest and most fertile, and most accessible, and most easily irrigated. The Indians had 80-acre tracts.

Now, the greater part of the work has been done on this project, putting in the main canal and dams and reservoirs and gathering up the water for distribution. The laterals and community ditches have to be put in yet. Very little so far has been put upon the land, because they have been doing community work so far.

The Indians have 80 acres of land apiece. You virtually stop this appropriation because the State of Montana will not be dictated to by Congress. You either stop the appropriation altogether or just dribble it in insignificant amounts that do no good. There will be a long time in getting water on any of that land, and the Indians will have 80 acres apiece without any water on it, and it is of no account to the Indian; he can not make a living on it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That will make it necessary for the State of Montana to look after its white citizens.

Mr. MYERS. I do not see how the State of Montana would have anything to look after.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Who would look after the white settlers?

Mr. MYERS. The Senator is certainly mistaken. I am no more interested in the white settlers than in the Indians. I am equally interested in both.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The white settler is getting a large part of the benefit.

Mr. MYERS. Because more of them have taken up land close to and under the ditches.

Mr. TOWNSEND. So in the case the Senator suggests, the cessation of the work of irrigation, it would fall on the white citizens of Montana.

Mr. MYERS. It would fall upon both.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood the Senator to say that water had been appropriated by the Government sufficient for all this land.

Mr. MYERS. For this reclamation project, but it can not be put on until ditches have been constructed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Water has been appropriated by the Federal Government, according to the Senator's statement, sufficient in amount to irrigate that land and project. Now, the proposition here is to provide some way to make it available to the Indians. If it is all available there is no white settler who could be wronged by its use by the Indians.

Mr. MYERS. No.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then they could not be wronged if they are in good faith proceeding to erect irrigation facilities if it is withheld for a sufficient length of time for the Indians to get it.

Mr. MYERS. The sooner the water is made available, the sooner the Indians will get it, and the sooner the whites will get it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator understands that this appropriation would never have been increased by the Senate committee, and there never would have been $150,000 more put on the appropriation if they had understood that this recommendation of the Department of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs would not be carried out.

Mr. MYERS. I can not say what individual members of the committee were cognizant of. I was not there when the amendment was proposed.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I will only take just a moment more. The Senator from Montana will remember that at the time these provisos were added the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs held the floor. He was telling us why he added these provisos. I wish to read just five lines from his statement to the Indian Committee, and I think I will then close what I have to say. Here is his statement:

> The Indian water-right situation is one of the most acute and important questions relating to Indian matters now before the Indian Bureau.

Evidently the matter is not as light and inconsequential as the Senator from Montana thinks.

The commissioner, then, makes the following most emphatic and important statement:

> There are dependent upon the solution of this question not only property rights involving millions of dollars, but the success or failure, prosperity or poverty, of thousands of Indians who are the wards of the Government and whose interests it is the duty of the Indian Bureau to protect.

I can not believe Senators ought to brush idly aside these words of the commissioner and say they are all nonsense.

Mr. MYERS. I have not said so.

Mr. PAGE. Perhaps the Senator thinks everything is coming out all right, but the commissioner stated substantially that he consented to the additional $150,000 because he had thrown around the appropriation the especial safeguard which has been thrown out on a point of order.

Mr. MYERS. Did he give one fact as to why that was necessary on the Flathead Reservation?

Mr. PAGE. He says, "This is one of the most critical things before the department." I use his language.

Mr. MYERS. Did he specify the Flathead Reservation or is that only his opinion as to its being one of the most important things?

Mr. PAGE. I simply give his answer.

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I rose for the purpose of securing some information. From what the Senator from Michigan said just now, I get the idea that this appropriation is being made for the purpose of constructing an irrigation system for the benefit of the white settlers.

Mr. MYERS. No; the Indians and the white settlers.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Michigan said——

Mr. MYERS. For Indians and white settlers, both.

Mr. THOMAS. That raises the query in my mind as to whether an appropriation of Indian money should be made for the benefit of anybody but Indians. In other words, is it fair to take Indian funds and build irrigation systems with them?

Mr. WHITE. It is to be a mortgage on the Indian lands.

Mr. THOMAS. I suppose the mortgage will lie upon all the lands.

Mr. MYERS. The Indians on that project have made no objection, and this has been going on for several years. Now, it must either be completed or abandoned, and if abandoned the money invested practically will be wasted. There has been no complaint that I know of on that reservation.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a question of very great importance; if it be true that the Government is appropriating Indian money for the purpose of constructing a system of irrigation for the benefit of white settlers and mortgaging the Indian lands for it, it is not right.

Mr. MYERS. The white settlers must pay finally for the land and for the water, and the Indians get the money back, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; but who gets the water? The Indians may get their money back, but the white man gets the water.

Mr. MYERS. The Indian gets the water for his land; the white man must pay for what water he gets; and the Indian gets the money back when the white man pays for the water.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Montana says that the white man pays for the water he gets. Does the Senator mean that the system is constructed with the Indian money sufficiently large for both the whites and the Indians?

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. And that the system is operated in such a way that the Indian gets his water free and the white man pays for his water?

Mr. MYERS. That is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. THOMAS. How is this fund afterwards covered back into the Treasury?

Mr. MYERS. The money is paid back into the tribal fund.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; but where does it come from?

Mr. MYERS. The Indians sell the land and the water to the white people, and all that the white people pay goes back into the tribal fund.

Mr. WHITE. Does it go to liquidate the debt of the Indians?

Mr. MYERS. It does.

Mr. President, I believe I have said about all I care to say. This project has been going along nicely for a number of years, and there has been no local complaint about it or objection to it that I know of. All the complaint and objection I have heard has come from the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and that has been this year. There has been no complaint from the reservation nor from the Indians nor from the whites there. They want larger appropriations; they want the work rushed, and they want it completed. I see no necessity for encumbering this legislation in this manner.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. Does the amount which the white man pays go to the discharge of the original obligation, or is it simply appropriated for the purpose of maintenance?

Mr. MYERS. I would ask the Senator from Alabama to what original obligation does he refer?

Mr. WHITE. The obligation which we are now creating, as I understand.

Mr. MYERS. It does; it goes to the discharge of the obligation and to the maintenance of the system.

Mr. President, I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order in that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and I withhold it until the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has been heard.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I wish merely to say a word in reply to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. The Senator from Arkansas called attention to the constitution of Montana, which I had undertaken to state—I did not know the exact terms of it—but a reading of the provision entirely carries out what I said. It is:

SEC. 26. The legislative assembly shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases—that is to say—

Then a number of cases are enumerated, at the conclusion of which it is provided:

In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable no special law shall be enacted.

The Senator from Arkansas says that if the Legislature of Montana should pass a law such as this proposed amendment contemplates, its judgment that the law is not a special law but a general law will be conclusive, whether in fact it is or is not a special law. That would be true under at least some of the authorities if all the legislature did was to pass a special law; that is, if the Legislature of Montana were to pass a law which is apparently special upon its face and there was no general law in existence upon the same subject, then its determination that it was exercising its power properly, according to the decision of some of the courts, would be conclusive, but where there is already upon the statute books a general law which is applicable to the case, the general law itself is an answer to the position of the legislature in passing the special law. That is the rule that is recognized, I think, by all of the authorities. I call attention to the general statement of the doctrine contained in First Sutherland Statutory Construction, at section 191, where it is said:

If a general law exists which is applicable to a subject, the question whether such a law can be made applicable is resolved. The legislature has by the enactment of a general law practically decided the question. Hence if, while such a general law is in force, a special or local law is passed affecting the same subject and modifying the general law, the question of its validity is judicial; it will be held invalid in the case supposed, for an applicable general law being in existence, it is no longer a question whether such a law can be made applicable, therefore the special or local law is prohibited.

In other words, in that kind of a case it is precisely the same as if the legislature had first of all passed the general irrigation law which they have passed, and then had annexed to it a proviso that as to the Indians or as to any other class of people in Montana a different rule should apply—clearly in that case it would be a special law; and it is no less clearly a special law because it happened to be passed at a subsequent session of the legislature instead of in the form of a proviso to the very act itself at the same session of the legislature.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who seems to be out of the Chamber just at this moment, asked me, if my statement of the legal proposition was correct, how it happened that in the State of Utah, where we have a similar constitutional provision, we had passed a law for the benefit of these Indians. I answered him that the law of Utah was couched in general terms, but at the moment I could not put my hands upon the provision. I have it now. This provision of the law passed by the Legislature of Utah was passed, it is true, for the benefit of the Indians; it was in consideration of their situation that it was passed; but it, in terms, applies to everybody. This is the provision:

That the State engineer shall have power, for good cause shown, to extend the time for completion of construction or for application to a beneficial use, but in no case shall extensions of time be made that would place the date of proof of completion of construction and the proof of beneficial use more than 14 years from the date of approval, except that the State engineer shall allow extensions of time during which work was prevented by the operation of law beyond the power of said applicant to avoid.

Under that general law, under which an application could have been made by any white man or by any irrigation company just as well as by the Indians, the Secretary of the Interior, or the head of the Indian Bureau, made the application on behalf of these Indians, and the State engineer, under the law and in response to that application, extended the time within which these Indians could complete their works and appropriate their water until December 1, 1919, which gives them a full period of about 13 years.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, very clearly that this amendment calls upon the Legislature of Montana to pass a law which its constitution in express terms absolutely forbids it to pass.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I urge my point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is impressed from the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] that the amendment does call upon the State of Montana to enact a law which, under its constitution, it has no power to enact; but the present occupant of the Chair has very frequently decided that it is not general legislation for the Senate of the United States to provide how an appropriation shall be expended, when it shall be expended, and under what circumstances it may not be expended. While the Chair believes that Montana can never enact this law, the Chair believes that the Senate of the United States has a perfect right to attach a provision to the appropriation that it shall not be spent until such law is enacted, which practically results, of course, in the appropriation not being expended. The Chair does not believe that the amendment is general legislation, but that it is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of the money. So the Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. WHITE. Let the amendment be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 20, after the words "remain available until expended," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That, except as to maintenance, not more than one-third of this amount, nor of any money hereby appropriated for this project, shall be expended until the State of Montana shall have provided by legislative enactment that Indian water rights, or applications for State permits to appropriate water, or State permits to appropriate water for use on Indian land, shall be incontestable for nonuse of water during the time said Indian land is held in trust by the United States, and that beneficial use of water on allotted land made during the time said land is held in trust shall perfect the priority of the water right as of the date of application for permit to appropriate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. [A pause.] The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, is it too late to ask for a count?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has announced the result of the vote. The Chair paused at the time for any objection to be made, and heard none.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I propose the amendment which I send to the desk, and I call the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to negotiate an agreement with the Confederated Bands of the Ute Indians for the final adjudication and settlement of all claims and demands of said Indians against the United States arising under the agreement between said Indians and the United States ratified by the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stats., 199), or under any law, treaty, or agreement, and which has not heretofore been adjudicated, and the said commissioner shall report the result of such negotiations to Congress at the earliest practicable date, and there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for said purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona directs my attention to this proposed amendment. I know very little about it. I know that some years ago we provided that the claims of the Ute Indians respecting their lands in Colorado should be submitted, I think, to the Court of Claims, and a judgment for a very large amount was rendered in favor of the Indians, which we are now in process of liquidating, at least to some extent. I will ask the Senator from Arizona if this amendment applies to other lands in Colorado?

Mr. ASHURST. The amendment, I should state, was prepared wholly by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. It was transmitted to me yesterday, with a letter addressed to me and signed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, June 20, 1914.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for your information and use, a copy of proposed amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, H. R. 12579, concerning the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, and to respectfully inform you that since our talk this morning I have had a conference with Senators SHAFROTH and SMOOT, and that this amendment meets with their approval. Senator SMOOT has agreed to offer the amendment as here stated.

I also respectfully request that the proposed amendment submitted to you yesterday, authorizing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to negotiate an agreement with the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians for the final adjudication and settlement of all claims and demands of said Indians against the United States arising under the agreement ratified by the act of June 15, 1880 (21 Stat., p. 199), to be introduced by Senator SHAFROTH, shall stand as submitted.

These two amendments not only meet with my hearty approval, but are so desirable that I want to indicate my special interest in same and desire that they shall be adopted.

Sincerely, yours,

CATO SELLS, Commissioner.

JUSTIFICATION.

The purpose of this item is to initiate an affirmative movement looking to the final adjustment and settlement of the claims of the Ute Indians growing out of the agreement between them and the United States entered into in the year 1880.

Under that agreement the Utes ceded approximately 15,000,000 acres of land to the United States in trust with power to dispose of the same. Certain charges against the Utes were to be deducted, and the balance due them was to be held in the Treasury as an interest-bearing trust fund.

By suit in the Court of Claims a partial settlement, covering about half of the ceded lands, was accomplished. The final decree of the court was rendered in 1911.

The remaining portion has not been disposed of and probably will not be for many years, as a considerable part of it is classed as coal lands or contains other valuable minerals. In view of the mineral character of this land exact compliance with the original agreement of 1880 is now impossible. Hence the necessity of some substituted mode of settlement.

The matter has been dragging along for many years, and the Indians are entitled to a settlement. It is also to the interest of the United States in this, as in similar cases, to bring the controversy to a close within a reasonable time to avoid the embarrassments incident to the lapse of time, death of witnesses, and loss of record evidence. Moreover, the work of solving the Indian problem must halt so far as the Utes are concerned until their property is ready to be individualized.

Settlement, through negotiation and agreement, is greatly to be preferred to further litigation, not only for the sake of simplicity and economy in procedure, but for the further reason that a suit at this time and under present laws would only serve to settle liabilities which have accrued since the decree of 1911.

I have not had an opportunity to investigate the treaty referred to, nor have I had an opportunity to examine closely the nature of the claims arising under the act of June 15, 1880. The amendment provides for an appropriation of $5,000, so that the Secretary of the Interior may make an investigation as to what claims, if any, the Confederated Bands of Utes may have.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Arizona that I shall not interpose any objection to the amendment. It can be dealt with in conference if there is any objection found to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Page	Smith, Mich.
Borah	James	Perkins	Smoot
Bristow	Jones	Poindexter	Sterling
Bryan	Lane	Ransdell	Sutherland
Camden	Martin, Va.	Reed	Swanson
Chamberlain	Martine, N. J.	Robinson	Thomas
Chilton	Myers	Shafroth	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Nelson	Sheppard	Thornton
Culberson	Newlands	Sherman	Townsend
Dillingham	Norris	Shields	Vardaman
Fletcher	Oliver	Smith, Ariz.	White
Gore	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Hollis	Owen	Smith, Md.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. WALSH]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no objection, the amendments will be concurred in. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I give notice that I desire to reserve the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and, if necessary, the amendment to which it was offered as an amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I move that all amendments not specially reserved be concurred in en bloc.

Mr. GORE. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have all been concurred in.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. In the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the Senate.

Mr. GORE. I gave notice of a reservation.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It was done very expeditiously.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are trying to move along.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It was the intention of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]—and I think he gave notice while the bill was under consideration as in Committee of the Whole—that when the bill reached the Senate he would ask for a separate vote on the amendment relating to the Mississippi Choctaws.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when that notice was given.

Mr. GORE. I think not.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in, for the purpose of allowing a separate vote on the amendment referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in in the Senate will be reconsidered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Chair to say "without objection." If it is put in that way, of course that involves unanimous consent, and I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to reconsider the vote whereby the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in in the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, save the one reserved by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, except the one reserved, were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment reserved by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The SECRETARY. The amendment reserved is the amendment of the committee on page 77, beginning with line 18, down to line 10 on page 78, as amended on motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, as follows:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma and until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is a disputed question under our rules as to whether or not a substitute for that amendment would be considered an amendment in the third degree, and, in order to obviate the necessity of wasting any time discussing that parliamentary objection, I take it the proper course would be to vote down the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi, and to make it known that an independent provision in the nature of a substitute will be offered that will more equitably respond to the real merits of the controversy raised by that amendment.

This is a dispute between different classes of the Choctaw Indians with reference to their right to be entered upon a certain roll as a precedent condition to the right to participate in the distribution of a large fund now belonging to the Choctaw Nation. So far as the respective rights of the parties to that controversy are concerned, I have no disposition to interfere; but I think my friend from Mississippi has offered an amendment that goes very far beyond any rights that he is authorized at this time to assert. The remedy he proposes is altogether too wide for the mischief that he intends to deal with. The proposition is to appropriate to the Choctaws $100 per capita, so that the aggregate amount involved in the appropriation is about $3,500,000. As I understand, there are about 35,000 Indians——

Mr. GORE. It would amount to about $2,700,000.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Two million seven hundred thousand dollars, the Senator from Oklahoma says. The fund aggregates $35,000,000. The effect of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi will be to prevent the distribution of any part of that fund until the controversy between the several classes of Choctaws has been settled. The controversy itself between the different classes of Choctaws has been so elaborately discussed here, and it can be so elaborately discussed at any time the senior Senator from Mississippi is present, that I would not care to say anything or do anything that would invite further discussion of it; but the amendment which I expect to offer and the interest which I intend to take in this controversy is due to the fact that a more equitable plan can be adopted, by which the rights of the particular persons in whose behalf the Senator from Mississippi speaks can be preserved without invading the substantial and obvious rights of another and larger class.

The proposition of the Senator is to tie up the entire fund of $35,000,000. Everything that is due to the Choctaws for whom he speaks can be accomplished by setting aside to them a large enough part of the $35,000,000 to answer any claims that they may hereafter be able to establish. By no sort of estimate that can be made will that sum exceed two or three million dollars; and yet the proposition involved in his amendment is that the entire $35,000,000 shall be withheld and rendered inactive, although 35,000 Indians have qualified as being entitled to have their names entered on that roll. They have not personally excluded from the rolls the Mississippi Choctaws, and the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi will be to penalize that large class of deserving persons for no error, no crime, no wrong which they have perpetrated. The proposition which I intend to offer is a simple proposition to withhold from ultimate distribution a sufficient part of that sum to answer any demands that may hereafter be established in favor of the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will ask the Senator from Arkansas if he would consent that his amendment might be so amended as to direct the Secretary of the Interior to proceed to ascertain what number of the Mississippi Choctaws were entitled to share in this fund?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I should be very glad to do anything of that kind, but it would require legislation hereafter to do it, because if that provision were added to the amendment which I intend to offer it would subject it to a point of order, and the whole thing would go out.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I would suggest to the Senator that if there is a disposition to deal justly with the Mississippi Choctaws I think the Senators would not raise the point of order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The question of dealing justly with the Mississippi Choctaws is a very broad question, and one that is very elaborately argued. It is now claimed that justice has been done to them and tendered to them repeatedly in the past. That will open up a very wide question. What I seek to do now is to withhold from distribution a sufficient amount of money to satisfy any demands that may hereafter be established in favor of the Mississippi Choctaws, and then to permit these other 35,000 Choctaws to have a partial or potential distribution of the very large fund that has accumulated and is now idle.

I send to the desk the amendment which I will offer when the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi is voted down, as I hope it will be. I ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. As a substitute, or in lieu of the amendment offered, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That in making the payments to the Choctaw Nation, provided for in this section, the Secretary of the Interior shall reserve from the gross fund belonging to said nation and under the control of the United States Government a sum sufficient to provide for the payment of such amount as may hereafter be ascertained to be due to the Mississippi Choctaws, in the event the said Choctaws shall be admitted to the citizenship roll of the Choctaw Nation under laws now in existence or hereafter to be enacted. The sum so estimated shall be withheld for distribution pending further action by Congress, and the several payments herein provided for shall be made from such part of said gross fund as may remain after the said sum has been segregated and set aside in accordance with this proviso.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in order to test the sincerity of those who are offering that amendment, I want to amend the amendment by adding to it the following language:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior proceed to ascertain who is entitled to be enrolled as Mississippi Choctaws under article 14 of the treaty of 1830, and without reference to any limitation of time fixed by any statute of the United States.

In that connection I will say that there were 1,110 of these people, in the language of the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], whose claims were pigeonholed for eight years and then turned down because they had not complied with an eight months' proviso in the act.

Now, I will read the balance of the amendment which I am offering to the amendment:

If any Choctaw of the full or half blood—

I am confining it to them now. Any white man can tell an Indian of the full or half blood, and there are no Indians in Mississippi except Choctaws.

If any Choctaw of the full or half blood now residing in Mississippi shall fail or refuse to move to Oklahoma, his allotment shall be sold after 90 days' notice at public auction, and the proceeds of the sale shall be paid to him or his heirs as ascertained under the statutes of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. President, of course I am entirely aware of the fact that the point of order may be made to the amendment to the amendment, and that the point of order would be sustained if made, but I want to test the sincerity of the amendment to which I offer this amendment. I want to demonstrate to the Senate by the fact that the point of order is made, if it shall be made, that there is no desire to do justice to the Mississippi Choctaws.

The Senate of the United States a year ago, upon two or three votes, deliberately after full debate, determined that these people should have justice done to them before we began the work of distributing this Choctaw fund. Do not deceive yourselves a particle. If we once begin the work of distributing this fund those opposing justice to the Mississippi Choctaws will distribute it all before they will ever give the Mississippi Choctaws a chance to be heard in court or anywhere else. That is the resolution of the Oklahoma delegation announced upon the floor of the House of Representatives. Now, I say that Oklahoma ought to have a very large influence in determining Indian affairs, but she ought not to have an exclusive influence in that respect, and I do not think the fact that Oklahoma Choctaws can vote while Mississippi Choctaws can not vote ought to have any influence in determining this question.

Here are property rights of men involved, and a local Oklahoma political situation ought not to affect them. It is not right, it is not honest, it is not straight that it should. Then, at this session we have already had either two or three votes upon this proposition, and the Senate has each time voted in favor of maintaining and asserting the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws.

In that connection I wish to say that that phrase has been used with a double meaning in this debate. I did not catch on to it until when I read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD after the debate last week. The Senators from Oklahoma have used the phrase "Mississippi Choctaws" to cover very much more than the phrase covered when I used it. What I mean by "Mississippi Choctaws" is the Choctaw Indians living in the State of Mississippi, and what these gentlemen meant by it was the Mississippi Choctaws who moved to Oklahoma in 1855 and 1856 and 1857. The senior Senator from Oklahoma said that there were some 3,500 or 4,000 of them out there on the rolls. I said: "Why, at the time Capt. McKennon and I were counting these people to the best of our ability there were not that many of them in the State of Mississippi." It turned out later from the debate that what the Senator meant was a class of people who were classified in Oklahoma as being Mississippi Choctaws because they moved from Mississippi out to Oklahoma in 1855, 1856, and 1857.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one moment. Under that clause you could classify every Choctaw in the Indian Territory as a Mississippi Choctaw, because they all moved from Mississippi at some year or other. I now yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Of course, there were two classes of Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is only one class of Mississippi Choctaws, and that is Choctaws living in the State of Mississippi now.

Mr. GORE. I mean in 1830.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GORE. Those who went to Oklahoma at that time were, of course, not to be classified as Mississippi Choctaws in any instance. There were others who went after the first emigration, in 1855, but I do not characterize them as Mississippi Choctaws. Those whom I have in mind are the Indians who are in Mississippi now, and their alleged descendants in the State of Alabama, and extending as far west as California.

I had a letter from some gentleman in New York yesterday stating that his father was a Choctaw in 1830, or his grandfather, or his great-grandfather, and he thought he ought to come in under the Senator's amendment; and I understand there are some 40,000 claimants.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator must pardon me if he is going to make a speech.

Mr. GORE. I thought the Senator was through. I beg his pardon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about those men, and those of you who heard my amendment to the amendment read a moment ago heard me distinctly say "full-blood and half-blood Choctaw Indians." Now, there are a whole lot of white men all over the United States who are willing to swear that they have any sort of blood in them to get a share in a Government largess. I am not talking about them. I am not trying to take care of them. I do not care a continental about them.

These Indians in Mississippi have not any vote. Mississippi has kept up the limitation on the suffrage expressed in the old phrase: "Indians not taxed. They can not vote in Mississippi." As far as I am concerned my political future and my personal interests are not concerned with the matter at all. They are a poor, illiterate people who might be left out of consideration by any politician in the world if he desired. They could not cast five votes in the entire State of Mississippi. They could not control nor influence five votes in the entire State of Mississippi.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] says that my amendment is "too wide." Now, let me read both amendments, and let us see if they are too wide.

The first one is in these words, Senators:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma.

Remember there are 1,110 of them, by the testimony of the senior Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. The senior Senator from Oklahoma has given no such testimony.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, well, it was in a brief filed by the senior Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. No, sir; the senior Senator from Oklahoma filed no brief. The senior Senator from Oklahoma sits on this floor as a Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, well, I understand. I mean the man, Robert L. Owen, filed a brief then, and not the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator has kept referring to "the senior Senator from Oklahoma" in that connection, and it would appear that the Senator representing Oklahoma had made some remarks of that kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not mean that the Senator, as representing Oklahoma, filed that brief, and nobody so misunderstood me. I meant that the man Robert L. Owen filed it, and the man ROBERT L. OWEN, now a Senator from Oklahoma, made the statement that there are 1,110 of them whose names were pigeonholed here for eight months, and who, after they had gotten out of the pigeonhole, were, of course, barred by the statute of limitations on the eight months' period. There is only one Robert L. Owen.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator ought at the same time to state that the Dawes Commission, during the period from 1898 to 1907, for nine years, was considering the claim of any Mississippi Choctaw who was presented, and recognized all those who could come within the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Mississippi did not make that statement, because the Senator from Mississippi did not know that to be the fact. It may be, but the Senator from Mississippi does not know it to be a fact even now.

I understand that when those people went later to have their rights recognized they were met with the fact that they had slept upon their rights over and beyond the eight months that were given them in the original law, although the fact is that during that eight months their claims had been pigeonholed in the city of Washington, and they had never gotten any notice of the fact that they were entitled to be put upon the rolls, and therefore they had never gotten any notice of the fact that they ought to remove to Oklahoma, because the original law of 1902 provided that they were given, I believe it was, six months, or whatever it was—some period, at any rate—within which, after "the final approval of the roll," they could remove to Oklahoma. Here were these men with their claims pigeonholed and no notice given to them at all that their names had been approved, and therefore no opportunity to avail themselves of this condition subsequent, which was to remove to Oklahoma.

So much for that; but the Senator from Arkansas says that the amendment is too wide. I am sorry that he said it. Watch the amendment:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until—

Until when? Is this too wide?

Until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma, and until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled—

I am putting nobody upon the roll. I am distributing nothing.

Until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation.

"Found entitled." Is that too wide?

Now let me come to my amendment now proposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. What is that?

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior proceed to ascertain who is entitled to be enrolled as Mississippi Choctaws under article 14 of the treaty of 1830—

That is the Dancing Rabbit treaty, negotiated by the second founder—the restorer—of the Democratic Party, Andrew Jackson—and without reference to any limitation of time fixed by any statute.

Of course that is new legislation, because when you say "without reference to any limitation of time fixed by any statute" it is new legislation. It makes it amenable to the point of order; but the point is whether or not these gentlemen are going to make the point of order. Of course everybody knows that if they do not make it, it will go through all right, and everybody knows that the limitation of six or eight months, whichever it was, to which these people were subjected in the law of 1902, was a thing which was apples to the eye and ashes to the taste, because they never even got notice of the fact that they were entitled to be enrolled, and therefore got no time and no opportunity to remove to Oklahoma if they had wanted to.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, may I remind the Senator that the agreement of 1902 authorized them to be notified before they were required to remove, and they had six months after they got the notice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but they were to be notified whenever they were entered upon the rolls, and were to have six months after "final approval of the roll:"; and then their names were pigeonholed for eight months, and still later they were never entered upon the rolls, but were denied this approval of the approval, and therefore could not be notified, and never were notified.

Now, I want to call attention to another thing in the act of 1902; and unless I am mistaken, as I may be—and if I am, the Senator from Oklahoma will correct me—he and I together drew up that amendment. I had the book here the other day, but it has been taken away. This is the language of it, however, and I can quote it literally:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall affect the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. OWEN. That was 1898, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I beg the Senator's pardon. It was 1902.

Mr. OWEN. No; it was in the Curtis Act of 1898.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, while the Senator from Mississippi is waiting for the book I believe I can make an announcement that will simplify this matter somewhat.

In view of the fact that he has offered that amendment and proposes to open up anew the discussion of the whole Mississippi Choctaw question, I believe I will just withdraw the amendment entirely and allow whatever vote is had in the Senate this afternoon to be upon the adoption or rejection of the amendment offered by him.

Just one word in explanation of why I did it. The Senator's original amendment did not propose any legislation at this time, but outlined a new procedure by which the Mississippi Choctaws should have adjudicated their right to be entered upon the Choctaw rolls. He simply proposed to hold up the entire payment of $100 per capita provided for in these acts. I modified his proposition only to the extent of setting aside a sufficient amount of the $35,000,000 to answer any judgment that might hereafter be established. I did not contemplate, and I do not want to detain the Senate now with any proposition that would precipitate a discussion of the entire Mississippi Choctaw question again, so I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. President, I shall direct myself to the main question. I am very glad the Senator from Arkansas has withdrawn his amendment, and, of course, I will withdraw the amendment to the amendment, because there is left nothing to amend.

I want to settle this matter of dispute between the senior Senator from Oklahoma and myself though, if I can find the part of the act to which I referred, and I think I can. I had it marked here the other day in a copy of the law left upon my desk, but it has been removed.

I have it now. This is the language to which I referred, and this language was agreed upon by Mr. OWEN and myself at that time—

That nothing contained in this act—

This is the act of 1898:

Provided, however That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to militate against any rights or privileges which the Mississippi Choctaws may have under the laws of or the treaties with the United States.

That language I also had inserted and repeated verbally in the act of 1902.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator is mistaken about that, I think.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not mistaken. I will try to find it, but I know I am not. I had it here the other day and marked it, but the particular copy of the act which I marked has been taken away.

Here it is. I now read from the act of 1902:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall apply to any person or persons—

I said I had repeated it verbally. It seems now that I repeated only the substance of the act of 1898.

That nothing in this section shall apply to any person or persons making application for enrollment as Mississippi Choctaws for whom provision has herein otherwise been made.

This act contained other provisions referring to the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. OWEN. That is very different language, Mr. President, and has a very different meaning.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, the language is slightly different, but it means exactly the same thing, and it was intended by me to mean the same thing. I recall now that I thought it was better than the original language, because the original language was involved in prepositions. One was "laws of and treaties with the United States," and I never liked to have two prepositions applying to one substantive. Otherwise the two clauses are precisely the same in meaning, and were intended to be.

The Senator from Arkansas says that I am trying to punish these Choctaws in Oklahoma for crimes which they have never perpetrated. Haven't they? Are they not refusing right now, and are not all the members of the Oklahoma delegation in the Senate and in the House refusing right now to permit these people in Mississippi to have a real day in court; and are they not pretending to represent the Oklahoma Choctaws when they do it? Was not this agreement entered into between the United States Government and the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma, in which the Choctaws in Mississippi were left out of consideration entirely and never consulted, an injury done them by the Oklahoma Choctaws? Are you going to tell me that the Choctaws in Oklahoma were not responsible for that agreement? Are you going to tell me that their attorneys, one great firm of whom collected a fee of seven hundred and thirty-odd thousand dollars, I believe, and proudly swore afterwards that they were responsible for all the Indian legislation out there for several years, a firm employed by the Five Civilized Tribes, had nothing to do with it? Of course, they had something to do with it, and they have something to do with it.

My friend from Arkansas, for whom I have a higher personal affection than for almost any man in this body, and who has been kinder and nicer to me than anybody in this body, without exception, tells me that I am trying "to hold up these people." Yes; in a certain sense, of course, I am. I try to be the frankest of human beings, as far as I can be, with my limited intelligence, and what I mean is that I know if these people in Oklahoma and their congressional representatives take the first step to distribute this fund without any regard to the Mississippi Choctaws, they will take the second, and the third, and the fourth, and the fifth, and the sixth, and the tenth, until the fund is exhausted, and we will never have any rights at all.

My friend from Arkansas offered an amendment in which he says that we are to hold back a certain amount of it and estimate what will be needed. That will go this Congress; it might go next Congress, and then the next Congress; then what? The Congress after that, what? After a while we would not have enough to pay both, and then they would just dispense with the proposed provision, you see, and so the Mississippi Choctaws would be left where they were in the first place and are now.

I want the Senate to do these people justice. I hardly know how to express it. It is not exalted justice. It is plain, simple fairness that I am calling upon you to do. I am not calling upon you for any special favors for them. I am simply calling upon you to see to it that between them and their brethren in blood, the only bond of citizenship among uncivilized tribes—and this was a tribal affair when it started—there shall be a fair distribution. That is all. What does my amendment say?

The amendment does not call on you to give them anything. It simply says that this distribution shall not begin, "the provisions of this act shall not be applicable" to members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma, "until Congress" has done what? "Until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls"; that is, the finally approved rolls.

Why, Senators, do you know that after that roll had been pigeonholed here for eight years, it was finally disapproved by the Secretary of the Interior, who at that time I believe was Mr. Hitchcock, without notice to a Mississippi Choctaw in the world, and disapproved upon what grounds? That they had not been able to prove who their grandfathers' grandfathers were; in many cases who their great-grandfathers' great-grandfathers were; and yet there were two classes of these Mississippi Choctaws, one of the full blood, claiming as full bloods and in all ways, and the other of these people claiming as descendants of these patentees who were required to prove who their great-grandfathers' great-grandfathers were; in other words, that their ancestors were patentees. How many of you could prove it?

Oh, the Senator from Oklahoma on yesterday said that the Dawes Commission had 30 days in which to pass upon these people's claims, and that "30 days was entirely too short a period." Too short a period to do what? Too short a period to determine who could prove who were their grandfathers' grandfathers? Maybe so. Yet that, I assert, is not too short a period to determine who were full-blooded Choctaws or were even half-blood Choctaws. There are no other Indians in the State of Mississippi, and there have not been for half a century, except Choctaws. The Pastagoulas have gone the way of the lost tribes of Israel. The Mobiles moved away very early, and, like the wind, no one knows whither. Neither one of them was ever any great tribe. They were disconnected fragments of tribes and they gathered by the peaceful waters of the Gulf, fishermen for the most part, and when the time came for the clash with the white man they all went. But the Mississippi Choctaw tied himself to the white man's heartstrings by years of service and of friendship and of love, fighting with him side by side with Andrew Jackson and with "Mad Anthony" Wayne. These Mississippi Choctaws stayed, and there were no other Indians in Mississippi when the Dawes Commission sent the subcommittee there. Capt. McKennon knew that. The Dawes Commission knew it.

One other word, Mr. President, and then I shall conclude. Again and again in this debate it has been asserted that the Dawes Commission and the United States Supreme Court approved of the action of Judge Clayton and his decision. Judge Clayton ruled one way and Judge Townsend ruled another, the first that the Mississippi Choctaws must move to have right and the second that they need not. There were two judges of the Federal court out there, and the Supreme Court never did affirm the decision of Judge Clayton. What the Supreme Court said was, "Congress has vested in these Federal courts in the Indian Territory final jurisdiction upon this subject," and that it—the Supreme Court—had no jurisdiction to consider an appeal upon the merits, and therefore the case was dismissed, just as when you go to the Supreme Court from a decision of the Immigration Bureau deporting a Chinaman, the Supreme Court has said "We have no jurisdiction upon this question." Congress has erected an administrative and judicial tribunal having final jurisdiction.

There is a case, Senators—and, by the way, it ought to interest us for another reason, because we do not want tyranny in the United States—where a Chinaman was born in the United States, and left and went to China and came back and was arrested and ordered to be deported. That case was carried to the Supreme Court by a lawyer upon habeas corpus. I have put it in the RECORD once in the Fifty-ninth or Sixtieth Congress in a speech on "Federal usurpation." That court decided that they could not listen to the fact that this man had been born in America and that he had gone to China on a visit, but that because the Immigration Bureau had decided adversely to him—had ordered him deported—and Congress had erected that bureau as an administrative functionary to dispose of such questions, the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction on appeal or in review.

Now, one or the other thing is true. The Senator from Oklahome—not then Senator from Oklahoma, but plain Mr. OWEN—went on once to show that there had been "underground influences" exercised against these Mississippi Choctaws during the whole history of this procedure. One of the "underground influences" was this act that equipped the Federal court in Oklahoma with power of final decisions without appeal.

Subject to local influences of course these courts were, yet once they decided adversely and decided that the Mississippi Choctaws were compelled to remove, that was final. Subject to local interests and local influences it was given final jurisdiction, and neither the Dawes Commission nor the Supreme Court of the United States had any authority or right under law to sit in judgment upon what they once decided or determined right or wrong.

Now that was in no proper sense a decision on the merit of what had taken place. It was merely a denial of jurisdiction to reconsider or to rehear.

Mr. President, I hope that no argument, public or private, that has been made in connection with this case will blind the eyes of the Congress of the United States or the Senate of the United States to the fact that these poor, illiterate, unbefriended people have no representative here at all except voluntary representatives who help them out of sentiment, and that the Senate of the United States will not permit the beginning to be made of the distributing of these funds in which they have an undeniable interest until they have had a proper hearing in Congress, so that Congress may repeal those parts of past laws which have been unjust to them.

And with that I leave the case with the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but three minutes.

The Congress of the United States in 1896—18 years ago—directed the Dawes Commission to make up these rolls. That commission worked at the rolls for 11 years. Appeals were allowed from the Dawes Commission to Judge Clayton's court. Appeals were allowed from the Dawes Commission to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General of the United States, and case after case was heard and rereferred to the Dawes Commission. Sometimes as many as three times a case came back to the Interior Department. Finally, upon the prayer of the Five Civilized Tribes and their representatives, the Congress of the United States, after 10 long, tedious years of these hearings, directed the rolls to be permanently closed on the 4th day of March, 1907—seven years ago.

Special consideration was given to the Mississippi Choctaws. I was their attorney. They were permitted to be exempt from the rule of the Curtis Act of 1898, which laid down the rule that no person should be enrolled as a citizen of the Five Civilized Tribes who had not previously to that time established in good faith his residence there. A part of my family were cut off from the Cherokee rolls because they lived in Virginia. I had one brother of a common mother enrolled, while a brother and sister of the same mother were rejected under that rule. It was a just rule however; it was a common-sense rule. But the Mississippi Choctaws had the peculiar privilege of not being bound by that rule until they had a special opportunity to be heard.

This commission was directed by Congress in 1897 to examine into their claims and ascertain what their claims were. They found that unless they had moved to Oklahoma and been identified by a competent tribunal they were not entitled.

Judge Clayton, of the United States court, having special jurisdiction of that case, made the same decision, and the law of Congress, not the law of the Choctaws of the Indian Territory, but the law of Congress, made Judge Clayton's decision on appeal from the Dawes Commission final. The matter went up to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court said that under the law the decision was final.

The Dawes Commission was instructed to identify those claims and those rights, and they went to Mississippi in 1898, and on March 10, 1899, they reported out the 1,900 persons whom they had found in Mississippi who appeared of this blood, but they declared these persons could not prove their descent from the fourteenth-article claimants; that they could not prove who their ancestors were; that they could not prove themselves within the rule of the treaty, and upon that report the Secretary of the Interior declined to enroll them as entitled.

The Dawes Commission from 1899 up to 1907 had individual Mississippi Choctaws under consideration from time to time. When the Choctaws and Chickasaws tried to buy their peace with regard to the Mississippi Choctaw question in 1902 they agreed in articles 41, 42, 43, and 44 that they would waive the requirements of evidence as to the full-blood Mississippi Choctaws and would not require them to prove who their fathers were, would not require them to prove that they were entitled under the fourteenth article, because they could not, but would waive that evidence if they would agree that within six months they would remove and establish bona fide residences. Under that rule 1,642 moved from Mississippi into Oklahoma. Attorneys were busy during that period urging these people to move. The Dawes Commission sent runners all over Mississippi to notify them. The Dawes Commission had spent large amounts of money and much energy in trying to get this information to these people and getting them to remove. There are still a few of the Choctaws who love the squirrels of the Yiogehnougheny, of whom the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] so pathetically speaks, and I suppose they never will remove. Perhaps their attachment to the Senator from Mississippi is so great that they would not be willing to cross out of that State and leave it.

But, Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, there must come some time when a community of people shall be entitled to their peace. These people had from 1898 to 1907, eleven years, to present their claims, and they were fully heard and the case settled finally on March 4, 1907, and I appeal to the Senate to support the committee and support the Interior Department in not reopening these rolls or lay the foundation where it should be expected that the rolls would be opened hereafter.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I discussed this question at some length the other day. I do not intend to impose another tax on the patience or the time of the Senate. I may say that my own time is fleeting at this moment. It is my purpose, if possible, to take the 6 o'clock train if this can be brought to an issue. I do not know the status—whether a motion to disagree or whether a motion to table would be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion and the Chair so understood the Senator from Oklahoma to state that the question which he had reserved for a special vote of the Senate is the question whereby the Senate as in Committee of the Whole adopted the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, and the Chair was about to put the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In this connection I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry and possibly a point of order. The Senate in Committee of the Whole having adopted my amendment as an amendment to the committee amendment, and then having adopted the committee amendment as amended, can a motion be made to reconsider or have a separate vote upon my amendment to the amendment without making the motion apply to the entire amendment as amended?

Mr. GORE. If the motion to strike out the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi should be adopted, the Senate would be obliged to vote on a motion to ratify the amendment of the committee made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment as amended was subsequently adopted, and of course no one knows whether the Senate would have adopted the amendment of the committee if it had not been amended by my amendment. Therefore it seems to me logical, and I think it is good parliamentary law, that the question must be taken upon the entire amendment as amended, which was adopted. The chances are that the Senate never would have adopted the committee amendment standing by itself without my amendment to it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think there is no difference between the Senator from Mississippi and myself in regard to the parliamentary status, though we may both be wrong. If the motion to disagree to the Senator's amendment should prevail, it would of course be necessary to adopt the amendment of the committee without that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is where the Senator is mistaken. The Senator has a right to a separate vote upon the amendment to the amendment. The amendment remains in the bill unless a separate vote has been demanded upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is quite satisfied with itself at least.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Chair is satisfied with itself I am satisfied with the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the status: The vote will be first on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi as to whether it shall be agreed to, and if it is not agreed to, then there must be a vote on the committee amendment.

Mr. GORE. That is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As it was before it was amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As it was before it was amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the decision of the Chair is right. I merely made the parliamentary inquiry because I wanted to get the status.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question will be put by the Chair, Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Lane	Perkins	Sterling
Bankhead	Lee, Md.	Poindexter	Sutherland
Bryan	Martin, Va.	Pomerene	Swanson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GORE. If it be in order, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order to table an amendment that has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORE. I confess I was not advised.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I believe that the necessity for making a decision on that point at this time may be obviated by allowing the vote to come straight on the amendment. The precedents reported in Gilfry's text indicate that, after debate, the Senate decided that an amendment made as in Committee of the Whole can be tabled in the Senate.

Mr. GORE. To obviate any question of order, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am sure the Chair is familiar with the rule, but probably has made up his mind not to follow it. The question has arisen, however, several times in the Senate, and it has been decided that amendments made as in Committee of the Whole may be tabled in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair in this particular instance has been impressed with this condition of affairs: There was a committee amendment; the Senator from Mississippi moved an amendment to that amendment, which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair has not any doubt that the entire amendment can be tabled, if that is what the Senator from Oklahoma wants to do; but the Chair, for the purpose of expediting matters and not as a universal rule to be followed, thought that a vote on this one question would settle the entire subject.

Mr. GORE. To obviate any question, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. With the explanation of the Chair, it is all right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I very much prefer to have a full attendance of the Senate when this matter is voted upon, and I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All in favor of the motion of the Senator from Mississippi, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, will rise. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] The ayes have it; and the motion is agreed to.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 24, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 23, 1914.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 23, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

With inexpressible gratitude we bow in Thy holy presence, Father in heaven, for all the blessings vouchsafed unto us, especially for the faith, hope, love, which Thou hast woven into our being; indissoluble ties which bind us to Thee and to all mankind. Strengthen these qualities of soul that all the world may move forward to the ideal civilization in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, in looking over the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill, which is printed in the RECORD of June 22, 1914, I find that the clerks of the two committees have made some errors in reference to page numbers, and in order to save the House confusion, and to aid the enrolling clerk, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the conference report and the papers in the case.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to withdraw the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill because of some arithmetical errors. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield for one moment?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, my attention was called to amendment No. 106, providing for the extension of the franking privilege. Does the gentleman contemplate having this report go back into conference?

Mr. LEVER. Not at all. Later I am going to present the report with the corrections made in it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that amendment is subject to a point of order, because the committee went beyond its province.

The SPEAKER. That is a question that will arise when the conference report is up for consideration. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 14034, the naval appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee calls up the conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 853).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 14, 15, 16, 18, 39, 42, 43, 44, 50, 54, 66, 68, 70, and 72.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 13, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 32, 41, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 69, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "only," insert the following: "and officers of the Construction Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of Senate amendment insert the following: "June 30, 1917"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Under authority of the House granted to change totals not in conference, the committee on conference amended the bill as follows: Page 20 of the bill, line 21, strike out "$170,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$180,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Naval Proving Ground, Indianhead, Md.: Toward extension of powder factory (cost not to exceed $500,000) $200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out the following: "For fuel-oil storage, at some point accessible to the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma, to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy, $150,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 38: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Line 7 of said amendment, strike out "$150,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 45: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, after the word "men," insert the following: "of the Navy and Marine Corps"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 1 of said amendment, after the word "type," insert the following: "to have a surface speed of not less than 20 knots"; in line 5 of said amendment, after the word "expended," strike out the comma, insert a period, and strike out the words "and the" and in lieu thereof insert "The"; in line 10 of said amendment, after the word "said," insert the words "eight or more"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out said amendment and in lieu there of insert the following:

"Thereafter there shall be charged against the several appropriations for the support of the Naval Establishment the overhead charges incident to upkeep and to industrial work at navy yards and stations. The total sum so charged shall be distributed in accordance with the work done in the various yards and stations in order that the cost of work may be determined."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 67: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and the Senate agree to the same.

On the amendments of the Senate numbered 28, 29, 33, 40, and 71 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted by the accompanying report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

Amendments Nos. 1 and 2: Provide for an increase of $104,000 in the appropriation "Contingent, Navy," to provide a fund for entertaining the officers and crews of foreign fleets which may be sent to attend and participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in consequence of the invitation of the President of the United States, extended in pursuance of the authority contained in the joint resolution approved February 15, 1911, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 3: Provides that tolls shall not be assessed against or collected from any war vessel of any foreign nation which may pass through the Panama Canal en route to or returning from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, provided such vessel has been sent by its Government to attend and participate in said exposition, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 4: Provides that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to define and establish suitable anchorage grounds in Hampton Roads and San Francisco Bay for the combined fleets of the United States and foreign Governments which may rendezvous in these waters during their attendance at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 5: Provides that officers who now perform engineering duty on shore only shall be eligible for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grade to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them, and the House recedes with an amendment by which officers of the Construction Corps and the officers above named are eligible for any shore duty to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them.

Amendment No. 6: Increases the appropriation for recruiting from $130,000 to $150 000, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 7: Permits the employment of more than one advertising agency in advertising for recruits, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 8, 9, and 10: Extend to the Revenue-Cutter Service the right of any alien of 21 years of age and upward who may, under existing law, become a citizen of the United States and has served or may hereafter serve for four years in the Revenue-Cutter Service and receive therefrom an honorable discharge or an ordinary discharge with recommendation for reenlistment, to be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition without any previous declaration of his intention to become such, and without proof of residence on shore, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 11: Increases the appropriation for gunnery exercises from $100,000 to $115,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 12: Provides for the producing of American charts and sailing directions to replace those of foreign production, which now have to be purchased abroad, and for this purpose the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to detail such naval officers as may be necessary to the Hydrographic Office, and the House recedes with an amendment by striking out said amendment and in lieu thereof providing for the detail of not exceeding four naval officers to the Hydrographic Office.

Amendment No. 13: Provides that the pensions of beneficiaries of the naval home shall be disposed of in the same manner as prescribed for inmates of the soldiers' home, except that in case of death of any beneficiary leaving no heirs at law nor next of kin any pension due him shall escheat to the naval pension fund, subject to certain provisions, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 14, 15, and 16: Make certain appropriations in the Bureau of Ordnance "available until expended," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 17: Makes the appropriations for "torpedoes and appliances" "available until expended." The House recedes with an amendment making that appropriation available until June 30, 1917.

Amendment No. 18: Includes the Naval Observatory in the appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks," without increasing the appropriation, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 19 and 20: Strike out the House provisions for building slips and equipment at navy yard, Boston, Mass., to cost $148,000, and the provision whereby the unexpended balance under the appropriation "Marine barracks, Boston, Mass.," for the fiscal year 1914 is covered back into the Treasury, and provides that the unobligated balance under the appropriation "Marine barracks, Boston, Mass.," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, not exceeding $148,000, is made available for building slips and equipment at Boston, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 21: Increases the appropriation to complete Pier D from $12,000 to $25,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 22: Increases the limit of cost of Pier C from $130,000 to $150,000 with no increase in appropriation, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 23: Provides an appropriation of $8,500 to extend the second floor mold loft in the navy yard, New York, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 24: Is a change of total and an increase of $21,500.

Amendments Nos. 25 and 26: Provide for a "building slip and equipment" at the Philadelphia Navy Yard to cost $200,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 27: Provides for a fireproof general storehouse, Washington Navy Yard, D. C., cost not to exceed $225,000, with an appropriation of $100,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 30: Increases the appropriation for dredging at navy yard, Charleston, S. C., from $10,000 to $20,000, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 31: Makes the sum of $207,000 for improvement of hydraulics, Mare Island Straits, "to be immediately available," and provides an appropriation of $20,000 for dredging and diking Mare Island Straits, and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the words "to be immediately available."

Amendment No. 32: Is a change of total.

Amendment No. 35: Provides for an appropriation of $500,000 toward the extension of the powder factory at the Naval Proving Grounds, Indianhead, Md., and the House recedes with an amendment whereby an appropriation of $200,000 is made and a limit of cost of the extension to the powder factory is fixed at $500,000.

Amendment No. 36: Provides for a fuel-oil storage, San Francisco, Cal., to cost $100,000, and for a fuel-oil storage at some point accessible to the oil fields of Texas and Oklahoma, to cost $150,000, and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the provision for oil storage at a point accessible to Texas and Oklahoma.

Amendment No. 37: Is a change of total and makes the whole appropriation "available until expended," and the House recedes with an amendment striking out the words "to be available until expended."

Amendment No. 38: Provides an appropriation of $150,000 for naval disciplinary barracks at Puget Sound, Wash., and Port Royal, S. C., and the House recedes with an amendment reducing the appropriation to $75,000.

Amendment No. 39: Places the Naval Observatory in the appropriation "Repairs and preservation at navy yards and stations" without increasing the appropriation, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 41: Allows the expenditure of $40,000 from the naval hospital fund for the erection of such temporary structures and equipment of the naval hospitals at Mare Island and Puget Sound as may be necessary to relieve the crowded condition of those institutions and make special preparation for the sick of the Navy and visiting fleets at the time of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 42: Makes appropriation for "Transportation of remains" available until expended, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 43: Provides for an increase of pay of the dental surgeon at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., of $200 per year based upon 15 years' service at this institution as a civilian dentist, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 44: Excludes the men of the Navy that are detailed for duty with the naval militia in being counted in the enlisted strength of the Navy, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 45: Provides that the number of enlisted men of the Navy shall be construed to mean the daily average number of enlisted men in the naval service during the fiscal year, and the House recedes with an amendment making the provision apply to the enlisted men of the Marine Corps as well as the Navy.

Amendments Nos. 46, 47, and 48: Provide for an increase in the corps of chaplains in the Navy by allowing 1 chaplain to each 1,250 of the total personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, which increases the number now allowed by law from 24 to 52, and also provides for a probationary period in the grade of acting chaplain of three years' sea service on board ship before a commission is granted. The amendment provides for no increase in the pay of chaplains, but only increases the number, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 49: Permits the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow the members of the Nurse Corps the amounts which have been checked against them for commutation of subsistence under the decisions of the comptroller dated December 21, 1912, and April 29, 1913, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 50: Provides that the amounts credited to the naval supply account from stores, equipage, and supplies turned in from ships be "available until expended," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 51: Provides that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized in his discretion to issue free of cost the national flag used for draping the coffin of any officer or enlisted man of the Navy or Marine Corps whose death occurs while in the service of the United States, upon request, to the relatives of the deceased officer or enlisted man, or, upon request, to the school, patriotic order, or society to which the deceased officer or man belonged, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 52: Is a change of verbiage without any change of effect, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 54: Provides that unobligated and unexpended balances of the appropriation "Steam machinery" shall be "available until expended," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 55: Provides that there may be appointed annually, from the enlisted men of the Navy who are citizens of the United States and not more than 20 years of age and who have served not less than one year, 15 enlisted men to the United States Naval Academy, to be selected in the order of merit by competitive examinations prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, and such men so selected are required to pass the physical and mental examination now required by law for entrance to the Naval Academy, and the House recedes with an amendment by which the candidates are selected in the order of merit as a result of competition in the examination now or hereafter required by law for entrance to the Naval Academy.

Amendment No. 56: Strikes out the provision which provides $200,000 for building slips and equipment in order to equip a navy yard for building a battleship, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 57: Provides for the submarine boats by lumping the appropriations provided by the House and makes the appropriations available until expended, and the House recedes with an amendment which restricts the speed of the seagoing submarine to not less than 20 knots on the surface.

Amendment No. 58: Is a change of verbiage without any change of effect, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 59: Provides that the Secretary of the Navy in estimating the actual cost of a ship built by the Government may deduct from the estimated cost of such ship as built under the appropriation therefor any sums which he deems not to be just to be charged thereto, and the House recedes, with an amendment whereby the various appropriations for the support of the naval establishments may be charged with the overhead charges incident to upkeep and industrial work at navy yards and stations, and the sums so charged to be distributed in accordance with the work done at the various yards and stations so that the cost of work may be determined.

Amendment No. 60: Is a change of verbiage, owing to a previous amendment, without any change in effect, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 61: Strikes out building slips and equipment under the appropriation "Construction and machinery," and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 62: Strikes out the word "steam," making the appropriation apply to all kinds of machinery as well as steam machinery, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 63, 64, and 65: Make appropriations under "Increase of the Navy" available until expended, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 66: Provides an appropriation of $8,000 for an correction of acoustics of the United States Naval Academy chapel and auditorium, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 67: Provides for a committee to investigate the cost of the erection of an armor plant to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel, and gives said committee authority to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and appropriates the sum of $5,000 for the expense of said committee, and the House agreed, with an amendment whereby the committee is to be composed of the chairmen of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and one naval officer, to be selected by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate and report at the next regular session of Congress upon the cost of erection of an armor plant of both 20,000 and 10,000 tons capacity to enable the United States to manufacture its own armor plate and special-treatment steel. The committee is given authority to sit during the recess of Congress and to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths. The sum of $5,000 is appropriated to defray the expenses of the committee; and the Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House.

Amendment No. 68: Makes a total "available until expended," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 69: Is a change of total, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 70: In the paragraph in the House bill which limited all appropriations for the procuring of any vessels, armament, articles, or materials which the navy yards, gun factories, or other industrial plants operated by the Navy Department are equipped to supply to procuring them from Government plants, the Senate struck out the requirement that Government plants be "operated approximately at their full capacity for not less than one regular shift each working day, except when contract costs are less than costs in said Government plants," and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 72: Makes all appropriations contained in the bill immediately available, and the Senate recedes.

The committee of conference has been unable to agree on the following amendments:

Amendment No. 28: Navy yard, Norfolk, Va., new dry dock (cost not to exceed $3,000,000), $200,000.

Amendment No. 29: In all, navy yard, Norfolk, Va., $225,000.

Amendment No. 33: Naval station, Key West, Fla.: toward construction of breakwater (limit of contract, $600,000), $100,000.

Amendment No. 40: Change of total.

Amendment No. 71: Provides that the President may, in his discretion, direct the sale in such manner, at such price, and upon such terms as he shall deem proper, of the battleships

Idaho and Mississippi. All moneys received from the sale of said vessels shall, after payment therefrom of the expenses of such sale, be deposited by the Secretary of the Navy in the Treasury, and shall, until expended, be available for the construction of such other vessel or vessels, at least equal for the purposes of offense and defense to the most modern vessels of the same class now projected here or abroad, as the President may in his discretion authorize: Provided, That no vessel shall be sold, exchanged, or conveyed under this authorization unless such sale, exchange, or conveyance, or the agreement therefor, shall have been made prior to July 1, 1915: Provided further, That any vessel constructed from the money received from the sale of the Mississippi and Idaho shall not be included in the annual appropriation for the increase of the Navy; and the Senate recedes.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
THOMAS S. BUTLER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The conference report was not read, but the statement was. On amendment No. 71, in reference to the sale of the battleships, the statement of the conferees is that the Senate recedes.

Mr. PADGETT. That is a mistake in the statement. I had not noticed it in the printed report. That is not in the conference report.

Mr. MANN. It might be a very serious mistake where the conference report is not read and the statement is, and the statement of the conferees is that the Senate recedes from the amendment which is in controversy and from which the Senate does not recede.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know how that got into the statement of the conferees. I had not noticed it. It is a misprint in some way.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. What is the purpose and what is the effect of amendment No. 5, that officers who now perform engineering duty on shore only shall be eligible for any shore duty compatible with their rank and grades to which the Secretary of the Navy may assign them? In that respect the conferees went beyond their jurisdiction, but I did not make the point of order. I would like to know what the effect of it is.

Mr. PADGETT. In the personnel bill of 1899 there were certain officers in the engineer corps when it was amalgamated with the line that were limited to shore duty only in engineering. These men have been working and developing, and the department recommended that they should be allowed to be assigned to any shore duty and not to any sea duty to which they would be capable of being assigned.

Mr. MANN. And it will keep a few more of them on shore?

Mr. PADGETT. These are limited to shore duty, anyway. They can not go to sea by the act of 1899. This is simply to broaden the work to which they can be assigned on shore duty.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it will make more of them if they have to do something else.

Mr. PADGETT. No. They are the same ones. This does not increase the number. The number is decreasing all the while as they get older and retire under the retirement law.

Mr. MANN. Is that true also of the construction corps?

Mr. PADGETT. No. This is to broaden the work of the construction corps. It was to allow the Secretary to use the members of the construction corps in the navy-yard work. Theirs is a shore duty anyway, and they are among the very best qualified men we have, and we inserted it for the purpose of giving the Secretary authority to assign these construction men to industrial work in the navy yards.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that under the existing law they can not be put at work in reference to construction; that is, actual construction?

Mr. PADGETT. As I understand it, only in the hull department.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 28.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House further insist on its disagreement to amendment of the Senate No. 28.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—yeas 54, noes 1.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, amendment numbered 29 is a change of total. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to amendment numbered 29.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 29.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 33, naval station, Key West, Fla.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 33.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] wishes 10 minutes, and I yield that time to the gentleman.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the House conferees could have seen their way clear ere this to accept the Senate amendment, for, in my judgment, that amendment provides for work very much needed and which ought to be done without any further, or at least without any great, delay. The answer to that statement may be that the Secretary of the Navy has not recommended this appropriation; that is, that the present Secretary has not done so. I wish to say, however, in response, if the claim is made, that Secretary Meyer just before his term of office expired—I think in December, 1912—recommended to the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs in very strong language this very improvement, and since then I have seen nothing coming from the Navy Department recalling or superseding that recommendation. The recommendation of Secretary Meyer is contained in a letter to the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs of December 7, 1912, in which, after stating several different kinds of work which he thought should be done at the naval station at Key West, work which he said was of very great importance, he goes on to say:

> Further developments of the naval station and adjacent water front will be of little value unless at least a semi-inclosed basin is provided, not only as a protection against heavy seas and hurricane winds, but to make it possible to retain the dredged depth at piers and along the water front. Under existing conditions storms from a southerly direction carry sand around Fort Taylor, rapidly filling in such areas as have already been dredged.

Now, this work for which the Senate amendment provides, and which the then Secretary thought of very great importance, must be done, he said, before the other necessary works can be undertaken. In other words, they must be held up until the breakwater is completed and the harbor finished. Further on in the same letter he says:

> With these harbor improvements assured, the department contemplates the systematic development of the navy yard at Key West for the purposes outlined in paragraph 1 of this letter.

Now, that letter is inserted in the hearings had before the committee last winter when that body was gathering material for the preparation of the naval bill, the one now under consideration. Admiral Stanford, then testifying before the committee, after this letter was produced, and I presume read, further said:

> The sea wall and pier has recently been completed by the Navy at a cost of nearly $200,000. Last March there was a depth of water off the face of the wall varying from 3 to 6 and 8 feet. The Navy has also recently completed the construction of marine ways; last March the outer end of the ways was embedded in sand, which made it impracticable to use the ways as expected. There is absolutely no protection at the station against storms from the south or from any western point of the compass, either against the direct force of the wind or from the sea which a storm would produce, and it is necessary for all small craft in time of storm to run for protection to an anchorage 2 or 3 miles distant, which requires that vessels shall constantly maintain steam pressure or that towing craft shall be available for the assistance of vessels which do not have their own steam. This adverse condition not only affects the navy yard, but also other departments of the Government which have property located in the immediate vicinity along a stretch of about 4,000 linear feet of sea front.
> There is the War Department (Fort Taylor); the Treasury Department, with its Marine-Hospital Service; the Department of Agriculture has a small area; a pier is used by the Department of Commerce and Labor for lighthouse service; and included in the Navy tract is an area utilized by the Post Office Department for post office and customhouse. All of these departments, with the exception, possibly, of the Weather Bureau, have their small craft that require protection in time of storm and a depth of from 20 to 22 feet of water along the frontage for most efficient service.

After this sea wall is constructed it is contemplated to do some dredging there which, it is said, will increase the depth to some 22 or 23 feet, the purpose being to make it a harbor for the protection not only of Government property but naval and other Government vessels assembling there. Further on the admiral said:

Breakwater protection is absolutely necessary for the good not only of the Navy Department, but for all the other departments of the Government which are interested in this bit of water front.

There was also a board appointed in the spring of last year for the purpose of inspecting the navy yard at Key West and four or five other southern stations and yards. That board made its report in August following its appointment.

On this report, after mentioning the different Government properties at Key West, the board says:

95. The entire water front of the naval station, including the naval piers already constructed, the Lighthouse Establishment pier, and the Army wharf at Fort Taylor, are entirely unprotected from heavy seas from a southerly direction. In fact, these berths are dangerous during heavy weather, except when the wind is blowing from the north to the southeast. During 1909 and 1910 there were two hurricanes when the velocity of the wind reached for a brief time 80 to 100 miles an hour from directions producing the most dangerous conditions to vessels moored or berthed in this locality.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there could be stronger reasons given for an improvement in the interest of our Naval Establishment or for the improvement of a naval station, I am at a loss to know what they would be.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I thank the gentleman. Perhaps I may not use all the time given me. This is a very important station from many viewpoints. Its strategic value is of the very highest. I risk nothing in saying that there is no naval station south of Hampton Roads on the Atlantic or on the entire Gulf coast of more importance, and I doubt if there is one in the whole country of greater value, everything considered, than the naval station at Key West. A fleet assembled there—it need not be battleships, either—could in time of war, by reason of its ability to control the Straits of Florida, protect not only the entire Gulf of Mexico but the Yucatan Channel, and, in connection with the naval station at Guantanamo, protect the Panama Canal as well.

Mr. Speaker, there are few vulnerable points in the United States, including all her possessions. But there are some, and one of them, perhaps the most vulnerable, at the same time one of the greatest importance, is the Panama Canal, costing nearly a half billion of dollars, and cheap enough at that. It is to be among the greatest maritime highways of the world, an important aid to commerce in time of peace, but a source of anxiety and solicitude in time of war. This waterway we must protect at all hazards, and we can not afford to neglect anything that will add to its security, certainly not as important a factor as a naval base, at which a fleet can be assembled with power to control one of the approaches to this canal. Key West furnishes such a station and should be improved, if for no other reason, because of that fact.

Another reason—one which I have just mentioned—is the element of protection this station affords to the commerce of the Gulf of Mexico and the long stretch of coast line from the Straits of Florida around to the Rio Grande, including the many harbors dotting that coast and the navigable rivers flowing into the Gulf, chief among which is that of the great Mississippi.

Mr. Speaker, I have had occasion before to present to this House the importance of the naval station at Key West. When the naval appropriation bill for 1910 was under consideration, speaking of certain other important improvements, the most of which have, I believe, since been made, I said, among other things:

There is no more important highway of commerce than the Straits of Florida. Through it passes nearly all the commerce that goes into or comes out of the Gulf of Mexico, and through it will go a large part of the commerce passing through the Panama Canal when that waterway is completed. Certainly it is important to protect this commerce in time of war, and this can easily be done by making Key West a first-class naval station and using it as a naval base when, if at all, war should come upon us. With an adequate fleet stationed there and scouting vessels patrolling the Straits of Florida it will be impossible for a hostile fleet to pass through without encountering and destroying ours, a thing not likely to happen if we keep on strengthening our Navy, as is proposed in this bill.

From this base we could also easily control the channel between Cuba and Yucatan, and thus protect the commerce of the entire Gulf. Assuredly, then, this strait should be improved as rapidly as possible, for while we hope war will not come, it may do so at any time.

The necessity for these improvements are fully set forth in documents from which I have quoted, and while the first is three years old the same reasons urged then in favor of Key West as a naval base are potent to-day. I therefore hope that, if not in this bill, at least in some measure passed at this session of Congress a substantial appropriation will be made to continue the work there. The station has already cost nearly $2,000,000, while the property secured and owned by the Government at that place is now worth a great deal more, but some of it is liable to depreciate and appropriations already made lost to the Government if something is not done at an early date. It would therefore be the height of folly to postpone further the making of the necessary appropriations to continue this work.

All this I now reiterate. Certainly few, if any, other places can make such a showing from a strategic standpoint, and yet in the face of all this and of the strong recommendation, yes, the urgent appeals of the experts of the Navy Department, the Committee on Naval Affairs hesitates to make the improvement greatly needed in time of peace, but which would be an absolute necessity in time of war.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not myself intend to ask for a separate vote on this proposition, because I doubt if it would carry. I do not know that by asking for a separate vote I would embarrass anyone here, but I do not care to do this. Certainly I would not like to embarrass my friend the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Besides, I always prefer to sustain the committee whenever I can. All I desire to do is to call the attention of the House with that of the committee on conference to the matter, to emphasize, if I may, the importance of this work, so that when the conferees get back into conference they may have my views with whatever of little value, if any, they possess. Mr. Speaker, I believe that is all I desire to say.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield me 10 minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I will concede that there are many naval stations that should be abolished, but I will not concede that all the naval stations on the Gulf coast should be wiped out by the Navy Department. Pensacola, the deepest-water station in the United States, has been wiped off of the map. Two months ago when it was thought that this country was going to become involved in war with Mexico, the gentleman from Tennessee, representing the Navy Department, came upon the floor of this House and asked that there be resurrected an old appropriation for the New Orleans Navy Yard that had been abandoned several years. New Orleans has been abandoned as a station. When war confronted us the necessity of the station was urgent. It is proposed to take the last station on the Gulf coast. Having wiped out Pensacola and New Orleans, now they propose to also abandon Key West. I do not know the merits of this particular project, but I do know that there is a movement on foot to cripple and destroy this yard.

Mr. Speaker, it is conceded by all naval experts that when we have war it will in all probability be on the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea on account of the Panama Canal. And yet we wipe out all of the strategical places on the southern coast of the United States without any consideration of the future whatever, and I do not think it is right. When the American Navy is called upon to protect the southern coast and the Panama Canal there should be a station for repairs near the scene of action. Key West is a splendid navy yard, and, used as a torpedo station, the torpedo fleet can protect that section and can also in a measure protect the Panama Canal from attack through the Gulf route. The Navy Department places much stress on a station at Guantanamo. Did you ever think of the fact that Guantanamo is on foreign territory? Cuba does not belong to the United States. Besides, Guantanamo protects the southern end of Cuba and the southern side of the waters that lead to the Panama Canal. Now, suppose you wipe out Key West. Then the enemy would not undertake to go around the southern end of Cuba by way of Guantanamo, where there is a station being established, to attack the canal, but the enemy would go around the northern end of Cuba unmolested, there being no fleet and no station at Key West, Pensacola, New Orleans, or anywhere else to protect the southern coast and protect the Panama Canal by that route. We should think well before we wipe out all the stations on the southern coast. I am not willing to concede that the chairmen of the committees are always right. I am not willing to yield my convictions and surrender my rights on the floor of this House. Everybody must admit that all the navy yards in the South are being wiped out. None of them are being abandoned anywhere else, and yet, as I said in the beginning, those who are versed in naval affairs say that in case of war the enemy will most surely confront us on the Gulf coast and Caribbean Sea.

Mr. Chairman, I rose only for the purpose of voicing my protest against the policy of the Navy Department to abandon all the navy yards and stations on the Gulf and southern coasts. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON].

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to answer the protest of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] and the remarks of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN]. This idea that you must have a navy yard or naval station at a certain place in order that that territory may be protected is all nonsense. The ocean is so big that you can not put a fleet anywhere that there will not be plenty of room for a hostile fleet to go way around it and get around it without being seen. It is an impossibility to arrange things so that you will have a fleet at every point on the ocean where a hostile fleet can not pass. The truth is the naval experts have explained to the committee that under the conditions that now exist, if we should ever have war with any nation, the first thing the nation's fleet that is at war with us would do would be to hunt our fleet, and it would not make any difference where it was. It would not make any difference whether our fleet was on the Florida coast, at Galveston, on the New England coast, or where it was. The first thing the enemy's fleet would do, according to these naval experts, would be to search the ocean until it found our fleet. It would never try to take any particular port or city, because they are all defended by immense guns, and a hostile fleet attempting to take it would run the risk of having a number of its ships destroyed and others disabled, and therefore be compelled to fight our fleet in a crippled condition. That is the reason given by the experts why we need never have any fear of any naval assault on any part of our coast until the enemy has first destroyed our fleet. And that being so, it is all foolishness to talk about having naval stations and navy yards so thick along every part of the American coast that you could have a fleet ready there to defend that part of the coast against a hostile fleet.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Do you call naval stations very thick when there is a distance between Charleston, S. C., and Key West, of nearly 1,000 miles?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Oh, yes; I recall that fact. That is just what ought to be the fact. The truth is we have too many navy yards and too many naval stations.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Possibly up North, but not down South, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, that is the reason we are squandering so many millions of the people's money without any reason. The truth is that this idea of having naval stations on the Mexican coast and the Florida coast, a truth that seems to have been discovered exclusively by my two colleagues from the South, is an erroneous one. Why do not some of these gentlemen from the Pacific coast, or gentlemen from the New England coast discover that? Why can they not see it?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Will the gentleman let me answer?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentlemen from the other sections of the country are taking good care of the eastern coast and the western coast. We from the South propose to take care of the South.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. They are actuated by the same selfish motives.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I have no selfish motive in Florida whatever.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I stand, Mr. Speaker, for the American Union, the whole country, and I have no patience with this sectional selfishness that is always trying to raid the Treasury for some section.

Now, I am a southern man, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] have not got in their hearts any love for the South that is stronger and tenderer than the love within my own breast, and if you have got to waste millions of dollars somewhere I would prefer that you waste it down on the Mississippi coast, if it must be wasted. [Laughter.] But I protest against the selfishness that dominates the policy of the American Navy. There is no reason why you should have navy yards scattered from Frenchmans Bay to the Rio Grande, and the argument made here that you ought to have them so that you could have a fleet at every point, ready to defend that point against a hostile attack, has no reason in it.

I have no doubt my friends are sincere. I have no doubt they believe it. But there are a great many things that we believe honestly that we would not believe if it were not for the dominance of selfishness in our hearts. If it were not for the expenditure of money on the southern coast, you would not find southern men asking you to waste money on that coast. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to disclaim any spirit of selfishness whatever in the remarks I have made or in the position I have taken with reference to this matter. Certainly no political consideration can actuate me, for while Key West is now in my district it will not be in the district I shall represent in the next Congress if I am fortunate enough to be reelected to this body. The State has been redistricted and Key West has been taken out of the district which I have had the honor to represent heretofore, so that I will profit nothing politically or otherwise by the position I am taking. I am doing this in the interest of the whole country, and I trust solely from patriotic motives.

My friend from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] seems never to have heard of naval bases, never to have known that there is a necessity for a naval base wherever naval operations are to be had. I have no sectional feeling, Mr. Speaker, but try to look at all matters from a national standpoint. Members of this House know that. For a number of years I have been a member of a committee having to do with the improvement of the rivers and harbors throughout the country, and I think those who have watched my course with reference to those matters will credit me with having been actuated by no feeling of selfishness or sectional considerations, but by a desire to help the whole country.

But, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that there are many naval stations and navy yards other than that at Key West, some of which it seems to me might well be abolished. But if there is anything in the idea of naval bases, if there is any necessity for naval stations where naval vessels may go in time of stress, or when crippled in action, or in any other way, for the purpose of repair, for the purpose of coaling or taking on supplies, then Key West presents the ideal conditions for such a station, a fact that should be recognized by Congress, as it has been by the naval experts.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that is all I have to say in reply.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Florida yield to me for a question before he takes his seat?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will.

Mr. MOORE. I believe, if there was a necessity for a naval base at Key West, it would be a matter of regret to all of us if, when we found that necessity existing, we had no naval base there. I do not regard this proposition as a sectional matter at all. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the opinion of the Navy Department concerning this particular project?

Mr. SPARKMAN. As I said at the outset, Secretary Meyer, in a letter addressed to the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs on December 7, 1912, very strongly recommended the work for which this amendment would provide. He went on in that letter to mention other classes of work which he proposed to do—other improvements which he proposed to make there—but he wanted this work done first, so as to protect the later improvements and other Government interests at that place.

Mr. MOORE. Where is the nearest naval base to that point?

Mr. SPARKMAN. At Charleston, S. C.

Mr. MOORE. Charleston, S. C., which is, perhaps, not one of the best on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There is one also at Pensacola, of course, on the Gulf side.

Mr. MOORE. Then Pensacola is nearest on the Gulf side and Charleston nearest on the Atlantic side?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Now, may I ask whether the present Navy Department has expressed itself on this Key West project?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understand that the present Secretary has not given expression to any views on this subject as yet.

Mr. MOORE. Then the matter really comes up without any special recommendation from the Navy Department as it stands to-day?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; except the recommendation from Secretary Meyer, which, as I understand, is still pending before the committee. As I am advised, it has not been withdrawn or superseded by any other recommendation.

In addition to that, I wish to say that the Navy board, appointed especially for the purpose of investigating all such matters, recommended very strongly the work for which this amendment provides, and Admiral Stanford, when before the committee at the time it was having hearings for the purpose of preparing this bill, spoke very strongly in favor of this particular work.

Mr. MOORE. How far is Pensacola from Key West?

Mr. SPARKMAN. About 450 or 500 miles.

Mr. MOORE. And how far is Charleston on the other side from Key West?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should say about 800 miles.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] was very unfair to me in charging that I have selfish motives in this matter. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that he lives 200 miles nearer to Key West than I do. I live about 600 miles from Key West station; and so far as sectionalism is concerned, I did not inject that issue into this question.

But I am here to say to you that when the interests of the Philadelphia Navy Yard at League Island are at stake you find present here and active Mr. MOORE and Mr. LEE and other Members from that section, and when the Norfolk Navy Yard is under discussion you find Mr. HOLLAND and Mr. JONES and other Members from Virginia and that section present and active, and when the navy yards on the Pacific coast are under discussion and their interests are at stake you find the Representatives from the Pacific coast here on guard and representing the interests of that section. I want to say to you on the floor of this House to-day that I am not ashamed of the fact that I am from the South, and I am not ashamed of the fact that I represent the interests of the South and the whole Union when I come here and tell you that the navy yard at Pensacola has been wiped out, that the navy yard at New Orleans has been wiped out, and that when the navy yard at Key West is wiped out the last vestige of this class of naval protection on the Gulf coast will be gone.

When the chairman of this committee came before this House two months since and requested that the navy yard at New Orleans be hastily put in order for emergency in case of war with Mexico my attitude on this question was thoroughly and completely vindicated.

I am not here to-day taking a new position. For three years, ever since I have been a member of the Naval Committee, I have stood on the floor of this House and advocated the same position which I take now. I think there is more coast line from Charleston to the Rio Grande than there is from Charleston to Maine. I may be mistaken in that statement, but I do not think I am, and in that whole territory there is not one efficient navy yard. I am not prepared to say how many there are between Charleston and Maine, but I am satisfied there are 10 or 12. I am not raising any sectional question. I am simply pleading for what is right, and pleading for the whole country.

Mr. MOORE. Is the gentleman familiar with the navy yard at New Orleans?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No; I am not, except from such information as I have received as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MOORE. The New Orleans Navy Yard is practically out of commission.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is true, and has been for a number of years.

Mr. MOORE. No very great effort has been made to build up a yard there.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is true.

Mr. MOORE. Has the gentleman been to Pensacola?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No.

Mr. MOORE. There is practically nothing there.

Mr. TRIBBLE. There is nothing there, so I am informed.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. I have been at New Orleans and Pensacola, and I want to confirm what the gentleman says. Having visited these stations, and being somewhat familiar with the southern Atlantic coast, it has seemed to me that that section of the country might properly ask to be protected. It has been suggested that in the event of a great naval war the West Indies would be a base of operations for foreign nations. Therefore it is not unreasonable that we should have an adequate naval base somewhere around the Florida coast. It is highly important that there should be a naval station somewhere about the Gulf or at the lower end of the south Atlantic coast line. I am trespassing upon the gentleman's time——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Oh, no; I gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. The only question in my mind is whether the Navy Department itself has so indorsed or recommended this proposition that the House can act upon it to-day. It seems to me to be evident to any man who visits that section of the country that there ought to be protection there. New Orleans has been neglected. Pensacola is one of the most beautiful stations in the country, but it is now wiped out, so far as active operations are concerned, as the gentleman has said. Charleston is not one of the best equipped yards of the country. Hence there is very little south of Norfolk all the way around to the Mississippi.

Mr. TRIBBLE. As a matter of truth, Key West, Pensacola, and New Orleans have been practically wiped out.

I am not here representing any section of this Union. In a broad and patriotic sense the Representatives from Maine and California are as much interested to-day in the Gulf Coast States as they are in any other section of the Union. From a patriotic standpoint I am as much interested in other sections of the Union as I am in the South. I have never understood why these navy yards on the Gulf coast should be abandoned. I can give no justification for that recommendation of the Navy Department, nor can anyone else.

I do not feel justified in withholding my views simply because some of my colleagues on the committee from the South do not agree with my views on naval policy. No yards have been abandoned elsewhere, and I contend that the yards most needed are the ones selected for abandonment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 25 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND].

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I simply rise for the purpose of resenting the insinuation made by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] that those of us who have advocated improvements for local yards are actuated by selfish motives. So far as I am concerned, I want nothing for the Virginia yard that is not best for the country and best for the Navy. I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that there are other men in this body just as patriotic as he is. There are other men in this body who are broad enough to see the necessity for improvements outside of the limits of their own particular States. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to invite the attention of the House to the facts in this case just for a minute or two, and to get away from the sentimental questions that have been discussed.

In the first place, this matter is not asked for or estimated for by the department. In the second place, we are not abolishing Key West or depriving it of anything that it has. This is the beginning of a project for $1,690,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. When the gentleman says it is not asked for by the department, he means only to say that it has not been estimated for by the department for this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. It has not been estimated for, and there has been no request for it from the department at this time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I dare say the gentleman means that there has been no request from the present Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is exactly what I mean.

Mr. SPARKMAN. But I wish to ask, further, if he has recommended against the improvement?

Mr. PADGETT. I will state that we had it up two years ago, when Mr. Meyer submitted it, and we did not favorably report it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is not an answer to the question I propounded.

Mr. PADGETT. I know. The gentleman has kept asking me questions——

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not wish to embarrass my friend at all, but I wish to get the facts before the House.

Mr. PADGETT. I was just stating that fact.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wished to find out whether there had been any recommendation which had superseded or taken the place of the recommendation made by Secretary Meyer two years ago.

Mr. PADGETT. No; he sent no official communication. I have talked with the Secretary personally, but I do not care to involve any other matter.

Now, this is only the beginning of this project. We are not taking away from Key West anything that they have. We are declining to go into this project. Gentlemen talk about the fleet gathering at Key West, but the water is so shallow that a battleship or a cruiser can not get within 3 miles of the naval station at Key West. I have a plan showing the proposed breakwater, and the water runs from 5 to 10, 17, 20, and 15 feet, and 20 feet is the deepest water that is inside of the proposed breakwater or artificial harbor. A battleship requires from 33 to 35 feet to go in safety, and this proposition only gives them, at a cost of $1,690,000, a harbor to accommodate submarines and torpedo boats, which does not contemplate a fleet at all—only a proposed dredging to 20 or 22 feet where they can go.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I distinctly stated that I did not refer to battleships going into Key West.

Mr. PADGETT. I was referring to what the gentleman from Georgia said in regard to the fleet asembling there.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I referred mainly to the torpedo fleet and other small naval vessels, which would be of great value there in case of war.

Mr. PADGETT. So that we have before us a proposition to build an artificial harbor where the water runs from 5 to 20 feet and the bulk of it 10 or 15 feet deep, and the proposition is to dredge it, at a cost of $840,000 at least, and then we get only an artificial depth of 20 feet, and we could not get a battleship within 3 miles of it. I could not consent to it in conference, and I ask the House not to consent to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to further insist on the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment 33.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 91, noes none.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 40.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 27, line 20, by striking out the figures "$2,897,000" and inserting "$4,140,500."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House further insist on its disagreement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 71, with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment and then report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read Senate amendment No. 71, as follows:

The President may, in his discretion, direct the sale, in such manner, at such price, and upon such terms as he shall deem proper, of the battleships Idaho and Mississippi. All moneys received from the sale of said vessels shall, after payment therefrom of the expenses of such sale, be deposited by the Secretary of the Navy in the Treasury, and shall, until expended, be available for the construction of such other vessel or vessels, at least equal for purposes of offense and defense to the most modern vessels of the same class now projected here or abroad, as the President may in his discretion authorize: Provided, That no vessel shall be sold, exchanged, or conveyed under this authorization unless such sale, exchange, or conveyance, or the agreement therefor, shall have been made prior to July 1, 1915: Provided further, That any vessel or vessels constructed from the money received from the sale of the Mississippi and Idaho shall not be included in the annual appropriations for the increase of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the Senate amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"The President may, in his discretion, direct the sale in such manner, at such price, and upon such terms as he shall deem proper, of the battleships Idaho and Mississippi. All moneys received from the sale of said vessels shall be deposited by the Secretary of the Navy in the Treasury after said sale. In addition to the two battleships hereinbefore authorized the President is hereby authorized to have constructed a first-class battleship carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,800,000. Out of the money when so deposited in the Treasury there is hereby appropriated toward the construction of said battleship on account of increase of the Navy, construction and machinery, $2,000,000; armor and armament, $2,535,000; and equipment, $100,000: Provided, That no vessel shall be sold under this authorization unless such sale or agreement therefor shall have been made prior to July 1, 1915."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion by striking out of the substitute all after the word "Treasury" down to the proviso at the end of the amendment and insert in lieu thereof the words "as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. PADGETT. That puts the parliamentary situation as it was the other night.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "Treasury" down to the proviso and insert the words "as miscellaneous receipts."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. Would a substitute for that be in order now? I desire to offer a substitute, if it is in order, providing that the money be appropriated for the construction of public roads.

The SPEAKER. As a substitute to the whole of it?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; to recede and concur with an amendment providing for the sale of the ships and that the money be used for the construction of roads.

Mr. PADGETT. I would reserve a point of order on that. But the gentleman has not offered the amendment.

The SPEAKER. No; he asked if it would be in order to offer such a substitute.

Mr. MANN. It would be subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Let us see what the parliamentary situation is. The Senate proposes an amendment and the gentleman from Tennessee moves to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. To recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Yes. That is step No. 1. The gentleman from Illinois then moved an amendment to the Padgett amendment. That is step No. 2. The gentleman from Alabama then proposes to offer a substitute for the whole thing.

Mr. MANN. A substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BURNETT. My substitute would provide for the sale.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands all three of these gentlemen agree down to a certain point. The Chair is inclined to think that it is in order, and the gentleman from Alabama may send his amendment to the desk.

Mr. MANN. That is, it is in order to offer it.

The SPEAKER. It is in order if it is germane. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURNETT moves that the House recede and concur in amendment No. 71 with an amendment providing for the appropriation of the money the proceeds of the sale of said battleships to the construction and maintenance of the public roads of the country traversed by rural and star-route mail carriers of the United States.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. It deals with the subject of roads on the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order. The gentleman from Tennessee, the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Alabama all agree down to a certain point in their various amendments. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee provides that we shall build a new battleship. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois provides that the money obtained from the sale of the battleships shall be turned into miscellaneous receipts in the Treasury, and the gentleman from Alabama provides that we shall build roads with the money. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is germane and appropriate on a naval appropriation bill to provide in any way, whether the money is in the Treasury or to go into the Treasury, to appropriate it for the construction of roads.

The SPEAKER. Why not?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because it is not in order. It is an entirely different subject matter. We might as well provide for any other subject.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. It is not in the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. It is not in this bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would it not be as germane to appropriate it for roads as to put it in the General Treasury?

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all. That is the place to put it, and then use it for the construction of battleships. That is the matter that is before us; that is pertinent to this bill. It is the construction of ships, and the use of money out of the Treasury for that purpose. We are not dealing in this bill directly or indirectly with the subject of roads.

Mr. RAGSDALE. This bill does not make it mandatory. This bill merely leaves it to the discretion of the President. The gentleman puts this House in the position that we are empowering the President to do a certain thing which he wishes to do and which he probably would not do if he thought the sale of these ships would weaken the Navy without increasing its strength in the future.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The title of the bill is making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; other germane and pertinent purposes, as it is ruled continually. If the purposes are not germane, they go out. "Other purposes" do not cover anything except pertinent and germane subjects.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. And if the House should decide to sell these battleships, what objection can the gentleman have to the House also deciding what it shall do with the money, if it does not want to put it into the construction of a new battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. It would then go into the Treasury, and that would be proper; but it would not be pertinent to take up and deal with any question as to whether or not it would go as an addendum to the legislative bill or as an addition to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill or the Indian appropriation bill. Those are matters that do not in any sense apply to this bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Would it jeopardize this bill in any way if that were done? Is it a matter of pride to the gentleman, or is it a constitutional question?

Mr. PADGETT. The parliamentary point is that it is not pertinent to this bill; it is not germane to this bill; but I will state to the gentleman and this House at this point that my position is to sell the ships and turn the money into another ship—to exchange these two ships for one that is far better than both of them combined. If that can not be done, I am not in favor of selling the two ships. That makes a clear-cut issue.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. And I will be glad to have the House determine the question upon that basis—to convert these two ships into one ship that has more fighting efficiency and military value than twice the combined military value of these two ships.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. I would like to find out if we are being enlightened on the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. There has not been any very great amount of illumination as yet. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, it might very well be, that when the naval bill itself was before the House it might not be in order for a Member of this House to offer an amendment providing for the sale of battleships, and the use of the proceeds of that sale for the purpose of building roads. The point of order of the gentleman from Tennessee would be very properly directed against that proposition, and would be well taken, but the suggestion that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama to use the money to be derived from the sale of these battleships, for the purpose of building roads, is not germane to the report of the conference committee, is not well taken. The propriety of this application may be challenged in debate, but it is for this House to determine whether the same should be made. The authority to make disposition of these proceeds, inherently attaches to this body, and once the proceeds are brought into court, so to say, by an amendment which in itself would not originally be in order, we can determine by a further amendment what we shall do with them.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia think that any proposition to dispose of this matter would be germane?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Just as germane as the proposition to put it into battleships. The very proposition I am advancing is that it is a new matter of law to undertake to sell battleships, and apply the proceeds to the construction of other ships. There is no authority in present law to do this. As soon as this proposition is brought before the House by an amendment, then some other application of that money is entirely within the control of the House. This is substantially a new proposition, a proposition brought before the House by the report of the committee on conference. They propose to sell these battleships.

There is no authority in existing law for that proposition, but they propose to do it. Then they propose to couple with that proposition one to expend this money in some particular way. It is entirely competent for this House to control the application of that money. What authority of law has the gentleman from Tennessee to direct this particular application of these proceeds? He makes the sale in order, by his report. When he makes the sale in order, he is not justified in coming before the House to assert that he can control the application of these proceeds, or in seeking to eliminate by a point of order any effort on the part of this body to direct that application in some other direction. I submit that it is perfectly germane to take the money derived in the above way, and apply it as we see fit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Virginia this question: Has the Committee on Naval Affairs any sort of jurisdiction over roads?

Mr. SAUNDERS. None; but this House has. We are dealing with an unexpected windfall, so to speak. The committee proposes to secure a large sum of money, by the suggested sale, but they also propose to put their hooks into it, and see that it is applied to one particular purpose. Now, I deny that they can do this. There is no present authority of law for the construction of another battleship. There is no law providing for the sale of battleships, and much less putting the money thus derived, into more battleships. They not only propose to sell two battleships but undertake to deny to this House the authority to determine the application of the proceeds. It is the right of this body to do with that money as it chooses.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if the House has not already, as far as the House is concerned, created a road fund, and would not it be just as well to pass this $15,000,000 to the road fund as to turn it into the Treasury?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly, it would be as wise legislation to do this, as to return this money into the Treasury. I am speaking, however, purely on the parliamentary proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. The committee having this bill under its jurisdiction could offer an amendment to provide for the building of a battleship and its payment out of the Treasury.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. And a Member on this floor could not offer an amendment to the bill providing for the building of good roads, irrespective of the pending amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, no, not at all. That has nothing to do with the situation at all. We have never had an amendment to the naval bill providing for the sale of battleships, per se, and appropriating the proceeds for the building of more ships. This committee is undertaking to do a thing for which there is no authority in law, namely, to sell battleships, and then they propose to limit the application of the proceeds. I maintain that any application that the House chooses to make is germane to this particular proposition. We are not authorized to provide for the unlimited construction of battleships, through the sale of older ships, or if we undertake to sell them, to badge the proceeds of sale, so to say, with some preferred application. We are not proposing to enact a road bill, but providing that a certain fund unexpectedly derived, shall be used for the improvement and construction of highways. The fund is merely set apart, the machinery for its application must be provided hereafter.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word on the point of order. Certainly the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia is illogical, to say the least. The Speaker very well stated a moment ago that down to a certain point the three propositions are uniform—that is, all of them provide for the disposition or sale of certain vessels of the Navy. The consideration of that question is certainly germane as an amendment to the naval bill. The first proposition for consideration brought in here by the chairman of the committee is for the sale of these vessels and the conversion of the fund into other vessels of the Navy. Both of those propositions are germane to the question which is brought here by the Committee on Naval Affairs. The second proposition arising on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois consists of two propositions, one for the sale of these battleships and the other for the conversion of the money into the Treasury. Both of those propositions are certainly pertinent and germane to the bill we have now under consideration. Now, coming to the third proposition, what is that? It is for the sale of these battleships, and that far it is germane to the naval bill, but the other proposition is not to do anything connected with the Navy, not a question that is considered properly in the report from the Naval Committee in the bill as presented here, but another entire proposition that ought to be considered by the Committee on Good Roads.

That is entirely a different proposition that has not any reference whatever on the question of the Navy or any proposition in the naval bill. And for that reason it certainly can not be considered as germane to the question that we now have up for consideration.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I desire to know whether an amendment would be in order to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard just a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, as an original proposition my amendment would not be in order, because it would be legislation on an appropriation bill. I think that would be clear. If a point of order had been made against the amendment adopted by the Senate, it would have been sustained. But this is a very different proposition. The committee of conference comes in with a disagreement on the proposition the Senate has put on the bill to sell two battleships and to provide for the expenditure of that money. That is perfectly legitimate without regard to the direction of the expenditure, it seems to me. How is the money to go? Suppose nothing had been said about it? I assume it would have been converted into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. But whenever they undertake to give it any direction, whenever they undertake to legislate on an appropriation bill on an amendment coming from the Senate, and we can not then make a point of order against it, it seems to me to be perfectly legitimate, as has been well stated by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], that we have the right to direct the application or give direction to the proceeds of that sale.

It strikes me as a common-sense proposition that when we are proposing to sell Government property in the same law by which we propose to make that sale we can say how the proceeds of that sale are to be applied. That is the whole proposition in this case. Gentlemen have a right to say it shall be directed to the purchase of battleships. If that be true, it is a part of legislation, it is germane because it comes from the Senate as an amendment; and, then, why would not it be just as germane to say the proceeds of sale shall go to build public roads without regard to whether the committee has jurisdiction of the question of the importance of good roads or not? It is simply a plain, common-sense proposition that we order the sale of property and make the direction as to the proceeds of that sale. I do not think there can be any question about the germaneness of the substitute that I have offered.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the proposition as has been stated is as to whether or not the House will sell these battleships. Now, as has been admitted on all sides, this proposition as an original matter could not have been placed in the bill. It would have been subject to a point of order. But once in the bill the question as to how men may vote on the sale of the battleships might be determined absolutely by what disposition would be made of the proceeds. Now, one proposition is that the proceeds shall be put into one battleship. Members might not vote to sell two battleships in order to buy one, but they might vote for the proposition to sell two battleships and put the proceeds into roads, and others to put money into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. So that when the proposition is once in the bill it is Congress and not the committee that should determine what disposition will be made of the fund. Now, if the item had not been placed in the bill, it would have been subject to a point of order, and you would never have had an opportunity to vote on it in the naval bill; but once in the naval bill it is then in order for this House to appropriate that money for any purpose it may see fit to appropriate it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Why would it not have been originally in order to have offered it as an amendment in the naval appropriation bill when it was in the House?

Mr. SISSON. Because it would have been legislation. There is no law now authorizing the sale of battleships.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Do we get anywhere now by assuming if it is once here we can deal with it in the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely, because you are not doing otherwise than disposing of the fund that we obtain by virtue of the sale of the ships. Now, the proposition is presented to each Member as to whether or not we sell the ships. One man will say, "Yes; we will sell the ships, because we want to build one." Another man will say, "We do not want to build a ship with it, but we want to put the money into the Treasury," and another man will say, "We want to put it on roads." The whole proposition now is, When you sell the ships, what will you do with the fund?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a brief question?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The proposition is whether this is germane to the sale, and not a question of what is germane to the original bill.

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely. That is what I had in mind all the while. It is not a question of whether or not as an original proposition it will be germane on the naval bill. It is on the naval bill now and is germane here, and the only question is whether or not the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is germane to the proposition now in the naval bill. And if it is germane to that item, it is now in order, placed in the bill in the Senate, and now here for the consideration of the House, and it is not a question of whether it would or it would not be in order on the naval bill. It is a question of whether or not this amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is germane and in order on this item. It has become in order by virtue of the fact that it was put on in the Senate and it comes here for the consideration of the House. And the Naval Committee can not now, since they have it in the bill, limit the direction which this money shall go or control the direction which the money shall go. It is for the House to determine what it will do with this fund.

I am extremely anxious that the House should have an opportunity to vote on this proposition. I want the issue to be made fairly and squarely between the improvement of our public roads and the enlargement of the Navy. The American Navy is now one of the strongest and largest in the world, except that of Great Britain. It is costing the American people $140,000,000 annually. If these two battleships—Mississippi and Idaho—both new, are to be sold, I should be delighted to see this money expended on the public roads of the country. I would like to see the House tested as to whether it wishes to continue to squander millions of dollars on the Navy, or whether it wishes to do the country a real service by expending this money in the building and improvement of country roads.

If this amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is in order under the rules in the opinion of the Chair, then this will be the issue presented to the House.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the only question that is involved here is whether or not on the naval appropriation bill it is in order to legislate in reference to building roads. Now, an amendment to sell battleships and to use the money is germane upon the naval bill, for it relates to the Navy. It pertains to the increase of the Navy, and the appropriation of the money to build another ship is an increase of the Navy. And it seems to me that the only matter that would be pertinent would be whether the money should go into the Treasury, and remain in the Treasury, or whether it can be appropriated out on the naval bill for naval purposes. To appropriate it for any other purpose would not be germane or pertinent.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will my friend yield to me a minute?

Mr. PADGETT. In just a moment. The Speaker the other day ruled it was not germane on the naval appropriation bill to provide for the construction of an armor-plate factory. Now, why would it be more germane to appropriate for the building of roads? This is the Government's money; it is a Government ship. We are dealing with the Government's money, and the appropriation is simply a method provided by the Constitution and by the Congress for the disposition of that money, and on the naval bill it is only in order to provide for matters that are germane to the naval bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Is it in order on the Naval bill to provide for selling battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. It would not be in the House. It was in the Senate.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is not in the House, so that when the question is asked whether it is in order on that proposition in this House the answer is it would not be in order.

Mr. PADGETT. In the House it would be a new proposition of legislation, but when it comes back to the House from the Senate it would be in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Is not this true as a proposition of parliamentary law, that a proposition that is not in order is now before the House, and it becomes in order to perfect that by a germane amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. If the point of order is waived in the House, it would be in order to perfect it by a germane amendment; but that is not the case when it comes back on a Senate amendment

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is precisely the same.

Mr. PADGETT. If the Senate amendment comes in on a bill, then it must be germane to that amendment.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen that debate this question lose sight of one thing and forget one thing, and that is that this all pertains to the increase of the Navy. No matter how you get to it, one dreadnaught is worth these two vessels and more, and the Senate attempted by legislation to dispose of two vessels and get one that will be worth more than both of them.

The SPEAKER. Is not this a proposition to diminish the Navy?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. No, sir; not if you provide that this money shall be a Navy fund and shall be used, as this amendment says, for the building of another vessel, indicating the character of it; and the whole amendment looks toward an increase to the Navy. You might just as well ask us to put the money into the Mississippi River. You might just as well ask—and if you had done so nobody would have said it was in order—that the proceeds be used for a public building. You might just as well have asked for a thousand things in this bill, and every one of them would have been out of order, and the Chair would have to so decide.

But not one of them would be more out of order than this proposition of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT]. The money belongs to the Government and is at the disposition of Congress, and if the Congress wanted to do so it could appropriate on some other day for roads. But you are attempting something now that can not be done under the rules of this House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. There are three propositions pending here. All of them would have been out of order originally in the House. Part of them are in order by reason of this Senate amendment. They all agree to sell these battleships. When we get through selling them, then there is a dispute about what we are going to do with the money.

There are three propositions on that. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] wants to build a new battleship, a dreadnaught, or superdreadnaught, or something of the sort. The proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is really to strike out. That is always in order—to strike anything out of anything. Now comes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and wants to build wagon roads with this money. It does not make any difference whether building roads by the Government is a good thing or not. It might be a very meritorious proposition—the most meritorious that was ever offered in the House—but it has nothing on earth to do with a naval appropriation bill.

Whether you happen to like a particular ruling or not—that is, a ruling on a particular item—it is very much to be desired that the business of the House be conducted in order. Now, let us see where we are on the road question. The pressure for an appropriation from the Federal Government to build wagon roads became so strong that the House created a Roads Committee. That is how it came to be created—because the pressure for Government aid in building wagon roads was so strong that the House could not resist it. The House created a special committee to take charge of this public wagon-road business, and under the lead of that committee the House authorized an appropriation of $25,000,000 at the beginning of this session, or near the beginning of it. The Chair understands in a roundabout sort of way that the Senate has cut down the amount to $5,000,000, but that does not make any difference. It will have to go to conference.

Now, if you can build roads on the naval appropriation bill, you can take charge of the entire business of the Government under the naval appropriation bill. The point of order is sustained against the substitute of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to strike out.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, can we have an agreement about the time?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois as to time? I would like to expedite these proceedings, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MANN. We might make an agreement such as we made the other day.

Mr. PADGETT. I am willing to stand for an agreement such as we had the other night—that my time be extended to two hours and that I yield one hour of that time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON], a member of the committee, and that at the end of that time we vote upon the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks that his time of one hour be extended to two hours, with the agreement that he yield one hour to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON], and at the end of two hours the vote shall be taken; that is, unless the debate is closed in less than the two hours. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House very long. This seems to me to be a very clear business proposition when the facts are understood.

I stated the other night, in answer to a question, that these two ships that we are proposing to sell—the Mississippi and the Idaho—are not worthless or no-account ships. They are good ships of their class, but the class of ships to which they belong is a misfit in our Navy. They are ships of 13,000 tons displacement. They are undersized. They are of slow speed and in maneuvering with the fleet they can not keep up with the rest of the fleet, with the result that in attempting to keep these two ships maneuvering with our fleet we must slow down the whole fleet, and to that extent impair and destroy the efficiency of our whole fleet in order to accommodate and adjust the other ships of the fleet to the capabilities of these two ships. Already in our experience heretofore in trying to make these two ships keep up with the fleet they have broken the main shafts four different times, entailing a great cost to the Government.

I wish to call attention to the further fact that these ships have, each of them, four 12-inch guns, besides smaller guns; but the fighting efficiency of every battleship is determined by its big guns. These ships have, each of them, four 12-inch guns.

On a modern dreadnaught such as the New York, the Texas, the Pennsylvania, or the two that have been authorized at the present session, we would have twelve 14-inch guns. I called attention the other night to the statement that was submitted by Admiral Dewey in reply to some questions I submitted, and which are in the RECORD. Taking the Delaware, one of our dreadnaughts, as a standard of 100, the Idaho and Mississippi combined have a percentage of 35 and a fraction. The New York and the Texas have a value of 157 and a fraction. Nos. 39, 40, and 41 are more efficient and with better improvements than the New York or the Texas; so that a ship that would be built with the proceeds of these two ships would have more than double the combined efficiency of the two ships we sell. I have here a memorandum which was sent to me this morning by the Secretary of the Navy, from Admiral Fiske, in which he states that the new ship would have three times the military value of the combined ships, the Idaho and the Mississippi.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman of the opinion that these ships are or are not desirable as a part of our fleet?

Mr. PADGETT. I will state that they are not desirable to maintain if we can substitute better ones in their place.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If we can not substitute them?

Mr. PADGETT. I would not advocate selling them and not replacing the ships.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that in the opinion of the gentleman from Tennessee these two ships, in spite of all he has said in condemnation of them, are at the present time important factors in our fleet?

Mr. PADGETT. They are of some importance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sufficiently important not to be discarded.

Mr. PADGETT. I would not discard them. I have said before, and I repeat now, that they are not useless ships. They are not worthless ships. But let me submit to the gentleman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has answered that question. I want to ask him another. The gentleman's motion authorizes the President to sell these ships on such terms as he may decide?

Mr. PADGETT. At a price not less than the original cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the sale not to be before the 1st of July, 1915——

Mr. PADGETT. Not later than July, 1915.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And after the money is paid into the Treasury there is appropriated out of it by this amendment $4,600,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Four million six hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, if we sell these ships upon terms other than for cash, even under the gentleman's amendment, we would have parted with the ships two or three years before they could be replaced by the ship which is to be built, and we would still be in the position of having given up what the gentleman deems to be essential and desirable portions of our fleet for a ship that is to be added to our fleet three years thereafter.

Mr. PADGETT. It would take practically three years. They run from 32 to 36 months.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then in the meantime, if unfortunately we should get into a difficulty with any foreign nation where our fleet would be essential, we would have given up two ships that would be of service, and by the time we got this ship that is authorized in this amendment the war might be ended, very much to our disaster.

Mr. PADGETT. Well, the gentleman can go down the road and scare up any number of imaginary difficulties of that kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking if that is a fact.

Mr. PADGETT. Of course it is a fact that if we should sell the ships we would not have them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You propose to sell them, so we would not have them.

Mr. PADGETT. But having two ships that are misfits, that do not serve a desirable purpose in our Navy, if we sell them now we can get the original cost for them; but if we keep them, in the natural course of events in a few years they will pass out, and we shall get nothing for them. So I say if we can sell them at the original cost of about $12,000,000 and use that money to replace them with another ship of more than double the combined military value of the two with which we part it is an opportunity that we ought not to lose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We will put ourselves in a position where for two or three years we shall have disposed of those ships, and will not have them, and we will be waiting for the ship which is to replace them. If that is good policy, it might be a wise thing to negotiate the sale of our entire Navy and provide for better ships to be built in the future.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So that we might not lose anything by keeping any of them too long. The gentleman would not sell these ships, except to replace them at some time in the future; but under his motion we shall get rid of these ships and wait three years before they can be replaced.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not accept the gentleman's argumentum ad absurdum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking the gentleman if his own motion does not work out in just that way?

Mr. PADGETT. No; my motion is to sell the ships and build another one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but it will be three years before that ship can be built to replace the two which you want to get rid of at once.

Mr. PADGETT. That is true.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand, then, the gentleman from Tennessee feels this way about this matter, that world conditions to-day are so satisfactory, and the likelihood of any attack upon us by any nation is so little that we can safely reduce our naval strength by parting with these two ships, and be rid of them for the next three years without any peril or danger to the security of the United States.

Mr. PADGETT. I think we are safe in selling them and taking advantage of this opportunity.

Mr. SAUNDERS. And taking the chances without them for the next three years.

Mr. PADGETT. I think so.

Mr. ALEXANDER. What additional sum is it proposed to put into this new ship, in addition to the proceeds of the sale of the two?

Mr. PADGETT. The new ship would cost between $14,000,000 and $15,000,000, and these two ships would sell in round numbers for $12,000,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER. A difference of about $3,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Less than $3,000,000; about $2,500,000, I should say.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like to ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs what was the influencing factor causing the committee to bring in this recommendation, aside from the question of getting rid of two ships that are perhaps somewhat lacking in speed and not up to date as to armament, and so forth? Was there anything else? I might add, if permitted, that I am in favor of the committee's action.

Mr. PADGETT. Nothing that I know of. The matter was submitted by the department to the Senate and the Senate put this on as an amendment.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the speed of these ships?

Mr. PADGETT. The original speed was 17 knots, but they have depreciated until they are much below that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee include specific authority for the construction of this new battleship?

Mr. PADGETT. It does; specific authority.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In other words, it can be constructed without any further authority from Congress?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Is it a fact that there is a market for obsolete and misfit ships?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand there is an opportunity to sell these ships at a price not less than their original cost.

Mr. SIMS. Are they to be used for warships by the purchasers?

Mr. PADGETT. I suppose they would be used for that purpose.

Mr. SIMS. Then, does the gentleman think that he can get that price for these ships if they are obsolete and useless?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not said that they were obsolete or useless, but I stated that because of the size and the speed they do not fit into or adjust themselves with the other ships in the Navy.

Mr. SIMS. Why not say they are obsolete and useless and get rid of them?

Mr. PADGETT. To say that they were obsolete and useless would not be the fact. I have stated that they are good ships of their class, but their class does not compare with the classes we have in the Navy at the present time. We can convert them into a ship that will fit into our Navy and be two or three times more efficient and valuable than the two ships would be.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Is it not a fact that last year or next year we could not find a market to sell these ships on the terms that we can now sell them for?

Mr. PADGETT. That is my information.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Is it not a fact that, as was suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], it is the opinion of the President and the Secretary of the Navy that we should sell these vessels, as we do not need them?

Mr. PADGETT. I am informed that the President heartily recommends and favors this proposition, and he states that there are no international reasons why it should not be done.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of New York. With reference to the question asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I want to ask whether these two ships would be specially valuable in a conflict with a first-class power?

Mr. PADGETT. They would not. They could be used for port ships around the home ports, but they would not do to go out into the first line.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Therefore the sale of them would not produce a deterioration in our Navy in case of trouble with a first-class power?

Mr. PADGETT. They are classed to-day in the second line and not in the first line.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman has just stated that the President, as reported, urges this proposition, and says that there are no international questions that would prevent it.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not get this from the President, but from a reliable source.

Mr. HARRISON. I saw in this morning's paper that one foreign Government had protested against the sale of these two vessels. May I ask if there is any truth in that statement?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not prepared to answer that yes or no. I do not know as to the correctness or incorrectness of the statement in the paper. I saw it, and it was upon that statement that I made the inquiry and received the information that I have just stated.

Mr. HARRISON. I noticed in the paper also that the sale of these vessels might promote peace among certain nations. Is there any truth in that statement?

Mr. PADGETT. I assume that there is.

Mr. BURNETT. That is on the same theory that we build battleships to secure peace between us and other nations.

Mr. PADGETT. To keep other people from breaking the peace with us.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. I will.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee, if it does not violate any confidence, from whom he received the authoritative information that he speaks about?
Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy.
Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.
Mr. FESS. I am interested in whether there is a possibility of any foreign complication. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is any violation of international law when countries are at peace for a country to sell a war vessel to another nation?
Mr. PADGETT. It would not be a violation of international law in time of peace. This places it within the discretion of the President, and the President would not violate international law.
Mr. FESS. And consequently the protest which I read of in the paper would simply be a mere matter of opinion?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman stated that these two ships are misfits, and he thinks there is an opportunity to sell them. What is the gentleman's objection to taking the proceeds of the sale and turning them into the Treasury of the United States instead of putting them into another ship?
Mr. PADGETT. The Navy has been charged with these ships in appropriations, and I do not want to take these ships out of the Navy without replacing them with a more valuable ship.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is it not equivalent, then, to building three dreadnaughts?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but the third one would be built by taking out two and converting them into a better one.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What is the objection to turning the proceeds into the Treasury and then coming back here and asking Congress whether it wants to build a third dreadnaught?
Mr. PADGETT. That direct question is now before Congress.
Mr. BARTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. BARTON. As one who does not understand the ships in the Navy as well as members of the committee, I would like to know more in detail as to what is meant by the statement that these two ships are misfits?
Mr. PADGETT. I stated that in the outset. These two ships are 13,000 tons displacement. The dreadnaughts we are now building are 31,000 tons. These two ships have four 12-inch guns. Ships we are now building have twelve 14-inch guns. These ships have an actual speed of somewhere between 15 and 16 knots. The ships we are building now have a speed of more than 20 knots.
These ships can not keep up with the fleet, they can not go along, and if they go by themselves they will be destroyed if they come up with the enemy. To try and carry them with the fleet is to hold the fleet back with them. Then there is another thing: These ships were built with the low free board aft. They are 12 feet lower in the free board than the ships that were built along at the same time and much more than that when compared with the modern ships. The result is that in a rough sea they wash over, and the aft turrets are useless, largely, in a rough sea.
Mr. BARTON. And their fighting efficiency would not be as great as the battleship that it is proposed to build?
Mr. PADGETT. As I stated a moment ago, the dreadnaught that we propose to build is much more efficient. Take 100 as the standard. These two ships have a percentage of 35 and a fraction. The New York has a percentage of 157 and a fraction, and this new ship would be more improved and of better fighting value than the New York. In other words, it would have more than four times the fighting value of either one of these two ships.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Are there any other misfits that the gentleman knows of in the Navy that we could get rid of while we are in the selling business?
Mr. PADGETT. None that I know of that you would call misfits, but we have some that if we could sell to the same advantage I would advocate selling.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Has any investigation been made to discover whether we have any more misfits that we could sell?
Mr. PADGETT. There are some that we might sell, but we could not get any purchaser for them.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What is the objection to allowing the amount that will be obtained from the sale of these ships to remain in the Treasury?
Mr. PADGETT. Simply because we want to build another ship.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is the truth?
Mr. PADGETT. That is the plain, unvarnished truth. We want to build another ship and we want to use this money for that purpose. The whole thing is this: If we can swap two old ships for one good ship that is worth four times as much as either one of the old ones, why not make the swap? That is the whole proposition.
Mr. SIMS. Why not build the ship now, regardless of the trade?
Mr. PADGETT. Merely because we have already appropriated for two such ships, and we would have these on our hands, and we have now an opportunity to dispose of them.
Mr. SIMS. That is true; but you have another year in which to appropriate for this, or before this becomes available.
Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but we may not wait that long. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Twenty-three minutes.
Mr. MANN. That is a deadly number.
Mr. PADGETT. I know it is; and I am going to use a few minutes more, and then yield the floor. I want to call attention to the further fact that to man these two ships, the Idaho and the Mississippi, 755 men each are required, or a total of 1,510 men. On the new ship 970 men would be required. In other words, there would be a saving of 540 men. You have one ship with a fighting value double that of the other two, and you save 540 men to go upon other ships in the Navy. Those men cost at an average of about $31 a month each, and for the year that would amount to something like $180,000. Then, the maintenance of these two ships would exceed the maintenance of the one ship, I am informed by the department, by something like $300,000 a year, so that we would have in addition to these military advantages I have spoken of, with reference to the ships themselves, a saving of over $400,000 a year in the maintenance of the one ship, as compared with the maintenance and upkeep of the two.
Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. CULLOP. How many ships have we that are smaller than those, and how many that are larger?
Mr. PADGETT. I could not tell the gentleman offhand.
Mr. CULLOP. Approximately?
Mr. PADGETT. I do not remember; but we have several. The Indiana, the Oregon, and the Massachusetts are smaller. I will hand the gentleman the list.
Mr. CULLOP. When were these two ships constructed?
Mr. PADGETT. They were authorized in 1903, and were completed in 1908.
Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, then along the line of the gentleman's argument, there being a saving in the number of men per vessel, and the average cost of the men being some $31 a month each, together with the saving in the maintenance, for the period of time it would take to construct the new ship, in salary and maintenance alone, we would save half the money that is necessary to pay the difference between what we will receive for these obsolete ships and what we will have to pay for the construction of the new modern dreadnaught that it is proposed to construct.
Mr. PADGETT. I have not figured that out. It would save something over $400,000 a year, and there would be a saving of the three years of something over $1,000,000.
Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman to say that these two vessels that we are offering for sale are larger than the Oregon and the Indiana?
Mr. PADGETT. Yes.
Mr. BOOHER. Why not sell the smaller vessels and keep these two?
Mr. PADGETT. Simply because we could not get a purchaser for them.
Mr. BOOHER. Then, you have tried to sell the smaller ones, and could not do it?
Mr. PADGETT. Unofficially—and I am not speaking officially—I will say that we have tried to get them to take some of the older and smaller ones in lieu of these two, and we are making the best trade we can make, and I think one that will not come to us again in a quarter of a century.
Mr. BOOHER. Would it not be a good thing for our Navy if it did not?
Mr. PADGETT. No; I think not. If I could swap an old suit of clothes that I have worn for the year for a new suit of clothes that was four times better——
Mr. BOOHER. Yes; but you would not wait three years to get the new suit. If you did, what would be your condition during the three years? [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, I would do as we are doing in the Navy. I would use the other suits. We have an abundance of other suits, and I would use those suits, and I would be willing to wait three years if I could get a new suit that was worth four times as much as the old one.

Mr. METZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. METZ. Has the United States Government ever sold a naval vessel before?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes; we have sold a good many of the condemned vessels at public sale, and we have obtained very little for them.

Mr. METZ. But they never sold a vessel to another power to use it as a warship?

Mr. PADGETT. Not that I recall.

Mr. METZ. In other words, the American flag has not gone down and the foreign flag gone up on the same ship.

Mr. PADGETT. We have sold other ships, but what was done after we got rid of them I do not know.

Mr. METZ. We have gone so far in our economy that we have no further sympathy or sentiment in connection with them.

Mr. PADGETT. I now yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, had further insisted upon its amendments numbered 1, 20, 78, 79, 85, 101, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 168, 169, 176, 177, 195, 212, 218, 219, 220, and 234, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Senate amendment numbered 33.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Texas). The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

[Mr. BURNETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, since the consideration of this proposition last week the atmosphere has cleared considerably. Then it was a matter of vague doubt as to which nation these ships were to be sold. Now it is admitted that the Government intends to sell them to the Government of Greece. A new policy is about to be inaugurated; the Government of the United States is to become a party to entangling alliances abroad; by this act we undertake here to-day to take part in the policy of European affairs. Never before in the history of our Government have we ever so attempted to interfere with the differences between foreign nations as we are in the present instance. It is well recognized that Greece and Turkey are near belligerents. They are on the brink of war, and it is proposed to furnish one of them succor and assistance. If they were actually engaged in war, there would be no question but what it would be regarded as an act of war on the part of our Government to sell ships to either of the contending parties. I have here a well-recognized authority on international law, that by W. E. Hall, and I wish to read to you just a brief sentence that states the essential obligations of a neutral Government in dealing with belligerents.

The general principle that a mercantile act is not a violation of a state neutrality is pressed too far when it is made to cover the sale of munitions or vessels of war by a state. Trade is not one of the common functions of a government, and an extraordinary motive must be supposed to stimulate an extraordinary act. The nation is exceptionally unfortunate which is forced to get rid of surplus stores precisely at the moment when their purchase is useful to a belligerent.

If it would not be an act of war in selling these war vessels to Greece, then I say certainly it would be an unfriendly act. And because Turkey may be a despised nation in the group of European nations, it is no reason why our Government should tinge its own policy with disrepute by becoming a party to the difficulties existing between Turkey and Greece.

Suppose there existed to-day between China and Japan the same strained relations as between Turkey and Greece, would it for a moment be thought that the Washington administration would think of selling the battleships to China and cast its lot with China in order to give China the balance of equilibrium in the control of the Pacific? Do you not realize that as soon as this Government would undertake that step it would be regarded as an unfriendly act by Japan? Yea, more: it would result in the withdrawal of the ambassadorial representatives of Japan from Washington, and might be considered an act of war by Japan. If it could in that case be considered as an unfriendly act, an act of war, then, I say, why should we, under the existing circumstances, just because Greece and Turkey happen to be insignificant nations and not to be feared, cast our lot with either one of them?

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. FESS. I have read a statement that is supposed to come from the President that this is an act of peace rather than war. Suppose we make the agreement to sell these vessels to Greece, and Turkey declares war, then could we deliver the vessels afterwards?

Mr. STAFFORD. That statement is predicated upon the idea that we are entering upon a determination of foreign questions to ascertain whether the sale of these ships will give to one of the contending nations a preponderating influence in the Aegean Sea. What concern is it to our Government to sell our ships in order to determine the weight of the balance in the determination of the difficulties between Turkey and Greece? Would we consider selling our battleships to either France or Germany if they were in near difficulties, and where it might give an advantage to one nation or the other? The other Government would have the right to consider that an unfriendly act. Better far to keep aloof from participation in the difficulties that confront the Balkan States than to make a good bargain with a nation hard pressed for ships of war. No matter what our feelings are—and personally I believe in the destiny of Greece as the dominating influence in the Aegean—we should maintain that policy of aloofness that even despised Turkey will have no cause for complaint.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like two minutes more.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I can not yield any more time to the gentleman. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any great occasion for the alarm that is expressed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] concerning the sale of these ships. This Government has the right to sell its battleships to any country in time of peace wherever it may see fit to do so and can get a suitable price; and that act alone is no declaration of war, and could not be considered as encouraging such nation to declare war. Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a pertinent illustration of the great navy fad which this Government has been indulging in for a number of years. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois and shall vote for it. I hope to see it adopted, in order that we may sell these two battleships and pay the money into the Public Treasury. I trust we all stand for an adequate Navy. For one I do, and the question hard for me to determine is what is an adequate Navy? It seems that each Member is left to solve the problem without much light to aid him. The term is a broad one, and men radically differ about its meaning.

In this House we have two Members who doubtless represent each extreme on this great question. The distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], who advocates the building of four or five big dreadnaughts every year, and the other, my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON], who contends one is sufficient, and each of them claim they stand for an adequate Navy. These two clearly illustrate the diversity of opinion over what should be considered as an adequate Navy. There are no better-informed men on this subject in this House, and the opinion of each is worthy of earnest consideration. The advocates of a large Navy say if some country builds four big dreadnaughts we must go it one better and build five. It seems that with them numbers alone is the controlling consideration and requirements are unworthy of consideration. In this view rivalry is the controlling idea alone. Their position reminds one of the ambitious rivalry of two social leaders in the same neighborhood, if one for the social season provides herself with five new gowns the other must get six, for she must not be outdone by her rival. It is not a question with them of need, but of number. The other side contends that an adequate Navy means only such ships as our necessities require. If we need one, we should build but one; if we need none, we should build none. Economy should in this respect supplant extravagance, and by following this policy we will better serve the people and abundantly safeguard our country from any foreign or domestic foe. It should not be a question, as it seems to have been and is now with some, how many somebody else has or is building, but how many do we need. That seems to me the better and more logical policy and the one which the people of this country will more readily approve. We can not and should not ignore the voice of the people on this subject. They are deeply interested and must pay every dollar of the cost.

That is the proposition that is involved in this big Navy question. Here are two battleships now we propose to sell, constructed recently, authorized in 1903 and completed in 1908, and already they say they are not fit for service in the Navy at all. What is the reason? Does not this appeal for a better policy, a sounder and more economical policy, in the building of our battleships? Here it is proposed to sell two vessels, two of the naval fleet, and with the proceeds build one. In so doing it is proposed to expend $12,400,000 for the great dreadnaught. True, we are to receive for the two just what they cost and pay out no more for the new one. These two battleships, practically new, are now useless in our fleet, it is asserted. Who is to blame for this? Some one. A great blunder has been made, no doubt about that, and we should know who is responsible for it. Some one has made a mistake in this matter and ought to be held responsible for it. The guilty in this matter should be made to suffer. It will not do to say that improvements have been so great that they have put these great battleships out of commission and they are now obsolete for these reasons. If that argument be true, then it is the strongest reason that could be presented for the adoption of this amendment requiring the sale of the battleships and paying the money into the Treasury, to remain there for future action and perhaps a more profitable use. Twelve million four hundred thousand dollars is a large sum, and one representing much to the people of this Republic. The reason given for the selling of these two battleships at this time should receive the thoughtful consideration of every Member of this House, and that is they are not sufficiently modern to meet the requirements of our great naval fleet. They were completed in 1908, six years ago, and are now out of date. Progress is rapidly working its way in our Navy. The combined cost of the two was about $12,000,000—six millions each. This was a large expenditure, and care should be exercised in expending the people's money—much more, I am compelled to say, than was exercised in this transaction. We should be careful that we do not duplicate the stupendous blunder. That is what it should be called.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if it should be decided that the sum realized from the sale of these two ships, just the amount of the cost to construct them, is to be invested in the construction of a new dreadnaught, when could it be built and ready for use? True, the contract could and doubtless would be let at once, but when would it be built? Not in five years. It is a well-known fact that many great battleships authorized have not been commenced, and will not be for some time yet. Then why authorize what we know can not be built now and not for some time? Where would we build it? The docks and shipyards now have all of this kind of work they can do. Why not wait until it can be built at some yard where they are prepared to build it, and it may be the same can then be constructed on better terms and secure the advantage of improvements, if any are made, in battleship construction? Advantage in prices may be secured. The people should have this advantage. They must pay the bills, and should have every consideration in this regard. Why should it be hurried through now? Haste sometimes makes waste; and from what we already know, our experience in this matter now clearly proves it has occurred here, and may be repeated. Let us not be swept off of our feet by this big Navy propaganda. Much is done to popularize it, but usually by interested parties, who expect to profit thereby. Such persons are most industrious in this regard.

But the proposition of the big Navy, and the only reason, says the chairman of this committee, for the sale of these two vessels is that we want to build another dreadnaught. Why build the dreadnaught? What are we going to do with it? Let it rot at the docks, as a number of others are doing now? Where are we going to use it? When are we going to commence work upon it? Why appropriate the people's money and enter upon this contract until we know the cost of the material and the necessity and the time for building it? If the only reason for the sale of these two ships is to get an excuse to build a new dreadnaught, I do not indorse it, and I do not believe the people of the country will do so. There should be a better reason than that, and I therefore hope the proposition to build the new one will be voted down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, this trade delights my Yankee soul. How anyone can haggle over it for a minute I do not know. For two battleships which do not fit into our naval plans we are offered nearly enough money to build a superdreadnaught which will exactly meet our requirements. In other words, we are giving something we can not use in return for something which we need.

I know well enough that it is true, as the gentleman says, that the Idaho and the Mississippi are fine vessels, but they do not fit into our squadrons and we can not use them to advantage. We are mighty lucky to find a customer who will take them off our hands at cost.

Of course it is an open secret that Greece is our customer, and I am exceedingly glad that she is getting two such splendid ships. What a change has come over the spirit of that nation since Byron wrote:

> You have the Pyrrhic dance as yet,
> Where is the Pyrrhic phalanx gone?
> Of two such lessons, why forget
> The nobler and the manlier one?
> You have the letters Cadmus gave—
> Think ye he meant them for a slave?

No; Greece has amply proved that she has not lost her martial spirit. Nobly she broke the chains which galled her, and never again will she be subjugated to that foreign yoke which she threw off in 1821. Perhaps these very battleships may aid her against her former tyrants. Who knows? In any event, the world now knows that the letters Cadmus gave are inherited by a race of freemen.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the sale of these two ships should be considered from a purely economic standpoint. I do not think there is a Member of this House who would not vote to increase the efficiency and strength of our Navy if it did not cost our Government a dollar, and that is practically the proposition we have before us. We are increasing the efficiency and strength of our Navy, so far as the Mississippi and the Idaho are concerned, by 300 per cent, and it will require no additional appropriation by this House. I say "no additional appropriation" advisedly, because there is a difference between the amount of money we are going to get for these two ships and a superdreadnaught costing some $15,000,000. I am told by the Navy Department it is their intention to use guns that have already been manufactured and paid for and are in reserve in our various storehouses for this superdreadnaught when completed, so that it will, in fact, require no additional appropriation.

In other words, we are increasing the efficiency of the Navy, so far as these two ships are concerned, more than 300 per cent at some one's else expense, and that condition is brought about merely through a psychological situation existing in Europe. If it were not for that fact, we could not get $4,000,000 for these ships. Nobody wants them. They would not be any more apt to buy those two ships than they would be to buy our Indiana or Massachusetts or Oregon. In 10 years from now the Navy would be shooting at these two ships in target practice and sinking them out in the ocean.

The complement of these two ships, the Idaho and the Mississippi, is about 700 men per ship. The complement of a new superdreadnaught, oil-burning, will be about 800 men. We are saving 600 men and a set of officers by an exchange of this kind. That is what it means.

In gun power one superdreadnaught carries twelve 14-inch guns. Both the Mississippi and the Idaho combined carry only eight big 12-inch guns, so that there is no question about the superiority so far as guns are concerned. In armor a superdreadnaught carries 12 and 14 inch armor, as against 8 and 9 inch armor on the smaller boats. In the matter of speed the smaller boats will average from 15 to 16 knots per hour. A superdreadnaught will average 21 knots per hour. On a rough sea it is doubtful if the guns on the small boats could be used at all, whereas the great tonnage of the superdreadnaught will travel in any sea and give better target practice and better results in firing upon an enemy.

Slow ships can not possibly be assigned to the first line of battle. While I do not agree with some gentlemen on this side of the House in saying that these ships are obsolete—because they are not obsolete; they are merely misfits in our first line of battle—yet these ships were the last to be appropriated for after we had launched into our policy of building dreadnaughts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this proposition, taken as a whole, is meritorious and ought to be adopted. I refer to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT].

The proposition may be divided into two parts. The first is the proposition whether we should sell these ships, the Idaho and the Mississippi. The reasons that have been stated so clearly by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], who has just spoken, make the argument for their sale unanswerable. The fact that we are able at all to sell these ships, and at such an advantageous price, arises from an exigency of a foreign power, and may never occur again. There is an opportunity now to sell two ships for their original cost—ships that are not obsolete, and yet for the particular purposes for which they were built they are misfits.

The only argument which I have heard against this sale is that made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who argued that some international complication might result from our giving authority to sell these two ships. In answer to that it may be said that the amendment simply vests discretion in the Chief Executive. Who is there who is unwilling to place entire confidence in the wisdom and in the discretion of the President? He will not violate any of the rules of neutrality or in any way involve this Government in any complication with any foreign Government. If this discretion is vested in him, we may safely rely upon the proposition that such discretion will be exercised wisely and well.

I understand unofficially that it is proposed to sell these ships to the Government of Greece. Some suggestion is made that it will involve us in complications with the Government of Turkey. So far as I am concerned, I am not only willing, but I am glad if this Government, without inviting international complications, can help Greece in maintaining peace and aid her in the struggle which she is making to maintain her independence and her autonomy and her rights.

Mr. Speaker, on the other proposition it is simply contended that if we are to sell these ships and the opportunity is given that we ought to embrace, then what shall we do with the proceeds? Some gentlemen say we should deposit the money in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. PADGETT] and a large majority of the committee, I understand, say that it ought to be invested in a powerful superdreadnaught. If business can be injected into a discussion of this kind, then, as was well said by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], it is a business proposition which ought not to be ignored.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I understood the gentleman to say that a large majority of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs agreed with the chairman. How can the gentleman say that when the Committee on Naval Affairs has never had a meeting on this proposition and when this matter was never submitted to it?

Mr. SMALL. Does the gentleman state the contrary?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I do not know. I do not state anything.

Mr. SMALL. Then I simply repeat what I have heard unofficially. It may or may not be true.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say if business can be injected into this proposition, it is wise to take this money and invest it in a superdreadnaught. Such a reinvestment fortifies the wisdom of selling them, because if we are to diminish our naval force by the sale of these two ships, then it is wise that we should take the money and invest it in a dreadnaught which would have an efficiency, not alone equal to those two vessels, but three or four times their efficiency.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, this proposition to sell the Idaho and the Mississippi and to construct another dreadnaught was discussed in part by me when this conference report was up before the House a few days ago. I had just proceeded to demonstrate that the effect of that proposition, if carried out as a policy until we disposed of all the 25 battleships that we have, would be to reduce the number of our ships from 39 to 27. I had also shown that the result of it would be to reduce the number of guns on our armored vessels from 926 to 587, and in those two respects put our Navy in a condition of inferiority to that of the German Navy, whereas now in both of these respects it is largely superior to it.

One of the tests laid down by these naval experts that my friends on the other side profess to go by in all other things is that superiority in a navy is determined by the weight of the metal in a broadside. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the effect that this policy will have upon our Navy according to that test; and in order that I may give the exact figures I will read the facts in that regard, as you will find them stated in the RECORD of to-day, where I extended my remarks.

If we were to make the proposed exchange, we would, as already suggested, gain four 12-inch guns, and the weight of the metal in a broadside from these four guns is 3,480 pounds; but we would lose sixteen 8-inch guns, whose projectiles weigh 260 pounds each, making 4,160 pounds, and sixteen 7-inch guns, whose projectiles weigh 165 pounds, making 2,640 pounds. In other words, the weight of the metal in a broadside from the thirty-two 8-inch and 7-inch guns which we will lose by the exchange would be 8,800 pounds, or 5,320 pounds more than the weight of the metal in a broadside from the four 12-inch guns which we would gain. And if we were to continue this policy until we shall have sold all of our 25 battleships, and with the proceeds of each two built a dreadnaught, the total weight of the metal in a broadside from all our armored vessels would be reduced 63,840 pounds. The total weight of the metal of a broadside from all our armored vessels is now 45,954 pounds greater than that of the German armored ships; but if this new policy is carried out it will be 17,886 pounds less than that of the German armored vessels. If, therefore, the weight of the metal in a broadside is any measure of naval power, the inevitable effect of the proposed policy will be to transfer the relative superiority of our fleet over the Germans to a condition of decided inferiority.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry right there, to refresh my memory?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. No, sir; I have not time to yield, and I want to present my views.

Mr. BRITTEN. I merely want to inquire——

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will respect my rights when I tell him I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Texas). The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. That comparison is based on the assumption that with the proceeds of these two ships we could build a dreadnaught that would have upon it twelve 12-inch guns, and I make that assumption.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman is in error there.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the irrepressible gentleman from Illinois will respect my rights on this floor when I tell him I decline to yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman wants to be correct about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. And if I did want to be corrected, I would never go to such a man as he is.

Mr. BRITTEN. I did not say corrected. I said correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is out of order.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I base this comparison upon the assumption that with the proceeds of this sale we could build a dreadnaught with twelve 12-inch guns on it. I make that assumption for the reason that a dreadnaught upon which you could put 12 such guns has exactly the same tonnage as the tonnage of these two ships combined. The tonnage of a ship depends upon its size and the weight of the material in it. That is what determines how much water it will displace, and I feel sure that you could not with the proceeds of the sale of these ships build any dreadnaught that would have a tonnage superior to the combined tonnage of these two.

Now, of course, it is easy to assert, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has asserted here repeatedly, that you could build a battleship or dreadnaught like the Pennsylvania, that has a tonnage of 31,400 tons, or 5,400 tons more than the combined tonnage of these two ships. Anybody can assert that, but I tell you that, in my judgment, it is an impossibility. And this illustrates forcibly the folly of this House undertaking to decide a matter of naval policy, a matter that involves the efficiency and power of the Navy, upon statements made here on the floor of this House by gentlemen. The gentleman from Tennessee asserts one thing, and I assert that it is not true. How do you know which of us is telling the truth? How can you tell who is mistaken? You have no way to tell, and it just shows what I contend—that this matter ought to be referred to the Naval Affairs Committee, who ought to investigate it and report to this House the real facts before you act upon it.

There is another test of the effect that this would have upon our Navy, and this test is said by the experts to be more accurate than the test of the weight of the metal in a broadside. That is the muzzle energy of the guns. As I have said repeatedly, the effect of this proposition would be to exchange eight 12-inch guns on these two ships for twelve 12-inch guns on the dreadnaught we propose to build with the proceeds. In other words, we will gain four 12-inch guns. But these two ships have upon them sixteen 8-inch guns and sixteen 7-inch guns which you would lose. Now, the muzzle energy of those 32 guns is far superior to the muzzle energy of the four 12-inch guns which you would gain.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask you to notify me when I have used all my time except five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do that.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Now, these are the facts with regard to that proposition:

"The fourth effect of the change proposed in the Senate amendment is to greatly lessen the muzzle energy of our fleet; and our naval experts tell us that this is the better test.

"The four 12-inch guns which we would gain by the exchange each have a muzzle energy of 48,984 foot-tons, or a total muzzle energy for the four 195,936 foot-tons; while the sixteen 8-inch guns which we lose each have a muzzle energy of 13,715 foot-tons and the sixteen have a total muzzle energy of 209,440 foot-tons, and the sixteen 7-inch guns, each having a muzzle energy of 8,338 foot-tons, have a total of 133,408, which makes a total muzzle energy for the thirty-two 8 and 7 inch guns of 342,849 foot-tons which we would lose, against the 195,936 foot-tons we would gain. In other words, the proposed change would lessen the muzzle energy of our guns 146,912 foot-tons."

At present the muzzle energy of the entire armored vessels in our fleet is 441,000 foot-tons more than the muzzle energy of the German navy. If you carry out this foolish, silly policy, when you get to the end of it the muzzle energy of our fleet will be 1,722,000 tons less than that of the German navy.

Why do you want to make our Navy so inferior to that of Germany? Can any of you suggest any reason for it? If you can not, I can. I can tell you the reason why they would like to have our Navy inferior to that of Germany. One of the strongest pleas they have made in this whole fight to waste the money of the people on more battleships is that our Navy is inferior to that of Germany. We have shown conclusively that it is superior, and have overthrown that argument. Now, if they can adopt a policy that will make it inferior to that of Germany, you have supplied them with an argument that they have been contending for to waste the people's money.

In number of ships, in number of guns, in weight of metal, in muzzle energy, in every other respect this foolish policy will lessen and decrease the efficiency and power of the American Navy. These are the facts which I have ascertained and which I can prove by any expert in the Navy if you will bring him before the Naval Affairs Committee and let me cross-examine him. How can you reconcile those facts with the contention that we ought to do this thing? There is only one way to reconcile it in accordance with common honesty and patriotism, and that is upon the idea that has been repeated so often, until a great many good people believe it, that the dreadnaught is for some unexplained reason so superior to a battleship that any amount of sacrifice would be justifiable in order to get a dreadnaught.

I want to call your attention to the facts about that. It is a discarded idea, an idea that has been overthrown by naval experts and disproved by facts, as I can show you by the highest authority. The idea of the dreadnaught is that having superior speed it has the power to select the range of the battle at which it will fight, and that it can select a range of battle so distant as to put it out of the reach of the smaller guns of the battleship. So it could destroy a battleship before it could ever get close enough to do it any harm.

Now, there are several facts that I want you to consider in regard to this proposition. In the first place, that is an impossibility, because when the dreadnaught begins to fight at a range of battle beyond the reach of the smaller guns of the battleship it is so far away that it is impossible for it to hit. The experience of war is, the only wars we have had where battleships were engaged, that they had to shoot 100 times in order to hit 7. All these battles from which that fact has been developed were battles fought at such close range that the small guns were effective. Now, if you select the battle range so distant that the small guns can not reach the dreadnaughts, you are going to make the number of hits less than they would be if they fought at close range, as they did in all these battles.

According to the experience of war a dreadnaught would have to shoot 1,400 times to make 100 hits, and it takes 100 hits on an average to destroy a battleship, according to the authorities. The reason why it takes so many hits to destroy a battleship is because the points that the shell must strike in order to destroy it are very small—about 8 per cent of the battleship. The experience is that it takes 100 hits on an average before one of these big shells will hit in the point that will destroy the ship.

Now, take these two facts into consideration—that it must on an average hit 100 times and that it has to shoot 1,400 times to make 100 hits, and the dreadnaught could not do it, because the life of its guns are such that every one would be worn out and useless before it could fire that many shots. The life of one of these big guns is 175 shots. We use them in target practice 12 times a year, and when you have shot them 75 times they are relined, which makes them as good as new. So if we had a war every gun in our Navy would have 100 shots. Now, you take a dreadnaught with 12 guns on it and let them shoot 100 times, and that is all they could shoot if you give them necessary target practice, and that would make 1,200 shots, 200 less than, according to the authorities, is necessary to destroy a ship.

Of course, that will increase with the distance. That would be the effect if there was fighting at close range, but when you put them farther away that would enhance it.

The dreadnaught idea is impossible on account of the human vision. You can not shoot with any kind of a gun and hit a thing unless you can see it, and that makes the dreadnaught idea impossible. A naval battle is apt to occur at night when it is dark when you can not see a battleship a mile. What, then, becomes of the theory of the dreadnaught that it can stand off 8 or 9 miles and destroy a battleship? How could it do that at night when you can not see it? Not only at night but in the daytime the fog on the ocean is frequently so dense that a man on a battleship could not see another ship at all until it had got so close to it that there was danger of collision, which frequently happens. Even when there is no fog there is a mist most of the time which makes it impossible to see a battleship at any such distance as this dreadnaught idea assumes. I have spent seven days on the ocean watching the target practice of our Navy and they were shooting at a target 7 miles away.

And I feel perfectly safe in saying that nine-tenths of that time in the daytime they were not able to see the target or the battleship, and had to suspend the shooting on that account. The dreadnaught idea could have no force or place except in those rare periods of time when the atmospheric conditions happen to be such as to enable those on board to take a long range and fight at that distance if their guns were sufficient to carry out that theory. There is the greatest difference of opinion among the highest authorities on this question, and that difference grows out of these two ideas. The idea of the dreadnaught is to strike an enemy's ship near the water line, where, if it perforates the ship and makes a big hole in it, the water will be let in and sink the ship. The idea of the dreadnaught is to destroy the enemy's ship; but there is another way to overcome the enemy without destroying his ship, and it is just as effective as the destruction of the ship, and that is to kill the men, to put his guns out of action, to disorganize his communications, and destroy his firing stations. It is a fact that in every naval battle both in the Russo-Japanese War and in the Spanish-American War every ship that was overcome was defeated in this latter way, and not one of them was destroyed according to the dreadnaught idea. In that war you had no dreadnaughts, but you had battleships, and every battleship had four of these big guns and a much larger number of smaller guns, and you had them side by side to show which was the most effective. In none of those battles did one of the shells from the big guns ever strike the ship at the water line and perforate it so as to let the water in and sink the ship; but every single one that was overcome was overcome by the smaller guns, by killing the men, putting the guns out of action, destroying their communications and firing stations; and the very highest authorities, writing on this subject, as you will see from those I will cite in my speech in the RECORD, say that the easiest way to overcome an enemy is not by destroying the ship, but that it is by killing his men with these small guns and putting the big guns out of action.

Mr. Speaker, how much more time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ANSBERRY). Fifteen minutes.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I wish the Chair would notify me when I have only 5 minutes left. I desire to call attention now to the facts which have convinced the best authorities on this subject that a battleship, armed with a few big guns and a great number of small guns is more effective than the dreadnaught. One of those facts is that there are very few points in a ship where you can so disable it or destroy it. You have either to hit it at the water line where it will let the water in and sink it, or you have to strike the barrels of its guns, or you have to strike a firing station, or destroy its communication, or kill the men. You have got to hit it in some of those points. Those points are very few in a battleship or dreadnaught. The consequence is that you have to fire a great many shells before you can count on hitting it in a vital point. To show the difference between these two ships that we have, the Idaho and the Mississippi, and the one that we propose to get, these two ships have 40 guns and your dreadnaught will have 12. They have 28 more guns than your dreadnaught. The big guns on your dreadnaught will shoot twice a minute. In other words, these four 12-inch guns that we will gain would shoot 8 times a minute. The 8-inch guns will shoot 6 times a minute, and the 7-inch guns will shoot 8 times a minute, and the thirty-two 7 and 8-inch guns will shoot 224 times in a minute. In other words, they will shoot just 28 shells every time these four guns that you will gain will shoot 1. Therefore, the chance of one of those shells hitting the ship in a vital point is 28 times as great as the chance of the four guns that you are going to gain hitting at a point that will destroy the ship.

If the Members of the House will take the British Navy Annual and read an article from Reginald Custance, on this very question as to whether the dreadnaught or the battleship is the more effective, if you will just take the trouble to read that through, and before you read it you will not make up your mind that you are not going to be convinced, you will be convinced by it. His argument is unanswerable. It is based on facts, and this proposition of ours to dispose of our battleships and convert them into dreadnaughts will be a great mistake. I want to submit this to you. This is not just a matter of argument, it is not just a matter of reason, but it is substantiated by history. Naval warfare shows that in every battle every ship that has been overcome has been overcome by the small guns, and the whole world has now recognized that this dreadnaught idea was a mistake. At the time we began to build dreadnaughts England had 41 battleships armed each with four large guns and a much larger number of small guns. Germany had 20 and we had 25. England has built, I believe, 17 dreadnaughts that are completed. Every one of those dreadnaughts that England has completed was built on this dreadnaught idea of all big guns, and they are armed exclusively with big guns, but every single ship that Great Britain is building to-day is being built on the old battleship idea of having each vessel armed partly with big guns and partly with a much larger number of small guns. Great Britain is not building a single ship on this dreadnaught idea. Take the Rio de Janciro, which is perhaps the most heavily armed ship under construction except the Pennsylvania.

That ship has fourteen 12-inch guns and twenty 6-inch guns, and you may get the books and read the description of all the modern ships, and you will find that the world has abandoned this old-fashioned idea of the all-big-gun ship; and yet we are asleep, unconscious of what the world is doing, and we propose to take our battleships and convert them into dreadnaughts, when the world acknowledges that that is a mistake.

Of course we could sell these two battleships, and we could add enough money to what we get to build a battleship that would perhaps be more powerful than both of these that we are going to sell. We can do that. We can do that without selling them. We have plenty of money, and we can build any kind of a ship that we want; but the proposition to sell these two battleships and add enough money to what we get, as the chairman of the committee says, to build a dreadnaught that will be four times as great as these reminds me of the fellow that swapped the $100 horse for a $50 horse even, and then contended that he had made a good trade because he took $100 out of his pocket and with this money and the $50 horse got a better one than he had at first. That is the proposition you have here.

I hope this House will consider this fact, that it is a new proposition which never has been investigated. The committee has never had it up before it. It is a proposition that affects the very vitals of our Navy, and before any such proposition is adopted, I appeal to the Members of this House to give the Committee on Naval Affairs an opportunity to examine into it and find out whether the object of it is to improve our Navy or not, or whether it is to provide a contract for another corporation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Forty minutes of the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire how many speeches there are to be on the other side?

Mr. PADGETT. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER,], and I have had a page looking for him, but I can not find him on the floor at present.

Mr. MANN. He was here a moment ago.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] one minute.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] refused to yield to me for a question a few minutes ago. I merely wanted to call the attention of the House to the fact that his entire argument and his entire comparison is based on a ship we do not expect to build. His entire argument is based on a 26,000-ton ship, carrying as its heaviest armament twelve 12-inch guns, which the Navy Department has no intention whatever of building. I wanted to correct the gentleman in regard to that, but he would not permit it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has 23 minutes left.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the proposition that the House has to consider to-day is a very simple one, and, in my judgment, the House ought not to hesitate to act upon it, and act favorably on the recommendation of the chairman of the committee, and therefore I shall favor and support the amendment which is offered by him. We have the administration saying to the Congress, having considered the matter carefully, that this change ought to be made. It is declared and believed that this is a great opportunity, that a chance is offered us now to materially improve and strengthen the Navy, and why should we hesitate to do this? Is it because we do not want an efficient navy? Is it because we would rather see it weakened than strengthened? I can well understand the attitude of the gentleman from Mississippi; he is not anxious for a strong navy; he is opposed to it, and there are other gentlemen who are opposed to any proposition to strengthen the Navy. I can very easily understand that point of view; but for those of us who believe that this country ought to maintain an adequate navy there ought to be no question regarding it. Are we sufficient in information and in judgment to say that this change ought not to be made?

The gentleman from Mississippi alleges that as a matter of technical policy it is not a good thing to have dreadnaughts; that it is better to have a large number of smaller battleships; but the judgment of the world is otherwise. He says that experts differ. It may be that some experts agree with the position that he takes, but the nations of the world do not so agree. They are building large ships, effective battleships, dreadnaught battleships, because they believe that by that means they can best strengthen their navies. We would be going against the admitted judgment of the world if we would change our policy. If dreadnaughts are a bad policy, we ought not to follow this bad system; if it is a good policy, we ought to strengthen our Navy on this line if we can do so by this action. The Secretary of the Navy says this ought to be done. The naval experts say that this ought to be done. They say this because we will thus obtain one battleship that, in efficiency, as they believe, in the point of strengthening the Navy will make the Navy three times as effective and strong as it will to retain the two battleships. We are told that to this extent it will make our Navy a better and stronger one, and why ought not we to do it? There is no question in my mind but what it is our duty, if we believe that our Navy ought to be strengthened and can be strengthened thus advantageously and cheaply, that we should do it now. Here we have two small battleships that they say are not in consonance with the upbuilding of a harmonious Navy, that we can advantageously dispose of them, that we can thus strengthen it as a whole, and this opportunity comes to us now when we can sell those two old ships for all that they cost us and build a new and better and stronger battleship than any we have now by the expenditure of a very small amount in addition to what we will receive from them. Why should not we do it? You gentlemen in a business of your own would be glad of such a chance, if it were offered, and such an opportunity will not likely occur again. Circumstances such as these do not arise every day.

We have a chance now to do that which will not come to us again probably in the history of the life of any man who is now here present. So I am in favor of this proposition. I am not in favor of selling these battleships and putting the money into the Treasury, because that would be weakening the Navy, and I am not in favor of weakening it. I am not in favor of any proposition that will make the Navy of the United States less effective than it is now. I am not a big Navy advocate, but I do believe that the United States is compelled, in view of existing conditions, to maintain a fairly adequate Navy, and it should be made just as efficacious, just as strong as we possibly can with the means and with the policy we have now with regard to how much money we should expend in the development of our Navy.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. If these two ships should be sold, how long would it be before a dreadnaught could be built?

Mr. TOWNER. I think about three years.

Mr. ADAIR. Then, for at least three years it would weaken the Navy just that much, would it not?

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman is entirely correct about that. And if there were such conditions existing as made it unwise for us to weaken our Navy, I would not be in favor of this charge or of disposing of the vessels at all.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield.

Mr. FESS. What is the incident in your mind where you say, if we do not do it now, probably the opportunity will not come to us again?

Mr. TOWNER. For the reason that there is a nation now ready and willing to take these ships at the price that we paid for them. Certainly those circumstances do not ordinarily arise.

Mr. FESS. What is the presumption on the part of Greece, that wants them?

Mr. TOWNER. Because of the fact that she is engaged, or probably soon will be engaged, in war with a nation that has a stronger navy than she has.

Mr. FESS. Is there any danger, with that point of view in our mind, in our transferring these ships to that country?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no.

Mr. FESS. Does the protest from Turkey mean anything to you at all?

Mr. TOWNER. The protest from Turkey, as we understand it, is made merely upon the ordinary ground that might exist when any nation would not desire to see a rival nation strengthened. But we have a perfect right to sell to Greece, as we would have a perfect right to sell to Turkey, under existing conditions. We are not violating any international agreement or international right. And certainly the gentleman does not believe for a moment that we are in any danger of any offensive demonstrations against this country by Turkey?

Mr. FESS. No. My point is, Are we undignified by selling at this time, when we know that the reason for the purchase is the acute situation between Turkey and Greece?

Mr. TOWNER. No, I will say to the gentleman; because it is done often, and has been done always. At the commencement of the Spanish-American War we did it. Other nations have frequently done it. They buy ships when they need them, when they think they ought to do so.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Suppose that the sale, or the proposition to sell, would be taken as an occasion for Turkey to declare war against Greece, and this is done before we have delivered the ships; can we complete the contract under international law if war has been declared by Turkey?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly; if the agreement is made prior to the declaration of war.

Mr. FESS. I would say to the gentleman that I am up in the air on this question. I do not know how to vote.

Mr. SAUNDERS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understood from what you said to the gentleman from Ohio that you think this country with perfect safety can do without these two ships for three years?

Mr. TOWNER. I certainly think so.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why do you think that at the end of three years we will have need of an equivalent of these two ships? Why look that far into the future? Where is there any danger to our self-defense that will make it impossible for us to dispense with them for three years?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] how many more speeches he has on his side?

Mr. PADGETT. I understand you have only one, and I expect to have only one.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. You have only one more?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am disposed, so far as I am concerned, to take the discretion of the President in regard to the sale of these battleships, though I think it were better for the United States not to become engaged in any entangling alliances or to interfere for the purpose of bringing about or preventing war between two European powers. But with me that is not the question involved here.

Ever since I have been a Member of this House I have sought to uphold the dignity and power of the House as against the constant assaults upon it both from the Senate and from the Government departments. [Applause.] If we have two battleships which are now merely old junk, so far as business is concerned, it would be advisable to sell them if we can get a high price for them. If we can sell 50 cents' worth of battleship for $2, as far as the business is concerned it would be advisable to sell. But what I object to in the matter is the lack of confidence on the part of the Navy officers in Congress. If we ought to sell the battleships both as a matter of business and diplomacy, let us sell them and put the money into the Treasury, where it belongs, and then let Congress in its power determine whether that money shall be used to build another battleship or be used for some other purpose. In no other way can we uphold either the dignity or the power of the House of Representatives. We are the body which proposes appropriations, and if we permit a department of the Government to come to us and say, "I have something in my department which I do not need, which I have not much use for, which I will dispose of if you will let me trade it for something else," we have lost our power and degraded our dignity. Why, if this money when deposited ought to be used for the construction of a new battleship—and I do not say it ought not to be so used—allow Congress to determine that fact when it has the money. Why should the department so lack confidence in the House of Representatives that it will not make the sale unless it knows in advance what it can do with that money, and that it can not trust Congress to properly appropriate the money? I think we still have knowledge and wisdom enough in the House of Representatives to know, when the proper time comes, whether we wish to appropriate money for one purpose or to use the same money for another purpose. And unless we uphold our power and our dignity, we might as well resign and be wiped off the face of the map. The amendment which I have proposed would permit, so far as the rest of it is concerned, the sale of these battleships in the discretion of the President and provide that the proceeds of the sale should be paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, like the proceeds of the sale of everything else which the Government sells.

If we sell Panama Canal material, it is paid into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. We may appropriate the money next year for new construction on the canal, but if Col. Goethals had come to Congress and said, "I would like to sell some of these old French machines as junk provided you will let me have the money to buy something else," we would have said to him what we ought to say now to the Navy Department, "You may sell the material and turn the money into the Treasury, and we shall determine what will be done with that money." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in behalf of the Navy Department that there is no intention on the part of the department to dicker with Congress. The department has simply submitted, as was its duty and its prerogative to do, a plain business proposition, and has asked the approval and the authority of the Congress. They have simply said, "We have an opportunity to sell two ships that are not serviceable to us. They are not adapted to our conditions; they do not fit in with the remainder of our fleet; they are an impediment to the fleet. We can sell them at the original cost, and we ask authority to sell them and to use this money to build another ship."

Now, that is a plain proposition without any dickering or anything of the kind; and the criticism of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I think, grows out of his habit of hunting and finding an opportunity to try to criticize the administration at every opportunity he gets. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I wish to call attention also to some of the statements of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON], who can make more peculiar arguments than any man that I have ever seen. [Laughter.] He has argued here before you, time and again and to-day, seriously that a little ship with little guns is better than a big ship with big guns, and he goes on to say that the nations of the world are adopting that policy. I have here the building programs of the nations. Let me call your attention to them. Great Britain is building 14 dreadnaughts, and not a single one of the old-type battleships that the gentleman was talking about. Germany is building 6 dreadnaughts, and not a single one of the battleships.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Will the gentleman state to this House, for instance, that the Queen Elizabeth, one of those ships that England is building, has not gotten on her sixteen 6-inch guns?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and all of ours have got more than that. I will take up this question with you in a minute.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. We have not any such thing.

Mr. PADGETT. Let us take up one thing at a time. The United States is building five dreadnaughts, and not a single one of the old-type battleships. Japan is building four dreadnaughts, and not one of the old-type battleships. Italy is building seven dreadnaughts, and not one of the old-type battleships. And yet the gentleman from Mississippi comes here before us and argues that the policy of the nations of the world is to build little ships with little guns instead of big ships with big guns. Here are the facts.

Then the gentleman said here that these two ships had four 12-inch guns, and I have forgotten how many—28, I believe it was, he said—of the small guns, and that the dreadnaughts had 12 big guns and no little guns. The gentleman does not investigate. He simply looks at first impressions. Take the Oklahoma. That has ten 14-inch guns. It has also twenty-one 5-inch guns. The Pennsylvania has twelve 14-inch guns and twenty-two 5-inch guns. The Texas has ten 14-inch guns and twenty-one 5-inch guns. And then, besides, the Oklahoma has four 3-pounders, the Pennsylvania has four 3-pounders, and the Texas has four 3-pounders.

Here is a table which shows that every dreadnaught that we have not only has a main battery of big guns but every one of them has a subordinate battery of small guns. Yet the gentleman from Mississippi comes here and states to you and seriously argues that a dreadnaught could fire about so many guns a minute—two, I believe he said, a minute with the big guns—and it would be swamped with the little guns from the other ship. Each one of these dreadnaughts has more little guns, I think, than any of these old-type battleships. They have simply two batteries—first the main battery, and then the subordinate battery for torpedo attacks.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; certainly.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I do not deny the fact that all our battleships, dreadnaughts and every other kind, have a lot of small guns; but do not you know as a fact that these little guns that you are talking about are guns that are put on all the ships for the purpose of saluting the Committee on Naval Affairs when its members go aboard? [Laughter.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I can only answer that question by saying that that statement of the gentleman has as much accuracy in it as any other statement he has made about the Navy. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but little longer. Here is a plain business proposition that comes to us at this time, and it is simply this: That we have two ships that do not fit in our program of the Navy. Our dreadnaughts are of 20,000 to 30,000 tons displacement, each carrying 14-inch guns, and here are ships of 13,000 tons, each carrying four 12-inch guns. Our dreadnaughts have a speed of 20 or more knots. These smaller ships are down to between 15 and 16 knots. Here is a proposition to convert these two ships into money, without the loss of a single cent, and get the original cost, and convert the proceeds into a ship up to date, that has more than four times the military and fighting value of either one of those ships, or more than twice the value of both of them combined. [Applause.]

Now, then, the simple question is, we can make this trade now. If we let it go by, the opportunity will not come again, and in a few years the gentleman will be complaining that these ships go into the junk pile. Let us be business men. Let us deal with a business proposition in a business way and sell these ships and get the money and replace them. They say it will take three years yet to build another ship. The sooner we begin building it, the sooner we will have it completed.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said, "Put the money into the Treasury and then come back next year and authorize the proposition." Here is a proposition to do both in the same amendment—sell the two ships and build a new one.

Mr. Speaker, there is only one other thing to which I wish to call attention. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is simply a shrewd proposition designed to kill this whole provision. I ask that his amendment be voted down and that the House concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment which I have sent to the desk, which is simply to sell these ships and use the money to build another one; in other words, to convert these two ships into one that is worth four times as much as either one of them. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 66.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 104, nays 153, answered "present" 7, not voting 169, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin (against Mann amendment) with Mr. FREAR (for Mann amendment).

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded present.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listening?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rule.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BELL, voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I voted "aye," but I wish to withdraw my vote and to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] to concur in Senate amendment 71, with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were 124 ayes and 81 noes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 89, answered "present" 5, not voting 164, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. PADGETT to concur with an amendment was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. SUTHERLAND.

Mr. BARNHART with Mr. HOWELL.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin with Mr. FREAR.

On this vote:

Mr. ALEXANDER (for Padgett motion) with Mr. SAUNDERS (against).

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PADGETT, Mr. TALCOTT of Maryland, and Mr. BUTLER.

SUSPENSION DAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, next Monday is the fifth Monday in the month. It belongs neither to the District Committee nor to the Unanimous Consent Calendar. There are a number of bills where applications have been made to suspend the rules and pass them. I ask unanimous consent that motions to suspend the rules and pass bills may be in order next Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that on next Monday motions to suspend the rules shall be in order.

Mr. BURNETT. Reserving the right to object, is not that unanimous-consent day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it does not belong to anybody.

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, have we had any suspension days this session?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There have been a good many suspension days, but no suspensions.

Mr. MURDOCK. What are these bills?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Speaker has the power of recognition for suspension of the rules, and I am not proposing anybody's bill. I am merely proposing an opportunity for gentlemen who desire to be recognized for suspension of the rules to get a chance to get those bills up.

Mr. MURDOCK. How does recognition come on suspension day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is entirely in the hands of the Speaker.

Mr. MURDOCK. Members who have bills on the calendar who desire to move to suspend the rules to pass those bills must see the Speaker and arrange for recognition?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That has always been the custom.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Does that apply to any bill that is on the calendar?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to couple with his request a proviso that the sundry civil bill be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Alabama say to that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire in the world to interfere with the sundry civil appropriation bill, because I recognize that it is more important than the other bills, and ought to go through. I equally have no doubt that the sundry civil bill will be disposed of by that time, but I will modify my request to that extent that next Monday it may be in order for the Speaker to recognize gentlemen to pass bills under suspension of the rules, not to interfere with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama will remember that the rule on suspension is something like this, that suspension of the rules shall be in order twice a month, on the first and third Mondays, preference to be given to committees on one Monday and to membership on the other.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. How will that rule operate on this fifth Monday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, my request was not to consider committees or individuals, but to allow the Speaker to recognize either committee or individual suspensions. It takes a two-thirds vote to pass the bills that will come up, and those that will come up will not be partisan measures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that on next Monday, being the fifth Monday in the month and not being claimed especially by either the Committee on the District of Columbia or the Unanimous Consent Calendar, motions to suspend the rules shall be in order, not to interfere with the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there will not be notice to the House, will there, of what bills will be called up on that day? There will be no calendar?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There never is. The Unanimous Consent Calendar has grown so large that it has crowded out motions to suspend the rules. The Speaker has recognized the Unanimous Consent Calendar over motions to suspend the rules, although I believe that it is within the power of the Speaker to recognize motions to suspend the rules in preference to the Unanimous Consent Calendar, if he so desires. The Unanimous Consent Calendar, however, has shoved suspension out of the way, and this will be an opportunity to let Members call up bills that are not of a partisan nature, but are of public moment. Of course, it will require a two-thirds vote to pass any of them.

Mr. COOPER. Is it proposed on Monday to bring up the water-power bill that has been made a special order?

Mr. GARNER. That is with the Speaker.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am personally very much interested in the passage of that bill, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. MANN. But that will not come up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of Members that no one has ever applied to the Chair to suspend the rules on that bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that there is an order of the House now in existence giving privilege to that water-power bill, and if this request be objected to, the water-power bill would come up on that day, but this would give suspension a preference to the water-power bill. I am in hopes that that bill will come up before that time.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman will remember that the Moon bill has preference.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask with reference to the reclamation extension bill. Would there be any objection to its coming up if the other Land Department bills came up?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think there is a possibility of the reclamation extension bill coming up before that time.

Mr. BRYAN. That bill may come up to-morrow on the regular call of committees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It might. I am not attempting to make any order in reference to what bills shall come up.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Alabama will permit me, I would state that there is no intention at all, if this consent be given, to attempt to call up the bill to amend the general dam act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman means under suspension of the rules?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; because it already has been made privileged by consent of the House.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. What will be the regular order of business on Monday next without this special order?

The SPEAKER. It would be an ordinary legislative day; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] would have the right of way with his appropriation bill. It is the fifth Monday of the month.

Mr. COOPER. But suppose that bill were passed before Monday, what would be the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The bill the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] refers to—the dam bill—because that, by unanimous consent, has been made a privileged matter.

Mr. ADAMSON. And some folks have damned it; but I think we will turn it loose when we can get it on the floor.

The SPEAKER. And when this appropriation bill is out of the way, and no conference report or privileged matter is called up, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia, or some one for him, to call that bill up, because the House gave it a privileged status by unanimous consent three or four weeks ago, and it would have been disposed of long ago if it had not been for that special order that was brought in by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. COOPER. I understood the gentleman from Georgia to say it is not his purpose to take up that bill on next Monday.

Mr. MANN. He could not pass one end of it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I expect to call it up as soon as the sundry civil bill is out of the way.

Mr. COOPER. I understood the gentleman from Georgia to say, a few moments ago, he would not take it up.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will not ask recognition to suspend the rules; no, sir. I will not do that. I have a much better chance the other way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask something easy, and that is to lay two bills on the table, because identical bills have already passed the House.

The SPEAKER. What are the numbers?

Mr. ADAMSON. One is H. R. 1922, on the Union Calendar, and the other is H. R. 16133, on the House Calendar. Identical bills have already passed and these ought to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bills by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 16133. A bill to amend section 20 of an act to regulate commerce.

H. R. 1922. A bill to repeal that part of the act entitled "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal, and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912, which exempts vessels engaged in the coastwise trade from tolls at the Panama Canal.

Mr. ADAMSON. One of those is the canal tolls repeal and the other is the stocks and bonds bill, both of which have passed the House.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman got through with the canal tolls repeal now?

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think the gentleman will ever be able to resurrect that iniquity in the world any more.

Mr. MANN. The next Congress will repeal what has been done this time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these two bills will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the naval bill we had under discussion a short time ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the naval bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. On what? I shall object if gentlemen do not state the subject.

Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa. On the naval bill, on the battleship question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois did not know I wanted to extend my remarks on the naval bill, and that is why he objected.

The SPEAKER. Each gentleman ought to state on what subject he desires to extend his remarks, and it would save a great deal of trouble. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the naval bill. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the privilege of making an announcement of about two sentences. I want to call attention——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DONOVAN (continuing). To the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is present——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects.

Mr. DONOVAN. Who?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois. While there is a good membership present the Chair wants to remind Members of two or three of the minor rules. One is that when a gentleman has the floor and another gentleman wants to interrupt him he ought to address the Chair. The reasons for that rule are good. Another one is that Members must not crowd around this desk when the roll is being called. It pesters the clerks and fuddles them so they do not know what they are doing; and the third rule, that is being violated right straight along, is that Members sitting in their seats should not inject remarks into a gentleman's speech. It is not fair or conducive to order. And the fourth, that is violated constantly, is that Members address each other as "you," and so forth, which is prohibited by the rule.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, what became of my request?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected to the gentleman's request.

Mr. DONOVAN. The minority leader.

Mr. MANN. The request was not submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MANN. I objected to the gentleman talking without any attention being paid to his request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Connecticut speaking for two minutes?

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what became of my request?

The SPEAKER. Why, it was granted.

Mr. MANN. No.

The SPEAKER. That is true; it was not.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to make a statement to the Speaker. The Speaker made a very essential statement here a few minutes ago to the effect that men who interrupt should address the Speaker, and that is true, and yet no man since has addressed the Speaker.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself is speaking out of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Of course I am; I am trying to get in order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin to extend his remarks on the naval appropriation bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Is there objection to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] addressing the House for two minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to call attention to this fact, that one of the most intellectual Members of this body has put in an appearance to-day at this session. I refer to the college president from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. He very kindly called attention to the attendance of this body before he departed, and after doing it we have not been able to look upon his face until to-day. [Applause.] We hope he will continue to perform the duties pertaining to a Representative in Congress and will not set such a bad example as to hie himself away three weeks at a time, as he has of late. [Laughter.]

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate concurrent resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 22.

Whereas the Government of the United States has erected a monument in Hollywood Cemetery at Richmond, Va., over the grave of President John Tyler; and

Whereas exercises will be held very soon to unveil the said monument and it being considered very appropriate that the Senate and House of Representatives should be properly represented on this occasion: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a committee of 10 members be appointed, 5 by the President of the Senate and 5 by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to represent the Congress of the United States to attend said ceremonies, and authority is hereby given to expend $250 from the contingent fund of the Senate and $250 from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives to defray the expenses of said committee, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives, respectively—to the Committee on the Library.

FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 12235—the fortifications appropriation bill—and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] calls up the conference report on the fortifications bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 551).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12235) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 3, and 5.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
GEO. WHITE,
WM. M. CALDER,
Managers on the part of the House.
N. P. BRYAN,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12235) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the amendments of the Senate, namely:

On amendment No. 1: Appropriates $450,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $900,000, as proposed by the Senate, for purchase, manufacture, and test of mountain, field, and siege cannon.

On amendment No. 2: Appropriates $1,200,000, instead of $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate and $900,000 as proposed by the House, for ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon.

On amendment No. 3: Appropriates $45,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $55,000, as proposed by the Senate, for alteration and maintenance of mobile artillery in the United States.

On amendments Nos. 4 and 5, relating to protection, preservation, and repair of fortification in the insular possessions: Appropriates $1,000, instead of $1,500 as proposed by the Senate and $500 as proposed by the House, for the Hawaiian Islands and strikes out the appropriation of $7,000 for the Philippine Islands.

On amendments Nos. 6, 7, and 8, relating to preservation and repair of torpedo structures in the insular possessions: Appropriates $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $500, as proposed by the House, for the Hawaiian Islands and $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $750, as proposed by the House, for the Philippine Islands.

On amendments Nos. 9, 10, and 11, relating to reserve equipment in the insular possessions: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, $50,000 for the Hawaiian Islands and $100,000 for the Philippine Islands.

On amendments Nos. 12 and 13: Appropriates $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $750, as proposed by the House, for tools and appliances for maintaining and operating searchlights and electric light and power plants in the Hawaiian Islands.

The bill as passed by the Senate appropriated $6,895,200, which sum exceeded the bill as passed by the House by $1,720,000. In conference the Senate receded from $1,267,500, which makes the bill as agreed upon carry a total of $5,627,700.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
GEO. WHITE,
WM. M. CALDER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 12045—the omnibus pension bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 12045, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12045) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.
The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 843).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12045) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 4, 8, 16, 18, 21.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, and agree to the same.

JOE J. RUSSELL,
J. A. M. ADAIR,
Managers on the part of the House.
CHARLES F. JOHNSON,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I wish to give notice that I will ask the House to sit the same as last night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] gives notice that he will ask the House to sit to-night until 11 o'clock p. m., or somewhere along there.

Mr. MANN. Not as late as that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil bill, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think under the agreement we made the other day that we now revert to the Frankford Arsenal item, on page 52.

The CHAIRMAN. There is pending a point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], which the Chair is ready to dispose of and rule upon, unless some gentlemen desire to be heard upon it. The Chair will indicate now before anyone is heard, in order that they may have full knowledge, that he is inclined to think this vote should be taken over again.

Mr. DONOHOE. I would ask the Chair what would be the situation in case we had reached the end of a paragraph without any opposition being offered to that paragraph and a Member then made the point of no quorum? Would we have to go back over that paragraph again?

The CHAIRMAN. Not under the practice of the House.

Mr. DONOHOE. Now, Mr. Chairman, this particular item was disposed of by the ruling of the Chair:

The committee divided; and on a division there were—ayes 35, noes 31.

The Chairman said:

On this question the ayes are 35, the noes are 31. The amendment is agreed to.

After that the point of order was made.

The CHAIRMAN. The situation was this: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] offered the amendment, and it was voted upon first by a viva voce vote, and then a division was demanded, and it was voted upon by the committee by a division. Upon that vote less than a quorum voted. The Chair announced the result in accordance with the custom which usually prevails in the Committee of the Whole, and immediately after the announcement of the result the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the point that there was no quorum present. A count was immediately taken, which developed that there was no quorum present. Now, the Constitution provides that a majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business. The rules of the House provide that 100 shall constitute a quorum in the Committee of the Whole. The Chair believes that either in the House or in the Committee of the Whole where that point is made within a reasonable time, and it develops within a reasonable time, without any effort at filibustering, that there is not a quorum present, there ought to be a quorum pass upon that question of business before the House. The Chair may be wrong about it. The Chair, of course, will entertain an appeal. The Chair does sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and the question is on the amendment.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, before the amendment is voted upon, I think it would be fair that gentlemen who are present now and who were not here when the motion was offered should know something of the circumstances and conditions of the case. I have here, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported before the gentleman proceeds?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, after line 17, insert the following:
"For extension of metal storehouse, $13,500."

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation provides for the extension of a metal storehouse at Frankford Arsenal. I have here some photographs that were taken within the last 10 days showing the congested condition with regard to the storage of metals and other materials at the arsenal. I feel that there is scarcely a gentleman present who, if he will look over these photographs, would be unwilling to vote for this amendment, especially when he considers that the Frankford Arsenal saved to the Government last year in the manufacture of small-arms and artillery ammunition almost $2,000,000, considering what the Government would have to pay if they had bought the ammunition on the outside. I have here one view of a loading platform, showing the congestion due to the storage of valuable brass and german-silver scrap. Here is another photograph showing an accumulation of scrap on the platform which should be stored under cover, and hundreds of boxes on the outside exposed to the elements. Another photograph shows the interior of the tin shop, where most of these boxes are made.

The box linings and boxes should be stored in a proper storehouse instead of being stored in the shop where they are made and where there is not room for them. Another view here is the small-arms ammunition boxes, for which there is no room on the inside. Thousands of these boxes, made of metal, are exposed to the elements because of the fact that there is no storage room for them.

Now, the department estimated for two storerooms, but the committee in their wisdom failed to put them in the bill. I am now appealing to the committee to put them in. Here are valuable boxes, costing the Government 60 cents each, stored in the open because of lack of room in the metal ammunition storehouse. Here is also a photograph showing thousands of these boxes outside, exposed to the weather, perhaps rusting.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOHOE. I do.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the size of the present storehouse?

Mr. DONOHOE. I have not the dimensions.

Mr. GOULDEN. Approximately what is the length and breadth of it?

Mr. DONOHOE. I can not say.

Mr. GOULDEN. It is comparatively small, however?

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes; it is comparatively small. Here are views of the interior of the metal storehouse, showing the present crowded condition, with boxes of valuable material, brass and german silver and other metals, piled up almost to the rafters. Here is another view of the metal storehouse showing very much the same thing.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I trust the members of the committee will consider that Frankford Arsenal is one of the most economical workshops of the Government and provide for this small storehouse that the arsenal urgently and absolutely needs for the protection of the valuable material that is now on the outside exposed to the weather.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. This is urgently recommended by the department?

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes; it is urgently recommended by the department.

Mr. HOWARD. But it is not recommended by the committee?

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, on June 12, when these items were first reached, several Members of the House pointed out the urgent necessity of acquiring for Frankford Arsenal some 25 acres of adjoining land. Eloquent and, to my mind, convincing arguments were presented by several Representatives in support of my amendment providing $100,000 for the purchase of the land in question. Compared with the Government arsenals at Rock Island, Watervliet, Springfield, and Watertown, it was pointed out that in proportion to the size of its working force, the amount of its annual disbursements, or the value of its manufactured product, Frankford Arsenal is badly hampered for room and has far outgrown in these respects its present area of 63 acres. In short, it was clearly shown that in the interest of the safety of the employees of the arsenal, as well as in the interest of economy and good business policy, the additional land—the last piece available—should be purchased before it is too late.

But a majority of the gentlemen who were present were evidently carried away by the statements of Chairman FITZGERALD, of the Appropriations Committee, who said in substance, first, that the item has not been estimated for by the War Department; second, that it is not necessary to enlarge the facilities of Frankford Arsenal; and, third, that we should not buy land at Frankford when we have unlimited land and abundant water power at Rock Island.

While it is true that the War Department has not recently estimated for the purchase of this land, it is also true that the department did heretofore estimate for it, that it still favors the proposition, and that the item has been left out of the estimates this year, not because it is not deemed advantageous, but "because other needs of the department have been so immediately pressing." Under date of April 14, 1914, Hon. Lindley M. Garrison, Secretary of War, wrote to Senator SWANSON, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the United States Senate, as follows:

DEAR SENATOR: I return herewith the bill (S. 5055) to provide for the acquirement of about 25 acres of land adjoining the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia.

The principal reasons for the purchase of this property by the Government are as follows:

1. To avoid the serious situation which would arise if this property should be purchased by parties who would desire to utilize it for dwellings or factory purposes, since there is no doubt that in case such buildings should be erected upon the property the occupants would object to the experimental firings and other tests involving the use of high explosives which are conducted at the Frankford Arsenal.

2. The utilization of the property for the storage of explosives so as to remove them a safe distance from the present shop buildings.

3. To utilize the property for the construction of certain storehouses and shop buildings, which will undoubtedly be necessary in the expansion of the manufacturing plant at the Frankford Arsenal in the future and for which it would be impossible to secure grounds if this piece of property shall irrevocably pass to other uses.

The War Department has in the past submitted estimates for the purchase of this property, but I have not repeated the estimate; not because the purchase would not be advantageous and such as would be made by any efficient corporation in a similar position, but because other needs of the War Department have been so immediately pressing that I have been obliged to let this particular matter rest, although I recognize that in doing so the danger is incurred of the passage of the opportunity to make the purchase advantageously.

I believe that the land is now practically owned by the University of Pennsylvania, having been left to it as a part of an estate. I think a fair price would be somewhere between $140,000 to $150,000, so that the amount carried in the bill—$154,000—should be sufficient to include the cost of condemnation proceedings should such be necessary, as contemplated by the bill.

Sincerely, yours, LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

This letter indicates how the Secretary of War feels regarding the necessity of purchasing this land and the advisability of increasing the facilities of the Frankford Arsenal. And I have personal knowledge that similar views on the subject are entertained by Gen. Crozier, the Chief of Ordnance, and by other prominent officials of the War Department. Gen. Crozier knows and admits that Frankford Arsenal is one of the most profitable of the Government's manufacturing establishments. In his last annual report the general says of it:

In the manufacture of artillery ammunition and small-arms ammunition at that arsenal a saving of over $1,500,000 was made during the year as compared with what the same ammunition would have cost if procured from private establishments at the best prices which were offered. Also, in the manufacture under contract of these same two classes of ammunition, $400,000 more were paid than it would have cost to make it at the arsenal.

Gen. Crozier, with his long experience in the Ordnance Department, realizes that the economies at Frankford Arsenal are due in large measure to its ideal location within the limits of a great manufacturing city, whose population is now 1,600,000. On January 29 of this year, during the debate on the fortifications bill, I said on this point:

Its location as a manufacturing plant is most favorable. This fact was recognized as far back as 1875, when a board of ordnance officers recommended that the plant be enlarged and that 75 acres of additional land be purchased for that purpose.

Being within the city of Philadelphia, it is easily accessible for 250,000 skilled workmen. It is within 275 miles of the soft-coal fields of Pennsylvania, the source of its fuel supply; within 150 miles of Connecticut, from which it draws its brass for manufacturing; within 57 miles of Bethlehem, Pa., 58 miles of Reading, Pa., and 350 miles of Pittsburgh, Pa., from which points, as well as from Philadelphia, it procures its steel; within 30 miles of Carneys Point, N. J., and 136 miles of Picatinny Arsenal, N. J., from which it gets its explosives for the manufacture of ammunition.

Its shipping facilities are unsurpassed. It has direct railroad connection with the Pennsylvania Railroad, while the other railway lines that enter Philadelphia, the Reading and the Baltimore & Ohio, are within easy reach. In that great railroad center a supply of suitable cars for all purposes is procurable at all times on short notice. * * *

These advantages of location—unrivaled labor market, proximity to supplies, and adequate transportation facilities—are the main factors in the development of the remarkable economies of Frankford Arsenal.

Members of this House who have inspected the plant, including some members of the Committee on Appropriations, are of one mind in favor of the purchase of the adjoining 25 acres of land. On the other hand, the chairman and some other members of the Committee on Appropriations seem to think that it would be unwise to enlarge the Frankford Arsenal while we have plenty of unused land and an abundance of cheap water power at the Rock Island Arsenal. But free land and cheap power would not be sufficient inducement for a sensible manufacturer to abandon a plant that has been paying for itself in profits every 30 months. Almost every argument that has been advanced in support of the proposition that the Government shall manufacture all of its requirements in ammunition is based on economies that have been effected at Frankford Arsenal.

We have heard much about the wonderful water power at Rock Island and how cheaply it is produced. We have also been told that the Government sells to the Moline Water Power Co. surplus power at four-tenths of a cent per kilowatt hour. I find that the Government sells just $150 worth of that power annually, and that when the water is low it buys from the Moline Water Power Co. about $2,000 worth per annum. This latter power is generated by steam and costs 1 cent per kilowatt hour.

The assumption that because we sell power at an unusually low price it is produced cheaply is a false one. I can show from facts and figures that have been carefully gathered from the War Department that it costs the Government much more than four-tenths of a cent per kilowatt hour to produce the power at Rock Island. Indeed, I can show that it costs less per kilowatt hour for power generated by steam at Frankford Arsenal than for power generated by water at Rock Island.

Let us see what the Rock Island water-power plant has cost the Government. On March 2, 1867, Congress authorized the purchase from the Moline Water Power Co. of its title to the water power which it had acquired two years previously. The condition of purchase was that the United States would develop the water power and furnish one-fourth of it to the Moline Water Power Co. free of charge.

Congress has already appropriated for the development of this power $1,624,750; for extraordinary repairs, $246,150, and annually for maintenance, $12,500. The interest at 3 per cent on the cost of development is $48,742, which, with the maintenance charge of $12,500, makes a total annual charge of $61,242.

The maximum power that can be developed by the Rock Island Dam is 1,450 horsepower. I understand that the arsenal requires 1,400 horsepower. Assuming that 1,400 horsepower is taken daily throughout the year, it follows that 2,590,000 kilowatt hours in electrical energy are taken annually from the Rock Island water-power plant. The annual charge for this amount of energy being $61,242, then the cost of a kilowatt hour at Rock Island is over 2.4 cents. At Frankford Arsenal the power is generated by steam at a cost of slightly more than 1 cent, or, to be accurate, 1.008 cents, per kilowatt hour.

There is a general impression that because there is no charge for the water in a water-power plant the cost of the electrical energy derived from such a plant is merely nominal. Some Members of this House are evidently not free from that erroneous notion. As a matter of fact, an up-to-date steam plant having a capacity of 2,000 kilowatts can be installed complete for $200,000. If these figures are correct, as I believe them to be, then it must be admitted that a steam-power plant of 2,000 kilowatt capacity at a cost of $200,000 would have been a much better investment at Rock Island Arsenal than the water-power plant of 1,450 kilowatt capacity that has cost the Government $1,624,750.

We must remember, too, that the shop buildings at Rock Island Arsenal are heated not by electricity but by a steam plant which requires about 5,000 tons of coal annually at a cost of $12,500. Then there are bridges leading to Rock Island for which Congress has made appropriations since 1869 amounting to over $800,000, besides annual appropriations in recent years of $12,500 for the maintenance of these bridges.

From this it is clear that the alleged advantages of the so-called free water power at Rock Island are largely mythical. In fact, Rock Island Arsenal possesses no economical advantages by reason of its water power when the cost and maintenance charges of that power are considered. And if Rock Island really possessed economical advantages in its water-power plant, which I can not admit, such advantages would be more than offset by its inaccessibility to a large number of skilled artisans, its long distance from the sources of its supplies, and the delay and expense involved in having its products tested at the Government proving grounds at Sandy Hook.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to minimize the importance or injure the prospects of the Rock Island Arsenal. My aim is merely to correct or remove the misimpressions that gentlemen may have received from the statements of the chairman of the great Committee on Appropriations, Mr. FITZGERALD, whose remarks are always eloquent, always impressive, and usually accurate.

While admitting that the Rock Island plant is well equipped to produce its present lines of manufacture, I still contend that Frankford Arsenal possesses many superior advantages, that those advantages have already resulted in large savings to the Government, and that still greater economies can be effected by the expenditure of a comparatively small sum in the enlargement and improvement of its manufacturing and storage facilities. The failure to further develop this great arsenal on the poor plea that development should be made only where the Government owns land and water power is at least starving, if not killing, the goose that lays the golden eggs.

In the past 10 years the Rock Island Arsenal has received appropriations for repairs and improvements aggregating $975,000, while during the same period the total appropriations for Frankford Arsenal amounted to only $350,000.

Why this difference in the appropriations for two plants the value of whose annual output is practically equal? I do not know; but I might suggest that it was an advantage to the Rock Island Arsenal to have both Democrats and Republicans fighting its battles in Congress, while our arsenal had until recently only one brand of champions. It can not be denied that the claims of Frankford Arsenal have of late been kept well to the front, and I am confident that the efforts now being put forth will soon bear fruit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the department estimated for improvements at Frankford Arsenal aggregating about $72,000. The committee recommended items carrying $57,000. One of the items carried upon the recommendation of the committee is for a high-explosive loading shop and its equipment, to cost $32,000.

This metal storehouse, which has been discussed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE], was erected originally for the storage of scrap, but has been utilized for the storage of metals in an unmanufactured shape. Gen. Crozier was asked why he could not use the building that would be abandoned when the high-explosive loading shop provided in this bill should be erected as a storage house, and he said that that could be done. That building will be abandoned, and it should be utilized for some purpose.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a second. The committee believed that for the present that building could be utilized for these storage purposes.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. Gen. Crozier, in his testimony before the committee, was asked by the chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]—

Why could not you use this building which you are going to abandon? Gen. CROZIER. Maybe we shall—that is possible—for scrap.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it is possible for brass or iron or other material.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from New York then asked:

For either?

And Gen. Crozier replied:

One objection would be that it is not in such a place where a car can come alongside of it, though we have a railroad track running past the end of it. Of course its inflammable character would not make so much difference then.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman will appreciate that these high explosives are out in the open air. I do not know what the effect of the sun's rays are upon them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This shop is to be put in an entirely different location. The railroad track runs past the building that is to be abandoned. A car can be brought there and unloaded. There is no siding there, but there is a track that runs through the yard, and the committee believed that it was proper to utilize the building for some purpose rather than simply to destroy it. The committee believed that after it had been abandoned for one use it could be utilized for a storehouse for these materials.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. DONOHOE. I would call the gentleman's attention to these photographs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have seen them.

Mr. DONOHOE. I do not know how the chairman arrives at the conclusion that these additional storage facilities are not needed immediately. Several Members of this House have been up there and have seen the crowded condition of this place.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You are going to have a new building there.

Mr. DONOHOE. As a matter of fact, they are going to be called upon to manufacture three times as much material this year as heretofore.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But this storehouse would not be built in time for use this year. That is a high-explosive shop, and those things can be moved out from the present shop to the other shop for storage purposes.

Mr. DONOHOE. It has been widely advertised that more room is urgently needed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They assumed that this recommendation would become law.

Mr. DONOHOE. Well, the chairman's recommendation is almost equivalent to a law with us.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the committee in going over the recommendations for these various arsenals undertook to select those items that were imperatively required and recommended.

For the Frankford Arsenal they provided a high-explosive loading shop and its equipment, magazine protection, and increased facilities for fire protection, including the installation of a motor-driven pump and the construction of a building to contain the same.

If the committee were to recommend every improvement at every place suggested by the department, it would require the appropriation of a sum of money that would stagger the House; and if the committee were to bring in a bill containing all such recommendations, this House itself would promptly eliminate many of them from the bill. We have recommended those things that are essential at this time for the proper development of the Frankford Arsenal. This abandoned building will be available for storage, and the committee believe they have done all they are justified in doing at this time. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 15.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, 12 Members, not a sufficient number, seconding the demand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that that is dilatory.

Mr. DONOHOE. I suggest that that is not in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has not been made before. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point. The gentleman need not argue about it.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well; I will not argue with the gentleman; but I suggest that the gentleman is delaying the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-nine Members in their seats, and the Chairman is present, making 100. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE]. As many as favor the amendment will rise and stand until they are counted.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 26.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. DONOHOE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 35.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. DONOHOE:
Page 52, after line 17, insert the following:
"For extension of artillery storehouse, $17,500."

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment the other day for this matter, but it was ruled out on a point of order because it provided for a new building. This is for an extension of the artillery ammunition storehouse. I could say nothing on this that I have not said on the proposition for a metal storehouse, and I have said nothing on the latter that I could not say on this. It is urgently needed for the protection of the high-explosive materials at the Frankford Arsenal. If we do not appropriate this small amount, it will be a serious mistake.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is no such building at the Frankford Arsenal. The gentleman has put his amendment in a form so that even if the money were appropriated it could not be utilized. The other day he offered an amendment to provide for a new building for that purpose. Now, he hopes to get an amendment adopted which, even if adopted, would be of no value, because the money could not be spent. I repeat that the Committee on Appropriations in making recommendations for this arsenal and for the other arsenals picked out the items that were important; that were essential for the proper conduct of the business at these places at this time, and recommended them. I hope that the committee will not adopt this amendment.

Mr. DONOHOE. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DONOHOE. Does the gentleman contend that there are no facilities for the storage of ammunition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I contend that there is no such building as that for which the gentleman proposes to appropriate $17,000 for an extension. This House would put itself in a ridiculous position to vote money to extend a building that does not exist. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak on this amendment. I suggest to my colleague from Pennsylvania that he move to strike out the words "for the extension of."

Mr. DONOHOE. I could not do that because it would then be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MOORE. I think the gentleman has a right to offer an amendment for a building.

Mr. DONOHOE. No; my other amendment was ruled out on that ground. This is for the extension of facilities for the storage of ammunition. If the chairman of the committee says there are no facilities at the arsenal for the storage of ammunition, I must be wrong, but I understand there are some limited facilities for such a purpose, and my amendment provides for an extension of those facilities.

Mr. MOORE. We have a statement from the Chief of Ordnance on that point, and if the gentleman insists on the amendment going up as it is, we will have to argue it out on that line. However, Mr. Chairman, we have to have Artillery ammunition at that arsenal. It is stored there in the best way that it can be stored. We have a perfect right to extend the storage facilities as proposed in the amendment, if it is to be considered in its present form. That there is a necessity for the present extension is made clear by the statement of the Chief of Ordnance in advocating the estimate submitted to the committee. The matter came up before the committee in regular order, and the Chief of Ordnance testified that there was great necessity for this extension of facilities. Now, what did the Chief of Ordnance say about it?

Gen. CROZIER. Here [exhibiting] is a plan of the building which it is proposed to erect under this estimate. The dimensions are about 133 by 45 feet. It is also a one-story brick building. As explained by the note, it is intended to be utilized for storing portions of ammunition under manufacture; that is, components of the ammunition under manufacture, ready for assembling in complete rounds, and we also have use for it in storing ammunition which is oftentimes turned in from the service for overhauling. I will not say oftentimes, but once in a while something deteriorates about it, and it is sent back to the arsenal to be overhauled and made anew, and we need a place to put it while it is awaiting overhauling.

The CHAIRMAN. What building do you use for that purpose now?

Gen. CROZIER. There is no building. The components are scattered all around the place, not in any special building. These components oftentimes stand on the floor, where they should not stand—it is not very safe—and oftentimes they are gathered into this little frame loading shop, which is already too small, and where they increase the danger from any accidental explosion which might occur in there. It would be located quite near the new loading shop, so as to form a convenient portion of the artillery manufacturing plant—the site I just pointed out to you as the new position for this artillery loading shop—and across the end here [indicating] will be placed this storage building which I am speaking of now. These buildings [indicating] constitute the artillery ammunition plant of the arsenal, these buildings [indicating] the small-arms manufacturing plant, and this group [indicating] the fire-control instruments plant.

Mr. Chairman, there is a little frame loading shop in existence in which this artillery ammunition is stored. There are other buildings in which it is stored and there is ground upon which it is stored, and it would seem that if there are buildings and grounds upon which this ammunition is stored it is fair to assume that we have the right to extend the storage facilities; that is what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] proposes to do. It seems to me the amendment would be in order, taking it as it is, because there is this little frame loading shop, in which artillery ammunition is stored, and also there are other buildings. It is proposed to extend the storage facilities by erecting another building in the nature of an extension, and that brings us under the rule.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, this is a manufacturing plant for artillery ammunition which is not shipped out of the place at once. It is a notorious fact that the product of that arsenal lies around temporarily stored, as stated by my colleague, either in rooms or outside. Storage is a necessary incident to the conduct of this arsenal, and therefore I contend that without the additional words and not arguing against the wording of the amendment we have it substantially established as an existing condition, and providing for it is within the spirit of legislation that we are now considering. Regarding the existing needs of it, I think the argument by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the other amendments well establishes this. The photograph that he has exhibited establishes it, and gentlemen who have visited the Frankford Arsenal know the inadequacy of the buildings and the absolute necessity for the one at present in question.

The present amendment, offered by my colleague [Mr. MOORE], is directed toward the acquisition of additional land adjacent to the present Frankford Arsenal.

There are many reasons why this amendment should prevail and the opportunity embraced to acquire additional land for the further development of the arsenal. That there will be need for extension in future none will deny, and it may be stated that the acquisition of the land at the present time is absolutely necessary to provide in the near future for the extension of the Frankford Arsenal plans which must necessarily follow.

This arsenal is fortunately located. The acquirement of additional land would give it greater river frontage on the Delaware, affording the Government opportunity for shipment either by rail or water. Located in Philadelphia it has the best labor in the United States to draw from. The transportation facilities assure economy not only in procuring supplies and material, but in the shipment of manufactured goods. Much of its supplies can be obtained from Philadelphia, a great commercial center, and for those that are needed from more distant points excellent railroad and water facilities insure cheap handling.

I have considered to this point only the question of the advantages arising from the location and the necessity for the extension of the tract of land for future development. There are other considerations that come into play, and that show the need for the extension of the arsenal. A very important one is the economy maintained at this arsenal and the great saving to the Government in the manufacture of ammunition. Between July 1, 1912, and April 25, 1913, the cost of manufacture of the output at Frankford Arsenal was $1,900,000, and the same output purchased by the Government under contracts would have cost $2,879,000, showing a saving to the Government of $979,000.

What has been saved between the periods stated has been done in other years and will be accomplished again in future and to a greater extent, if the arsenal is further developed. And an additional and most potent reason for the extension of the Frankford Arsenal is one that should appeal to all. It is the great aid these improvements will be to the safety of the employees. The work carried on is to a degree hazardous and dangerous. There are large buildings in which many people are employed. Near them are located high-explosive shops, and no matter to what degree human skill may go in work such as this accidents will occur, and while misfortune must necessarily follow to the people engaged directly in this dangerous work, the lives of many men and women not so engaged should not be put in danger.

The additional tract of land would furnish sites to a degree isolated from the large shops where the high-explosive work could be carried on with greater safety to the general employees of the arsenal and a lessening of the dangers that exist at the present time.

Therefore, the extension of the plant in question will be for the benefit of the Government on the score of economy. This extension makes necessary the purchase of additional land and associated with the saving to the Government is assured the safety of employees by the removal to a more distant point of the very dangerous and hazardous work now carried on in close proximity to buildings housing hundreds of employees.

I contend, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the interests of the Government and the welfare and safety of its employees will be furthered and assured by the present acquisition of additional land, and I trust, therefore, that the amendment offered by my colleague will be adopted.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to be consistent and entirely fair in the matter of these appropriations. I did not vote for the amendment voted on a moment ago because, from the impression that I gained at the hearing, it was not an item that was of immediate and absolute necessity. But I did gain the impression during the hearings that this artillery ammunition storehouse was needed, and needed badly. I think the statement made by Gen. Crozier makes it very clear that there is a condition there that is dangerous, and a condition under which the property of the Government deteriorates, by reason of the fact that there is no storehouse for a certain class of material, and that a condition exists with regard to this material that should not exist, but should be remedied at the earliest possible moment.

This item is for an extension of this arsenal that is badly needed. I regret that the gentleman did not put his amendment in a little different form, and yet there is a little frame building now used to a certain extent for this storage purpose. Therefore I support his amendment, although I do not believe it would have been subject to a point of order and would have been in better form if he had provided absolutely for a new building. That is what would be constructed if this amendment is adopted. It ought to be provided for the safety of the employees and for the preservation and protection of the Government property.

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if it were possible for the committee to visit the Frankford Arsenal further objection to these appropriations would be withdrawn. Those in our delegation who have had the opportunity of going over this institution, with its three shifts working continuously through the 24 hours, working in a frame building, I am sure are convinced that if the members of this committee had the opportunity to visit the institution and to compare the efficiency of the service there with that in other institutions of similar size, whether private or part of the Government, then the opposition to these great public improvements for the Frankford Arsenal would be withdrawn. This amendment is in order. It simply means to extend existing buildings, and it is for the general benefit of the Government, and tends toward insuring the lives of the employees and the property of the Government. I trust the amendment will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DONOHOE and Mr. MOORE) there were—ayes 41, noes 25.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 52, after line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"For the purchase of land adjoining the Frankford Arsenal, for the extension of the facilities thereof, Philadelphia, Pa., $100,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee has already disposed of that amendment, and it is not in order to pass upon it at this time. The same amendment was offered and voted down.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was not offered in this form. The amendment that was offered was in an entirely different form. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] offered an amendment against which the point of order was made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MOORE. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We voted on the question of the purchase of this land.

Mr. MOORE. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] contained a provision for condemnation, and the point of order was made against that, and the point of order was sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the committee voted down this amendment to purchase $100,000 worth of this land.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that I had my amendment modified by unanimous consent, striking out the condemnatory provisions.

Mr. MOORE. I recall the gentleman did; but his amendment did not provide for the extension of the facilities of the arsenal which this amendment does. I have no pride of authorship in this, and I would be very glad to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] offer this amendment, if he cared to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania the RECORD of Friday, June 12, before him?

Mr. MOORE. I do not have it before me, but my recollection is very clear as to the form the amendment took. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] offered an amendment which contemplated condemnation. The point of order was made against that, and the gentleman then asked unanimous consent to strike out the provision for condemnation and the amendment went back to a direct appropriation for the purchase of land; but there was no provision in his amendment for the extension of the facilities of the arsenal, which there is in the one I now present.

The CHAIRMAN. On page 10351 of the RECORD of June 12 there appears the following:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Strike out the words 'for acquirement by condemnation proceedings' and add, on line 17, page 52, the following as a new paragraph:

"'For the purchase of about 25 acres of land adjoining the arsenal grounds on the northeast side thereof, $100,000.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment being modified as requested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?
There was no objection.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.
The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.
The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 32.
Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The amendment which was rejected was in this form:

For the purchase of about 25 acres of land adjoining the arsenal grounds on the northeast side thereof, $100,000.

The amendment which is proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is for the acquiring of land adjoining the existing arsenal property, $100,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit me to interrupt him for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. The Chair has read the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE], providing for the purchase of 25 acres of land adjoining the arsenal grounds. That is a provision that is not contained in the amendment I have offered. I have not indicated the quantity of land to be purchased. Objection was made to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] upon the ground that the price was not satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit the Chair in the interest of expedition——

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is with the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] was specific as to where the land should be taken. This amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is not, and the Chair has no possible way of determining where it would be, and so he overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make this point of order, that such an amendment as this was not contemplated in the agreement made at the time these items were passed over. The question of land was settled and determined by the committee. Then it was said that gentlemen wished to offer amendments for other purposes.

If the gentleman thinks he can have a rehearing of the question at this time, it seems to me it is not within the agreement. It is certainly a breach of faith. The question of this purchase of land was disposed of. This amendment will not be passed on by a slim House.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman charges a breach of faith when there is no breach of faith. When the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] failed because of its specific character and because of the objection of the gentleman from New York, then I devised another amendment which did not specify any particular land except land adjoining the arsenal, which did not specify any particular quantity of land but such land as might be purchased for $100,000. I tried to offer the amendment at the time and it was clearly part of the understanding to permit this matter to go over until Saturday last, and then again to the first day on which the sundry civil bill should be taken up. There was absolutely no breach of faith or of understanding, and the gentleman from New York is entirely in error in that respect.

Mr. LOGUE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. LOGUE. Does the gentleman mean the amendment he is now offering is the same one that was sent up by him to the Clerk's desk when the point of order was made?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; it is the same amendment.

Mr. LOGUE. So it was offered on that day?

Mr. MOORE. Of course, and if the RECORD is consulted it will be found I was on my feet several times. Subsequently the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who had indulged in the colloquy, specially stipulated in the understanding with the gentleman from New York—and those two gentlemen frequently have understandings——

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no such understanding——

Mr. MOORE. And that understanding should be maintained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no understanding that the gentleman's amendment should be offered. The amendments were in reference to items for which estimates had been submitted and which were not recommended by the committee. This matter was discussed and decided unfavorably to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, and the Chair desires to make himself perfectly clear, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania had shown that it was the same proposition offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DONOHOE, on a former day, he would without hesitation have sustained the point of order made by the gentleman from New York; but it does not so show, and the Chair has no way of determining how that is. Now, in reference to the other point of order made by the gentleman from New York, the Chair has been trying to find the record of that, and the Chair's recollection is that in its final settlement the request was that the Frankford Arsenal item be passed without prejudice. Now, the Chair's recollection may be at fault about that. It must be in Saturday's RECORD. On the question of fact the Chair is in doubt.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no doubt it is the identical amendment, because there is only one tract adjacent to the arsenal that can be purchased.

The CHAIRMAN. That, of course, it is impossible for the Chair, with his limited knowledge, to know.

Mr. MOORE. I make the declaration, to which I hope the gentleman from New York will listen, that I do not know whether $100,000 will buy the 25 acres of land specified in the defeated Donohoe amendment. The gentleman from New York seems to indicate it would be sufficient——

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I did not; I think that is extravagant.

Mr. MOORE. Well, then, he seemed to indicate it would be extravagant, and some others to think it would not be enough. It might be we could purchase only 10 acres with $100,000. Everyone knows we need more land adjoining that arsenal. We ought to have land adjoining that arsenal, and I have framed this amendment so it will not be specific, as the other amendment was, and so they may have this same money to buy such land as the department wants adjoining the arsenal for the extension of the facilities of that arsenal.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order pending, made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. The agreement which was entered into was on Saturday, June 13, beginning on page 10437 of the RECORD.

Mr. MOORE. I think it was Saturday's RECORD, but I do not have it before me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that it will probably expedite matters more to rule without waiting to look up the RECORD. The Chair, from his recollection of what occurred, overrules the last motion of the gentleman from New York, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to discuss the amendment.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Has not the debate on this amendment been exhausted under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has been addressing himself to the point of order.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, there is no good excuse for not authorizing the purchase of this land. The Frankford Arsenal is one of the profit-making establishments of the Government. It has proven that Government manufacture can be done much cheaper than it can be done privately. It is shown that within a year it can save upward of a million dollars over and above what would have been paid by the Government for goods purchased from outside manufacturers. It is an institution that ought to be encouraged. It is limited to 62 acres of ground. The other day the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] offered an amendment on which there was much discussion to increase the appropriation for the manufacture of ammunition at Rock Island to the extent of $225,000. They have over 800 acres out at that arsenal, with plenty of room for expansion and plenty of room for ordnance tests. In this bill the Frankford Arsenal, with its splendid record for service and its splendid record for money-saving, is allotted only $57,000, as against $127,322 for the Rock Island Arsenal. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars was voted for that arsenal last year, as against $4,000 to the arsenal at Philadelphia. Now we are cramped for room. We have the labor and raw material and cheap fuel cost, and we conclude that our fuel cost is less than that of Rock Island, and I think less than that of any other arsenal in the country. It needs encouragement not only for the protection of the lives of the men who are employed there, but for the expeditious movement of the business of the Government.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] indicated that we did not come before the committee in the regular way, with an estimate from the department. I inquired of the gentleman when the matter was up before if Gen. Crozier had not frequently made estimates for the purchase of this land at Frankford Arsenal, and the gentleman from New York indicated that he had not done so.

Now, I have conversed with Gen. Crozier frequently, and I know he desires this land to be purchased. I am informed that estimates have gone to the Committee on Appropriations time and time again for the purchase of that land, and in proof of it I submit a letter from the Secretary of War, Mr. Lindley M. Garrison, to one of the Senators, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on the other side of the Capitol, in which it is clearly stated that this land ought to be acquired for reasons which I shall read. The Secretary of War says the acquisition of the land is advisable because—

1. To avoid the serious situation which would arise if this property should be purchased by parties who would desire to utilize it for dwellings or factory purposes, since there is no doubt that in case such buildings should be erected upon the property the occupants would object to the experimental firings and other tests involving the use of high explosives which are conducted at the Frankford Arsenal.

2. The utilization of the property for the storage of explosives, so as to remove them a safe distance from the present shop buildings.

3. To utilize the property for the construction of certain storehouses and shop buildings which will undoubtedly be necessary in the expansion of the manufacturing plant at the Frankford Arsenal in the future and for which it would be impossible to secure ground if this piece of property shall irrevocably pass to other uses.

The War Department—

Says the Secretary—

has in the past submitted estimates for the purchase of this property, but I have not repeated the estimate, not because the purchase would not be advantageous, and such as would be made by any efficient corporation in a similar position, but because other needs of the War Department have been so immediately pressing that I have been obliged to let this particular matter rest, although I recognize that in doing so the danger is incurred of the passage of the opportunity to make the purchase advantageously.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] seems to have the notion that the value of that land is going to decrease. Why, gradually New York and Philadelphia are getting together; they are building up toward each other; and the Frankford Arsenal is in between. Is land going to become less valuable between those two great cities? Is land going to become less valuable when there are hundreds and thousands of homes and factories in the vicinity?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. The Secretary of War indicates that it would be to the advantage of the Government to buy now. He indicates what most business men would suggest with reference to matters like this—that to wait would mean simply to increase the price that the Government will have to pay some day when it takes that property over. Now, here is an opportunity to take what we can get of it for $100,000. It does not specify that we shall take 25 acres or any particular piece of land, except that it shall adjoin the arsenal, but it does give direction to the Secretary of War to take as much land as he can get advantageously and relieve this situation, at a cost of $100,000. It seems to me that this is a vital amendment to this whole arsenal proposition. We have been treated unfairly at the Frankford Arsenal. The Rock Island Arsenal has been built up, while the appropriations at the Frankford Arsenal have been cut, and the time has come now when the House, in fairness to one of its best institutions and in response to the direct suggestion and recommendations of the Secretary of War, should pass this amendment and put this great profit-making institution of the Government on a solid and a safe basis.

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request, to save time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LOGUE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this matter was before the committee on the 12th of June, and the letter of the Secretary of War, referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] was read at that time. I stated then, and I repeat now—and my recollection has since been refreshed by a very careful search by a very accurate man—that there has been no formal estimate submitted for the purchase of this land by the War Department during the 15 years that I have been a Member of Congress, and the Secretary of War, when he makes the statement that such an estimate has been submitted is making a statement that is inaccurate.

This proposition first came to my attention, as I have already stated, in 1909, when a bill was introduced to appropriate $181,000 to purchase 31½ acres of land and 2½ acres of land outside the bulkhead on the Delaware River. The following year a bill was introduced to appropriate $175,000 to buy the same land. This year a bill was introduced to appropriate $154,000 to purchase 25½ acres of land; 12½ acres have already been taken up in some other way.

In the letter to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred, and which he has just read, the Secretary of War stated that, in his opinion, from $145,000 to $150,000 would be a fair price for the land.

I have a letter in my possession, written by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], dated within the last few weeks, in which he said that after conferring with those who now control the land, they would take $125,000 for it; so that the Secretary of War could not have been very well informed, or could not have made very much inquiry when he said that $145,000 would be a fair price.

Now, the department has never formally requested that this land be purchased. We have 896 acres of land at the Rock Island Arsenal. We have two buildings there, each of them practically as large as the House Office Building, utilized for storage purposes alone. We get power there from a water power at about four-tenths of a cent per kilowatt hour.

Mr. MOORE and Mr. DONOHOE rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not yield.

Mr. MOORE. We are ready for you on that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not yield to either.

Mr. DONOHOE. Yield to one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I will not yield to either. Perhaps I should be permitted to make a consecutive statement without being jumped at—yes; jumped at—from both sides before I can get a sentence out of my mouth. [Applause.] We can develop power from water power at the Rock Island Arsenal at about four-tenths of a cent per kilowatt hour, and when we have an excess we can sell it.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman will not tell the history of that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I knew, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] knew, and other gentlemen from Pennsylvania knew, that this corporation would desire to turn this unremunerative land into money, so that it can invest the money and get some return upon it, and would turn this property over to the Government for $125,000; and now they desire to get $100,000 from the Government and surrender just as little of the 25½ acres as they can do.

This property can not be utilized for residential purposes. It is property that should be utilized for manufacturing purposes. There is great fear on the part of these gentlemen that unless the Government takes this land now, it will lose this great opportunity to enlarge this arsenal. Yet since 1875 the owners of this property have been endeavoring to induce the Government to purchase it and to take it off their hands—not because the Government requires it, not because the Government needs it, but because it is so much easier to dispose of worthless property to the Government than to dispose of it to anyone else when there is no market for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of War said, "I think a fair price would be somewhere between $140,000 and $150,000," so that the amount carried in the bill which is pending should be sufficient to include the cost of condemnation proceedings. And yet the owners of the property—the Pennsylvania Co. of Philadelphia, executor of the estate of Charles Levy—wrote a letter to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] that they would take $125,000 for it.

If we were to accept the recommendation of the War Department, we would have appropriated $145,000 to purchase property the owners of which are anxious to dispose of for $125,000. Why should we buy additional land at Philadelphia? We have in our arsenals ample facilities to do what the Government requires. We have Frankford, Springfield, Watertown, Watervliet, and Rock Island. Rock Island is situated between the two rivers, isolated from great centers of population, at a place where the dangers in manufacturing high explosives can be minimized.

Mr. DONOHOE. Will the gentleman yield for one question there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just a minute. The gentleman desires to extend and to build up a plant for the manufacture of high explosives almost in the heart of the city of Philadelphia, where, if unfortunately there should be an accident, the danger to large numbers of innocent persons would be very great. There is no excuse for carrying on these highly dangerous manufacturing operations in such a place. There is no justification to add this land to this place merely so that this institution, the beneficiary of the will of this deceased person, may turn an unremunerative property into a paying investment, and let the Government carry property costing from $100,000 to $125,000 upon the theory that it is needed to enlarge the facilities of this arsenal. Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. DONOHOE. I know the gentleman does not contend that the Frankford Arsenal is not an economical workshop of the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not contended that it is not an economical workshop, because I am one of those who have forced into the appropriation bills provisions that make it possible to utilize the Frankford Arsenal to its full capacity.

Mr. DONOHOE. Three shifts a day?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; three shifts a day, but that is no reason why it should be so enlarged, with this growing population around it, that it will endanger the lives of people in the vicinity. What is the fact? We carry in the fortification bill an appropriation of $1,200,000 for the manufacture of ammunition, and in the Army bill we carry an appropriation of $3,000,000 for the manufacture of ammunition, or $4,200,000 in all. At the same ratio for four years more the reserve ammunition required for the Army will be up to its full amount, and thereafter, instead of appropriating $4,200,000 a year, it will only be necessary to appropriate half a million dollars a year to manufacture ammunition. Then these plants that we now have and that will be busy and fully occupied for the next four years will no longer be required, because we will have gotten up and have kept up to the requirement of the Government.

I have no prejudice in favor of or against any of these arsenals, but if it be necessary to expand our facilities in these arsenals unduly, as a common-sense business proposition, the place to develop and extend and enlarge is not at Watervliet, which is in my State, not at Springfield or Watertown, in Massachusetts, not at Frankford, in the city of Philadelphia, but at Rock Island, a place which is naturally fitted for the manufacturing of these high explosives and dangerous materials. [Applause.] It is naturally fitted for the manufacture of high explosives not only because isolated from centers of population, but because geographically so situated that the shipment of this material east, west, north, or south will be the most economical shipments that can be made. We manufacture now at Frankford Arsenal to ship to San Francisco. Mr. Chairman, this amendment should not be adopted, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I dislike to disagree with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is usually very accurate, but I want to take exception to some statements that he has made in connection with these two arsenals. The fact that Frankford Arsenal is within the limits of Philadelphia, a city of 1,600,000 inhabitants, should not be regarded as a disadvantage to it. On the other hand, we contend that it is one of its greatest advantages, because it brings the arsenal within the reach of 250,000 skilled mechanics. Again, we hear of water power being produced at four-tenths of a cent per kilowatt hour. That is the price at which the Government sells its surplus water power. And how much surplus water power does our Government sell per annum? It sells $150 worth. What does it cost the Government to produce water power at Rock Island?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. MOORE. I just want the gentleman to bring out the water-power facts.

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes; I will do so. The fact that we have free water does not mean that we have cheap water power. The fact that water costs nothing does not prove that we can generate water power at a low price. As a matter of fact, when you consider the investment at Rock Island for the development of water power, all that it cost the Government to develop it and to maintain it since, it is costing us to-day 2.4 cents per kilowatt hour for power at that arsenal.

At Frankford Arsenal it is costing a small fraction over 1 cent a kilowatt-hour to develop power by steam. We can install to-day for $200,000 a steam plant that will develop 2,000 electrical horsepower while Rock Island is getting only 1,600 horsepower from the power plant which cost the Government over a million and a half dollars to develop. Two hundred thousand dollars will cover the installation of a 2,000-horsepower plant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOHOE. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it the gentleman's contention that we can develop electric power more economically by steam than by water power at Rock Island?

Mr. DONOHOE. I contend that we are doing it at Frankford. I contend that the water power at Rock Island costs 2.4 cents per kilowatt-hour considering the investment made for its development, whereas we develop power at Frankford for 1.008 cents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. DONOHOE. I get my figures from the War Department. Mr. Chairman, I will not take up the time of the committee on this point any further, as I have already covered the ground rather fully.

Mr. MOORE. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOHOE. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman recall the estimated value of the property at the Frankford Arsenal?

Mr. DONOHOE. Three and a half million dollars.

Mr. MOORE. And the appropriations for Rock Island up to date, buildings, bridges, water power, and so forth, and from the plant of a defunct dam company—does not that run up to about $9,000,000?

Mr. DONOHOE. It does; yes.

Mr. MOORE. That is the situation; and the Government, which is getting water power so "cheaply" at Rock Island, is actually paying 2½ cents per kilowatt hour.

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes; it costs five times as much per kilowatt hour as we get for the surplus.

Mr. MOORE. And the Government has made appropriations aggregating $9,000,000 at Rock Island as against the total valuation of $3,500,000 at the Frankford Arsenal for the most productive manufacturing plant of the United States.

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes. Now, one other point—as to the shipping of the goods. Goods can be shipped from the Frankford Arsenal along the coast by water around to Seattle at a lower rate than the freight from Rock Island to the seaboard.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. DONOHOE. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman know that the appropriations made for the development of water power at Rock Island since 1866 amount to $1,624,750?

Mr. DONOHOE. I believe the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOORE. And for extraordinary repairs for the preservation of water power, which sometimes runs out, so that they have to buy it elsewhere, $246,150 since 1888?

Mr. DONOHOE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. And $1,310,550 has been appropriated by Congress on account of bridges and roads to Rock Island, which totals over $3,000,000 for the purpose of getting this cheap water power that we hear so much about?

Mr. DONOHOE. My colleague is usually very accurate, and I think he is quite so to-day.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes to answer the remarks of the gentleman from New York. This land belonged to a man by the name of Lennig. It had no connection with his manufactory; it is a piece of ground that he bought that does not touch the ground that he uses for the manufacturing plant. Mr. Lennig intended to leave it to the University of Pennsylvania as part of his residuary estate. He always held the price at $150,000 when anybody asked him about it. He died. The gentlemen who examined the land were connected with the Pennsylvania company for insuring lives. The Pennsylvania company in taking their appraisement of his estate made the price of the ground $150,000, but one of the appraisers objected, and said it was worth less—$125,000. When I called upon them they agreed with me that they would take $125,000 for the land. The estate is in this shape: When the last heir dies, if this land is not sold it goes to the University of Pennsylvania. It is a simple case of necessity that this land should be taken for the benefit of the Frankford Arsenal in accordance with this amendment.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. EDMONDS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE. Is it not a fact that the present tract of the Frankford Arsenal is very much of a triangle and makes the river front of practically no service?

Mr. EDMONDS. That is true.

Mr. MOORE. And is it not a fact that the ground that adjoins the arsenal which the gentleman from New York thinks so valueless runs along the river front for a quarter of a mile?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. That tract would give the arsenal a water frontage so that they could load ships that might go to the Philippine Islands or anywhere else—the safest kind of transportation.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not opposed to needed improvements and extensions at the Frankford Arsenal—I just voted for two of them—but, on the other hand, am enthusiastically in favor of the Government manufacturing its own munitions of war, all of them, including armor plate and battleships, regardless of whether it is done at the Rock Island Arsenal or the Frankford Arsenal or in the Hawaiian Islands, so long as the Government does it itself and takes the profit out of war and the preparation for war.

If I did not have to run for reelection this fall I would surely go to Stockholm, Sweden, to attend the meeting of the Interparliamentary Union for International Peace, to be held in August, and advocate the principle that all nations manufacture their own munitions of war as the most practical step that can be taken in the interest of reduction of armament and international peace. When all profit is taken out of war, the amounts to be carried in the Army and Navy appropriation bills will be decided on the merits of the question as to the needs of the Government from a military standpoint, instead of by the greed of the armor ring, the ammunition ring, and the Shipbuilding Trust.

As to the question of the ability of the Government to manufacture economically at Rock Island Arsenal, I went down to the War Department one day and inquired at which arsenal the Government could do its manufacturing the cheapest, and I was informed that there was no question about it, that the Government can manufacture more cheaply at Rock Island Arsenal than at any other place.

I do not know where the gentlemen who have spoken get their figures as to the cost of power at Rock Island, but in reaching their conclusions they have evidently added all the sums ever spent on the power plant and charged interest on these sums, and they make it appear that the power developed there is very expensive. I may be wrong about it, but I contend the Government does not pay interest on this investment. But even if this power plant has been very costly in the past, I submit that that is no reason, now that the Government has the plant, why it should not take advantage of it.

There are at Rock Island two large stone buildings originally erected for manufacturing purposes at a cost of approximately $400,000 each, which are not now being used except for storage purposes. If Congress will equip these two buildings for manufacturing, it will not cost any additional money for power, because, with the small-arms plant closed down, there is sufficient power not being used to operate plants in these buildings. While I have no objection to the Frankford Arsenal being enlarged, I can hardly see as a business proposition why the Government should buy land in Philadelphia, when it has 896 acres of land at Rock Island and two large stone buildings already there. There is plenty of room to expand there.

Mr. DONOHOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. DONOHOE. I want to ask the gentleman, in his argument in favor of the Government manufacturing its own ammunition, where he got his figures?

Mr. TAVENNER. I got them from the Rock Island Arsenal and from the Frankford Arsenal, and I will say that in every Government arsenal the Government is manufacturing at from 20 to 60 per cent below the prices of the private manufacturers. This is only partly due to the efficiency of the arsenals. The real explanation is that the ammunition ring has been gouging the Government; both Army and Navy officers have been permitting private manufacturers to overcharge the Government for munitions of war. The Frankford Arsenal and every Government arsenal is doing work at from 20 to 60 per cent below the prices of the private manufacturers.

The chairman of the great Appropriations Committee, Mr. FITZGERALD, has just stated that when the Government gets ready to centralize the manufacture of its war munitions in one great national military manufacturing plant it will not select Frankford Arsenal; it will not select Springfield Arsenal; it will not select Watertown Arsenal; but that it will select Rock Island Arsenal, where the Government can do its manufacturing the cheapest.

I only wish every Member of this body could come to Rock Island and see what a magnificent property the Government owns there. The tract covers 896 acres of a beautiful rock island in the Mississippi River, every acre a natural park, with beautiful shade trees and stately drives in evidence on every side.

The island is adjacent to the enterprising and thriving cities of Rock Island, Moline, East Moline, and Davenport, which cities have a combined population in excess of 100,000 and in the very heart of one of the most promising manufacturing cities in the Middle West.

The arsenal plant, including buildings, machinery, and so forth, is worth $9,492,329. Approximately $2,500,000 worth of work was turned out of the arsenal last year. On November 30 last 1,369 men were being employed.

I am firmly convinced that this piece of property offers the best site that can be found for the proposed $7,000,000 Government armor-plate factory, and I have introduced a resolution (H. Res. 306) requiring the Secretary of the Navy to carefully consider the advantages of Rock Island before determining upon any other site. I wish to extend an invitation to Members of Congress who may be passing through the fourteenth congressional district, "the garden spot of Illinois," to stop off at Rock Island and meet the commandant, Col. George W. Burr, who will be glad to show you what a magnificent and advantageous site Uncle Sam already has for a great central military manufacturing plant without going to the unnecessary expense of purchasing additional ground elsewhere for this purpose.

I have prepared for the consideration of Chairman PADGETT, of the Naval Affairs Committee, who is to be one of a committee of three to investigate and report on the question of a suitable site for the proposed armor plant, the following rough draft of the principal advantages of Rock Island Arsenal:

"First. Cheap water-power possibilities, the Government owning its own plant in the Mississippi River.

"Second. Its central location geographically, making it convenient to ship the finished product to either the Pacific, Atlantic, or Gulf coast with economy in both time and transportation costs.

"Third. Its strategic location from a military standpoint. Being well in the interior of the country, it would be much safer from attack and possible capture by an enemy in time of war than would a site on or near either coast.

"Fourth. Should coal be needed, there is a great abundance of excellent coal being mined almost at the very door of Rock Island, and it is at the same time convenient to the ore fields of the north.

"Fifth. By utilizing a part of the 896 acres in the Rock Island military tract several hundred thousand dollars which would probably be necessary to purchase site elsewhere would be saved to the Government.

"Sixth. The advantages of Rock Island as a manufacturing center, as demonstrated by the fact that at the Rock Island Arsenal shops the Government is now manufacturing rifles, field artillery gun carriages, and other war equipment at from 20 to 30 per cent below the prices of private manufacturers. For instance, 3-inch caissons, consisting of a wagon for carrying ammunition chests, are being produced at Rock Island for $1,081, as against a cost of $1,708 when purchased from private manufacturers; 3-inch gun carriages proper—the vehicle on which the gun rests and from which it is fired—are being produced for $2,341, as against the private contractors' price of $3,268, and so forth.

"Seventh. The location of the military tract in the heart of a great manufacturing center, being within 2 miles of Rock Island, Moline, and East Moline, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, all of which are essentially manufacturing cities, embracing a combined population of more than 100,000 people, affording employment to thousands of mechanics and furnishing an ideal field from which the Government may draw its skilled labor and other help, a very important consideration in such an industrial enterprise as a Government armor plant."

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I was present a short time ago when a delegation of Philadelphians appeared before that committee and explained in detail the many reasons why the Government should purchase this land. I am very sorry that the chairman of the committee does not seem to be in the Chamber at this time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I am here.

Mr. VARE. A few moments ago the gentleman referred to the great University of Pennsylvania in a tone that did not appear to be that of commending what we regard as one of the greatest educational institutions in the country.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. VARE. I want the gentlemen of this House to know that the management of that institution has never at any time taken advantage of our city, State, or National Government. I want the gentlemen to know that that management is comprised of men who have devoted their lives and have given their means to help educational purposes in our section. Under the will of the late Charles Tennig, that institution seems to have control over this land. I want this committee to understand that the great University of Pennsylvania will cooperate with the Government and do its part toward building up the Frankford Arsenal, without any excessive charge for the land, but with a desire to help that great institution. There are two things that ought to govern the minds of this committee in passing upon this question: First, is it necessary; and, second, have you confidence in Secretary Garrison, the Secretary of War? In my opinion, and I believe in the opinion of the committee, the necessity for this extension has been shown, and if that be true, there is only one question left for us to decide and that is, Have we confidence in the business judgment and ability of the Secretary of War? And I believe that the answer of this committee will be that we have.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MOORE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 44.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, it is evident there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. MOORE. I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws the point of order.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order is pending to the last paragraph that was read the other night, at the top of page 128. It was not disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the point of order?

Mr. MANN. The point of order was reserved to the paragraph at the top of page 128. May I ask the gentleman what is the reason for fixing the rate to be paid for the per capita cost of persons committed from the District of Columbia and maintained at the National Training School for Boys at $4.50 per week?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It developed in the examination that while it was costing $4.50 a week to maintain these boys in the institution, that those committed from the District of Columbia were being charged for at the rate of $3, I think it was.

Mr. MANN. What constitutes the cost of $4.50 a week—what does that cover?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They take everything going into the cost of maintaining the institution and average the per capita cost from that. The average is $234 per year. All overhead expenses are included in the charge, and this is to compel the District boys to be paid for at the actual cost to the institution.

Mr. MANN. Well, this institution is not maintained for the benefit of the District of Columbia, is it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; it is not.

Mr. MANN. Is the cost of $4.50 per capita for the boys committed from the District of Columbia?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They say that the per capita cost is $4.50 a week, and they are paid for the District boys $3, I think it is, a week.

Mr. MANN. It seemed to me that $4.50 a week was a rather high cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think so. It is $234 a year, and it includes the maintenance of some stock, school, upkeep of the grounds, and everything else. The only object the committee had in view was that the actual cost of maintaining a boy in that institution should be paid for out of the appropriation for the purpose for the District of Columbia. We pay for the District boys' half, and if they charge less than the actual cost the Federal Government pays a much larger proportion than half.

Mr. MANN. I think they ought to pay the actual cost. I am not so sure we ought to pay the per capita cost figured upon the number of people there, figuring in all sorts of expenses which will be given there by the Government anyhow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For instance, we made some inquiries as to what they included in the figures that make up the per capita cost. We inquired whether if there were special appropriations for improvements they were included, and they said they were not, but merely the ordinary maintenance charges.

Mr. MANN. How are the boys admitted or committed to this institution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are committed by the courts, I understand.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are there any boys committed from outside the District of Columbia to this institution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there was something in the hearings disclosing that there were some from the outside.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand that the Federal courts can commit to this institution. That is mostly for violations, I am informed, of the postal laws that the Federal courts commit young boys to this institution.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, this is a reformatory school for youths and it is not limited to the District only, but is for youths that are committed for offending any of the Federal laws.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a Federal institution and boys committed in the District are sent there.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the support of those boys sent from outside, who pays for their sustenance?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The United States. They are committed by the Federal courts the same as we provide for Federal prisoners.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why would it not be better if it provides that we should charge the actual cost instead of fixing a certain amount?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The difficulty of it is this, that it would be necessary to wait until the end of the fiscal year to determine what the cost had been. They say from their books it figures $4.50 a week.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is more to charge the District a proportionate part of the expense for maintaining the youths committed from the District?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all. For instance, in the District of Columbia bill appropriations have been made for this purpose, half out of the Federal Treasury and half out of the District revenues. Unless they pay what it actually cost we supplement from the Federal Treasury the difference.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. GOULDEN. How many boys are in this institution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are 371 there, I think.

Mr. GOULDEN. The figures for maintenance are certainly high, gauged by an institution of which I happen to be connected as a manager in the city of New York. It costs $135 a year there. It is known as the Catholic Protectory, with which the gentleman is familiar, one of our best institutions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The New York protectory is an institution conducted by Brothers of the Christian Schools, and there are 1,500 boys there, and none of the instructors receive compensation.

Mr. GOULDEN. They receive $200 a year, a mere bagatelle, for the splendid services rendered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, under the new arrangement they can manage an institution of that character for a less amount.

Mr. GOULDEN. I believe that the expense of this institution, of nearly twice the amount, is too expensive and should be reduced. However, I will trust the judgment of the committee, and do not believe they would authorize a matter of this character if it was not somewhere near right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I recall that in the past I thought that 52 or 53 cents a day was somewhat high, but they seemed to need the money they got, and they seemed to use it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Public institutions always can use it, I will say to the gentleman, no matter how large it may be. There is no trouble about that. Now, in the State Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Bath, N. Y., the cost is about $147 per year for each member, which includes clothing. Of course that does not include schools, as that is not required.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Here they have both schools and shops, and the number of inmates is not so large as to make it most economical to utilize these shops. For instance, in the Catholic Protectory the different shops are highly productive. And there is a very considerable revenue from the output of the shops.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is there no net revenue from the output of these shops? Or are they an actual expense?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is not a great deal of revenue. They utilize these boys, as I recall, largely in extending the institution itself, for erecting the small buildings, or any buildings they have to erect there. They utilize this boy labor in that way.

Mr. GOULDEN. They have no trade schools in the sense that we have them in the Catholic Protectory?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not in the sense they have them there.

Mr. GOULDEN. We have bricklaying, plumbing, printing, harness and shoe making, and other trades at the protectory. The boys are equipped and fitted to go out into the world and take care of themselves. In addition to the trade schools we have 250 boys at the Lincolndale Agricultural School, where they become practical farmers, gardeners, and dairymen.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The boys in this institution are small boys, of 12 or 13 years of age. Not many of them are employed in the shops.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

LIGHTHOUSES, BEACONS, FOG SIGNALS, LIGHT VESSELS, AND OTHER WORKS UNDER THE LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

Staten Island (N. Y.) Lighthouse Depot: To erect a carpenter shop at the general lighthouse depot, Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., $23,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if all of these three items under the Lighthouse Bureau are provided for by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. My recollection is that all the items in the bill under the Lighthouse Department are authorized. There is a great list of estimates, where items were not included because they were not authorized.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This item is to take the place of the carpenter shop that has already existed.

Mr. MANN. I hold the point of order for a moment, then. Is this carpenter shop authorized by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a carpenter shop there at present.

Mr. MANN. That is not what I asked the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. There is an old carpenter shop, and it is proposed to tear that down and erect a new building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that there is any specific provision in any of these bills that authorizes the erection of a new carpenter shop.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that for years they have been seeking to obtain additional buildings at this depot and various other buildings elsewhere, and those matters have been up before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has jurisdiction of the matter, and that that committee has reported bills and the bills were passed not very long ago making additions to the Lighthouse Service. Now, why does the Committee on Appropriations undertake to stick in an item for an appropriation that is not authorized by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee is not doing that. This shop is authorized. The first item is No. 1, Staten Island, N. Y., lighthouse depot: To erect a carpenter shop at the general lighthouse depot, Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., $23,000; and when asked whether this was authorized, Secretary Redfield answered, "Yes, sir." My recollection is that this item was authorized by one of the bills reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and was not included last year.

Mr. MANN. On that statement I will withdraw the point of order that I reserved.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The policy of the committee has been not to include any items for the Lighthouse Service for new projects unless they have been specifically authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary said this was authorized by statute.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he has any special rule for determining the propriety of making appropriations for the construction of buildings? What is the standard fixed which induces the committee to report an item for the construction of a building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Speaking for myself, with reference to these items that are estimated for, I undertake to get as much information as I can about them and then I exercise my own judgment as to the desirability of recommending appropriations for them. For instance, there were three or four items estimated for the Frankford Arsenal which I deemed necessary and in recommending which I joined with the rest of the committee. There were other items for which we did not join in recommending appropriations.

Mr. MOORE. I was about to refer to those items. I will say to the gentleman from New York, and to contrast them with——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee recommended improvements at Frankford Arsenal aggregating $57,000 out of a total estimate of $88,000. That is a large percentage, as a rule.

Mr. MOORE. Did not the committee have before it a statement that there was great danger of explosions, due to the congestion and character of buildings at Frankford Arsenal, and yet did it feel warranted in making recommendations for appropriations for Frankford Arsenal? The appropriations were denied, but when we come to Staten Island, close to New York, it appears that another standard is set up by which we view appropriations favorably. That is to say, the word of Secretary Garrison, the Secretary of War, to the effect that buildings are necessary at Frankford Arsenal because of danger to life and property is not as strong with the committee as Secretary Redfield's opinion appears to be with regard to a carpenter shop on Staten Island, N. Y. We can not seem to get these buildings in Philadelphia, but you can get them in New York. I was just wondering what sort of argument the Secretary of Commerce used in order to make so favorable an impression on the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can get the argument that Secretary Redfield made in the hearings.

Mr. MOORE. The Secretary of War made such recommendations because of the danger to life in Frankford Arsenal—recommendations which the committee did not seem to approve; but——

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this case Secretary Redfield personally visited this depot and made a personal examination, and then came before the Committee on Appropriations and gave the committee the benefit of the information he had obtained. In the instance of the recommendation of the Secretary of War relative to Frankford Arsenal, to which the gentleman refers, there is no information that the Secretary of War ever visited the arsenal or ever made any personal investigation, and he certainly never came before the Committee on Appropriations and suggested the desirability of the buildings about which he wrote letters to somebody else.

Mr. MOORE. When he is at home the Secretary of War lives just across the river from the Frankford Arsenal, and he probably knows all about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman that, having some knowledge as to the manner in which heads of departments sign letters to be sent to some persons, I do not place quite as much weight upon such communications as do gentlemen who are vitally interested in obtaining appropriations for the things so recommended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say this about the item: The requests for this carpenter shop were made for four or five years on the ground that the conditions there were highly dangerous. The committee refused to recommend the appropriation.

Mr. MOORE. Was it the danger of explosion or because the element of danger of fire entered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me finish this statement. The committee refused to recommend the appropriation because there was no authority for the shop; and then after the law was passed authorizing the construction of this shop, the committee still refused to include the item to construct it, and it was not until the head of the department personally visited the depot and ascertained the conditions at first hand and gave the committee the benefit of that information that the committee could be induced to incorporate it in the bill. The chairman of the committee does not come from the vicinity of this depot—neither is it in his district or his county.

Mr. MOORE. I withdraw that suggestion. Now, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Inasmuch as Secretary Redfield has visited Staten Island and has inspected this carpenter shop, and has reported that there is danger of fire and that it would be well to have an appropriation for a new building, would it now be in order for us to induce Secretary Garrison to go to Frankford Arsenal and report that there is danger of an explosion, in order to get a new building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the first thing for the Secretary of War to do would be to submit an estimate in accordance with the law for additional facilities for land at the Frankford Arsenal. The law requires that those estimates shall be included in the annual Book of Estimates, unless they are submitted to carry out some law subsequently enacted by Congress or by reason of the happening of some unusual emergency that could not have been anticipated at the time the annual estimates were submitted. I do not think at this time, at this session, the Secretary of War can bring himself within the law.

Mr. MOORE. It was decidedly to the advantage of Staten Island station to have the Secretary of Commerce visit it and then report to the committee that there was danger of fire because there were shavings in the carpenter shop there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the committee had more confidence in a statement of that kind after a personal visit than it would have when the information was based on the statement of a person who had communicated to an official who had brought it to the attention of some one else.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. On what subject?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. On the tariff—on the state of the Union.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut objects.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 11, page 128, add the following paragraph:
"Monhegan Island (Me.) light vessel: To erect and equip a light vessel to be placed near Monhegan Island, entrance Penobscot Bay, Me., $125,000."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Chairman, there is no man in this House who is more in sympathy with the purposes of the Committee on Appropriations to keep these appropriations down to the lowest possible point consistent with the safe and practical transaction of the public business than I am. If this amendment had reference to matters of dollars and cents or property alone, I certainly should not offer it in face of the failure of the committee to insert it in the original bill. But the purpose of this amendment is not dollars and cents or property. The purpose of this amendment is to save human life, and not money alone. The purpose of it is to prevent another of the terrible sea disasters that have so recently shocked the civilized world.

I desire to present very briefly to the committee the facts which make this appropriation an absolute necessity for the purpose of saving the lives of innocent people who travel at sea. Monhegan Island is practically a huge rock rising out of the ocean about 9 miles off the Maine coast. The very nature of its coast makes it absolutely a danger to navigation; but that is not its worst danger. In this section of the North Atlantic coast we have at certain seasons of the year very great banks of fog that rest upon and absolutely envelop this island and the surrounding country. I doubt if there is another place on the Atlantic coast where they have such banks of fog prevalent at certain seasons of the year, of such density, and so absolutely impenetrable. This island is directly in the pathway of navigation, between Boston and Maine and Nova Scotia and all that northeastern country. Now, the only protection to travel and navigation by way of signals is, first, the lighthouse on Monhegan Island. It is a good lighthouse, properly equipped, but the trouble is that in certain months of the year, particularly July, August, and September, the fog banks are so dense that they completely envelop this island, and it is absolutely impossible to see this light.

For that reason the lighthouse in these months is practically useless to navigation. Now, outside of that, and made necessary because of that condition, the only other signal is about 2 or 3 miles out, near a small island called Manana—a buoy and submarine bell. You gentlemen know that a signal of that character is operated by the motion of the ocean. In rough water it operates fairly well, and the buoy and submarine bell, which is about 20 or 25 feet below the surface, operates with pretty fair satisfaction. But the time of dense fog is also the time of calm on that coast, and when it is calm the sea does not move as it does in rough condition, and there are no conditions which cause the bell to ring. The calm always accompanies the fog. If there was wind enough to stir up the sea and cause the bell to ring, it would drive the fog away, but the very fact that the fog is there is almost positive proof of calm weather, and when it is calm there is no sea to cause the bell to ring so that it can be heard.

In many vessels they have an apparatus to receive the sound from the submarine bell. In this particular vicinity the boats are light draft, only about 9 or 9½ feet in depth, and they do not satisfactorily receive, even on the receiving apparatus, the sound from the submarine bell. The result is that as a matter of practical experience the navigator is in a worse condition with the bell during a fog and in the calm than he would be if it was not there at all, because he relies upon it to ring and it does not ring. He does not get the signal and he is misled into the very danger that he is trying to avoid.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said that this island, with its unusual conditions, is right in the pathway of navigation between Boston and our whole northeastern country. There are 300,000 people every year taken up by that dangerous point in these vessels. The main part of that travel is in the summer months—July, August, and September—and those are the exact months when fog most prevails on that coast.

I know and appreciate the condition in which the Committee on Appropriations finds itself. I believe that the committee realizes this danger that exists there, because already there have been three vessels run onto this coast, and one of them was a steamer containing between 500 and 600 passengers. The vessel was wrecked, but providentially no lives were lost in that disaster.

Now, as I say, the committee is I know somewhat embarrassed with reference to this situation, because the commissioner of lighthouses, as I understand, has opposed the adoption of this amendment or this appropriation for the building of a light vessel which would overcome all this difficulty and make the place safe. Ordinarily it is natural and proper, of course, that the committee should receive recommendation of the heads of departments, but the trouble in this case is the heads of the department have completely and absolutely changed ground. The last time this measure was up and these dangerous conditions were brought before the committee the Commissioner of Lighthouses and the Secretary of Commerce both agreed with our recommendation and they themselves recommended that this appropriation ought to pass.

Here are their letters:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 2, 1912.

Hon. S. W. GOULD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the question of the establishment of a light vessel at Monhegan Island, Me.

I beg to state that the bureau has this day recommended to the department that in view of the urgent representations which have been made by shipping interests the department withdraw its recommendation to Congress that House bill 20422 and Senate bill 5387 be not passed.

It is understood that the department will communicate with the chairmen of the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce recommending that these two bills be passed.

Yours, very truly,

G. R. PUTNAM, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.
Washington, May 3, 1912.

DEAR SIR: Referring to previous correspondence relative to the establishment of a light vessel at Monhegan Island, Me.

In view of the urgent representations which have been made by shipping interests the department has this day addressed letters to the chairmen of the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce withdrawing its recommendation that Senate bill 5387 and House bill 20422 of the present session of Congress be not passed.

After further investigation of the matter, the department concludes that the establishment of a light vessel off Monhegan Island would be of material benefit to navigation, and it has, therefore, recommended to the two committees mentioned that the bills be passed.

Respectfully,

B. S. CABLE, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. O. GARDNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: On my return from Maine the 12th instant, I found your favor of August 24, to which by message of the 11th you kindly direct my attention. Instructions have been given to the Bureau of Lighthouses to include in their estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, $125,000 for the construction of the lightship which was authorized as stated in your favor.

Yours, truly, WILLIAM C. REDFIELD.

So at that time the department through its head recommended as a proper piece of legislation this appropriation which we now ask. At the present time I understand the attitude of the gentlemen to be this: They do not deny the existence of the danger to innocent travelers, they do not deny but that a lightship would overcome this danger; but they say that there are some other projects that they have in mind that are more urgent than this. I know nothing about what those other projects are, but if there are any projects that are more urgent than this, where there are more dangers than there are at this point, it is the duty of the committee not only to pass this appropriation and take care of these dangers, but also to take care of all these other dangers, so that the innocent traveling public can be assured at least of their lives.

Mr. Chairman, I understand they want to try it as it is a little longer. They say they have put this submarine bell there, and they want to see how it will work another year. Suppose in the meantime another steamer, with innocent, precious lives upon it, runs upon that coast and goes to the bottom while you are experimenting with a submarine bell? Remember three vessels have already gone ashore at this point. Do you want to wait for another one to go there to save a paltry $125,000? That is all there is to this proposition. It is a question of life. It is a question of safety for the innocent traveling public. We can not afford to experiment with life and death. I say that you and I can not afford to take that responsibility. When the dangers have been brought home to us and we have full knowledge of them we can not, with our eyes open, fail to exercise this precaution for the safety of the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this lightship was authorized in the act approved March 4, 1913. When the Secretary of Commerce and the Commissioner of Lighthouses were before the Committee on Appropriations they said that, although they had submitted the estimates for the money to provide the lightship in accordance with the law, they had done so because it was authorized and had been strongly recommended by the Senators and Representatives from that section of the country, but they were not in favor of the appropriation being made. Monhegan Island has upon it a lighthouse. Two or three miles off from this island is a gas buoy, with a whistle and a submarine bell. In the fall of 1913 an improved gas buoy was placed at this point. The department believes that the aids to navigation now at this point are sufficient. They say that unquestionably a light vessel would be superior to the aids now located there, but that, everything considered, in their opinion, the existing aids are sufficient for the safe navigation of the sea; and they did not recommend the light vessel.

Three vessels were lost in this vicinity, as stated by the gentleman from Maine, but they are not recent disasters. One occurred in 1886 and one in 1902 and one in 1905.

Mr. MONDELL. But there was only one vessel lost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There were three disasters.

Mr. MONDELL. And the other two went ashore.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that one was a total loss. The committee gave a hearing to a former Member of the House—Mr. Littlefield—and the Representative from Maine, Mr. MCGILLICUDDY; to Mr. Gilbert Austin, president of the Eastern Steamship Corporation, of Boston; to Capt. Rawley; and to Capt. Crowley, the general manager and treasurer of the Coastwise Transportation Co. These gentlemen very strongly contended that as a matter of safety the lightship should be built and placed at this point. They contend, for instance, that they can not approach Monhegan Island and locate the buoy as they might at some other point.

The island has precipitous shores, and there is deep water right up to it, and so they can not tell by soundings or by the shoals on the bottom that they are approaching the island. They insist that the submarine bell is of no benefit to them. The chief reason why it is of no benefit is that the vessels which they navigate are not equipped with the apparatus required in order to obtain the warning of the submarine bell. Then, they contend, in addition, that even if their vessels were equipped with this apparatus, still the bell would be very unsatisfactory and unreliable, and that, as stated by the gentleman from Maine, their vessels are not deep-draft vessels and draw only from 9 to 12 feet of water, and one of these captains stated that in his experience satisfactory results have not been so far obtained with the apparatus installed for the purpose of receiving the warnings from the submarine bells upon vessels of light draft; that unless the receiving apparatus be placed quite low, some 20 or 22 feet below the surface of the water, very frequently the warnings were not received.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MCGILLICUDDY. Mr. Chairman, is it not true that they can not use the deep-draft vessels for the reason that they have to run up the rivers where the waters are shoal?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make that plain. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his time for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was further stated that the company was preparing apparatus or endeavoring to perfect apparatus which, if installed on light-draft vessels, would detect the warning of the submarine bell. Now, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCGILLICUDDY] stated, the representatives of these corporations said that they could not use deep-draft vessels because they visited places where the depth of water was such that the vessel drawing more than 9, 10, or 12 feet could not be taken. I have endeavored, Mr. Chairman, to state comprehensively that which was presented to the committee. The responsible officials of the Government in charge of the Lighthouse Service stated that they were now expending $800,000 a year for the maintenance of light vessels; that it is not desirable to increase the number of these vessels unless it be imperatively demanded; that it costs about $15,000 a year to maintain them; without further knowledge of the situation, that with the existing aids to navigation all the reasonable precautions have been taken by the Government to make navigation of these waters safe. The committee discussed the matter somewhat at length, and finally reached the conclusion that it was compelled at least to place some reliance upon the officials responsible for the administration of this service, and if they were of the opinion that, under all the circumstances, the existing aids were adequate, until they were tried further it would be unwise and unjustifiable to incur the expenditure necessary for building a lightship. The committee therefore acquiesced in the recommendation of the department, and did not include the item in the bill. The committee has all the information in its possession. For the reason stated, I voted in the committee not to make the appropriation for this ship at this time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Members of Congress from the State of Maine and the people interested in shipping there have been very earnest and very anxious in support of the proposition for a lightship off Monhegan Island. Quite a number of gentlemen interested in shipping appeared before the committee and made very complete statements with regard to the matter. Messrs. GUERNSEY and PETERS, of the Maine delegation, have been greatly interested in it and have urged the committee to support it. It is one of that sort of appropriations that we would like to support, and certainly would support if we believed under all the circumstances and conditions we were justified in doing so. Monhegan Island is on the steamer route from Portland to Nova Scotia, from Boston to all Maine points. It is a point of departure. Off Monhegan Island vessels take their course to the north when they are going north and in the other direction going down the coast. There is a first-class lighthouse on Monhegan, and on the island of Manana, immediately adjacent, is a first-class air siren. Some two and a half miles off the island of Manana is a gas buoy, with whistle and submarine bell. The coast and the sea about the island is subject to fogs, as the gentleman from Maine has stated, and those fogs are so dense that it is impossible to get the flash of the lighthouse on Monhegan Island; hence the air siren on Manana and the gas buoy two miles and a half farther out in the direction from which steamers approach coming from the south. There has been some difficulty there. Steamers frequently have to lay by in certain weather. There have been in the last 25 years three serious accidents in that vicinity. I do not recall that any lives were lost, but a good deal of property was destroyed in each case. Within the last year three improvements have been made in the situation.

First, the lighthouse on Monhegan Island has been very greatly improved. Second, the air siren on the island of Manana has been greatly improved and in place of the old buoy 2½ miles out there is a first-class light of 700 candlepower, with a submarine bell. There is a lightship off the port of Portland, I believe. That lightship does not carry a stronger light than this gas buoy does. Of course the lightship could be equipped with a stronger light, but the new light of this gas buoy is as strong a light as is now carried on the lightship off the port of Portland.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. May I interrupt the gentleman there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It is not altogether the light on the lightship that would be of aid to navigation, but also the lightship locates the sound signals of the bell and it is not dependent upon the motion of the ocean, but is regulated by the crew and consequently would be reliable.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize the fact on a lightship the sound signals would be stronger.

Mr. MANN. They do not have bells on lightships.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Yes; they do.

Mr. MANN. And they are not rung by the crew, either.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. They certainly have them.

Mr. MONDELL. A lightship would carry an air siren. This buoy carries a whistle, and it would be possible with a first-class lightship to afford better aid to navigation than they have there now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. It costs $125,000 to build a lightship. It costs $15,000 a year to maintain it. The aids to navigation we now have on that coast and in the vicinity of that island are better than we have on our coasts generally, and the committee, much as it is inclined to make the best possible provision for our coasts, hardly felt justified, anxious as they were to meet the views of the gentleman from Maine, in providing for a lightship until we shall have had a longer period of experience and trial of the very excellent aids to navigation which have been recently installed there.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Just a word to the gentleman. This is not so much a matter of interest to the people of Maine as it is to the traveling public from other parts of the country to and from Maine.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that, and I understand that when the gentleman from Maine is speaking for this project he is speaking in the interests of the people who travel the Maine coast, large numbers of whom come from all up and down the coast and from all over the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. McGILLICUDDY].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I served for a good many years on the committee that had jurisdiction over aids to navigation, and for a good many years reported to the House all the bills that carried authorization for aids to navigation, which is the only excuse I have for knowing anything about the subject. I think there is no coast anywhere in the world that is better supplied with aids to navigation than the coast of Maine, that State having for many years enjoyed the distinction of having Senator Frye represent them in the Senate, and Senator Frye was chairman of the Senate committee which had jurisdiction over aids to navigation.

We ought to be a little careful about providing a lightship anywhere. The original cost of a lightship upon the ocean is in the neighborhood of $125,000. Probably it will soon be $150,000. If it were only the original cost it would not make so much difference, but the cost of maintenance of a lightship is from $15,000 to $18,000 a year. In most of the places where they now have lightships an acetylene-gas buoy with a bell would answer the purpose just as well as the lightship, and the cost is merely nominal as compared with the cost of a lightship. It may be cheaper now, but you could buy such a gas buoy at from $8,000 to $10,000 a few years ago. I think we used to provide not to exceed $15,000 for two. A few years ago Congress decided, so far as committees could decide, that they would be very chary about providing new lightships on account of the cost of maintenance. Of course, it goes without saying that everywhere the mariners—the men who navigate the ships—would like to have an additional aid to navigation here and there and elsewhere. They pay no taxes, they make no contribution toward the support of the aids to navigation, and practically not anything toward the support of the Government.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. But they pay tolls.

Mr. MANN. Through the Panama Canal they pay tolls, or will, much to my regret, so far as the legislation is concerned. But that has nothing to do with this matter. Of course, they want these aids to navigation. And I have repeatedly known it to happen that where the mariners had never thought of an aid to navigation being needed, some of them would start a petition or a letter, urging that an aid to navigation be placed at some particular place, and out of courtesy to the one all the others would insist that it was unsafe to navigate in that locality without the particular aid to navigation being provided, although they had been navigating there practically a lifetime and never dreamed of it before. And I think we ought to be a little cautious before we entail upon the Government a permanent expense of $15,000 to $18,000 a year, when the chances are that a proper buoy at this place would answer all the purposes of a lightship, even if they need anything at all.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMSON. I know it will be a comfort to him to remind him, after his just tribute to the late Senator Frye, that the interests of Maine have by no means suffered by the death of that distinguished statesman, but that a multitude have arisen in his stead, and every Representative and Senator is wholly alive in securing everything possible in the way of authorization, and getting it.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt they are still alive and active in urging these things. You can pass the word to any State delegation in this House with reference to anything that some one wants in the State and get every one of them active in favor of the proposition, swearing that the State can not exist and the Government will fall if they do not get them, and yet they never heard of it before.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. In answer to that proposition, I want to say that I have been here for three years, and our delegation has never done anything of the kind, and has never asked for anything up to to-night.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. This particular item has been before the House since the gentleman came here.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I say outside of this item.

Mr. MANN. And if he does not know it, he has forgotten.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I say outside of this item.

Mr. MANN. This is not the only item that the gentleman from Maine has been for since he has come here.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 21.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska, aids to navigation: For the establishment of aids to navigation and improvement of existing aids in Alaska, $60,000.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what consideration was given to the recommendation of the Department of Commerce for a lighthouse tender for Alaska? I understand the Department of Commerce recommended an appropriation of $325,000 for a lighthouse tender for Alaskan waters.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have no jurisdiction over that. Unless the vessel is authorized by law, we have no right to recommend an appropriation.

Mr. FALCONER. There is an authorization for this lighthouse tender to the extent of $250,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Department of Commerce wants to have the limit of cost increased to $325,000, but this committee has no authority to recommend appropriations for any of these vessels in the absence of legislation previously enacted authorizing them, which legislation belongs to the jurisdiction of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will say that the committee which has jurisdiction voted to increase that authorization and put the bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. It was objected to, and we then put the bill passed by the Senate for the same purpose on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and now we have been notified that it will be objected to when next called up. I thought I was going to get recognition to move to suspend the rules on next Monday, but I am now notified that I did get it on the list. I want the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to understand that, notwithstanding the fact that I earnestly favor the appropriation, I am chairman of one of the great committees of the House, and as such will not move to amend the pending bill, but I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that he has authority to make a motion to increase it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia can not lead me into offering amendments to this bill for matters not authorized and over which his committee has jurisdiction and in which he may be interested, while insisting that under no circumstances shall I carry in this bill items over which his committee has jurisdiction unless they are authorized by law.

Now, if the bars are to be taken down and the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce can exercise discretion regarding the matters which he will recommend, regardless of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, that is one thing; but I think that the wisest and best and most orderly way to conduct the business of the House is to let the gentleman's committee exercise its jurisdiction and let the Committee on Appropriations recommend appropriations in accordance with the law. Then we shall have much better results.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. FALCONER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I am not trying to lead the gentleman from New York. I would not offer any amendment to his bill so long as I am one of the chairmen of the great Democratic committees of this House; but, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman can not plead around an item in that way, because the committee of which I am chairman has done its best to make that authorization. It has reported its own bill, which was objected to on the floor, and it has reported the Senate bill and tried to get consideration of it. We thought we would have consideration for it next Monday, but I find upon inquiry that we are not to have it. I request, inasmuch as we have not been able under the parliamentary situation to get consideration of a bill that ought to pass, that the gentleman from New York recognize the fact that the Senate has passed the bill and the House committee has recommended both bills, and that he is at liberty to offer an amendment to put that item in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman must realize that I merely represent our committee. I have no authority to assume the right to offer amendments to this bill that would be subject to points of order, and then, in carrying out the instructions of the committee, raise points of order against amendments that other gentlemen would offer.

Mr. ADAMSON. I only wanted the gentleman to understand that he would not be tramping on anybody's toes if he offers such an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Washington be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. FALCONER. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment I offer be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 128, after line 18, by inserting the following: "For lighthouse tender for Alaskan waters, $325,000."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman, until I hear what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from the State of Maine [Mr. MCGILLICUDDY] a few moments ago gave something of the history of wrecks on the coast of Maine. I want to say to the Members of the House that Alaskan waters, since the United States Government bought Alaska, have presented a string of wrecks and sea horrors that is very extraordinary.

I have in my hand a list of ships that have been lost since Alaska came into the possession of the United States. Eighty-three ships have been entirely destroyed and wrecked in Alaskan waters in that time, and the value reaches to something like $7,500,000.

The Department of Commerce, having had the matter under consideration, and having had the data presented to it by the chambers of commerce and by the seafaring men of the Pacific coast, recommended an appropriation of $325,000 for a lighthouse tender ship to replace the America.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FALCONER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ESCH. The vessel to which the gentleman refers was wrecked off the Alaska coast in May, 1912, and this tender is to supplant the one that was lost.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to place before Congress some facts bearing on the amendment, and also call the attention of the House to the necessity for this and other appropriations in order that some of the dangers now existing may be eliminated.

In 1913 three ships were lost. I am not speaking of those that were partially wrecked, and repaired at an expense of from $5,000 to $25,000 for each ship, but lost in 1913. The Yukon sank off Sanak Island. She was worth $170,000. The State of California sank in Gambier Bay in 1913, with a loss of 34 lives. The value of that ship was $225,000. The Curacao was lost in 1913 off Warm Chuck. She was worth $225,000. I could go on back to the year 1878 and include some 80 ships. It seems to me that the committee having this matter in charge ought to have given more consideration to the dangerous conditions obtaining out there, and have made an appropriation for this lighthouse tender. Anyone who knows anything about the Pacific coast—and I am sure there are many gentlemen on the floor who know as much about it as Pacific coast members—must appreciate the fact that something ought to be done at this session of Congress, and I hope no objection will be raised to the amendment, but that we may have this appropriation.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FALCONER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I notice in the hearings conducted before the committee that when this matter was presented the Secretary of Commerce inserted in the record a letter which he had written to the gentleman from Illinois with reference to this matter, in which the statement is made that the Government has paid out during the last four years something like $84,000 in the way of charters for vessels to carry supplies to and from the Pribilof Islands, which supplies could be carried on this tender, and that the Government is now paying at the rate of $200 a day as a charter for a private steamer to do work that could be performed by this vessel.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him who is the gentleman from Illinois referred to?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] who is now addressing me.

Mr. MANN. Is that the way the Secretary manufactures evidence, to write a letter to somebody and then get it published in the hearings?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. It is published in the hearings.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it adds anything to it. It is news to me.

Mr. FALCONER. As regards this matter, and bearing directly upon it, Secretary Redfield has urged this appropriation; and as the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], has just said, it is the opinion of the men who have given most consideration to the question that the ship ought to be built and that the appropriation should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given five minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FALCONER. The people of the country generally, and particularly those who are in direct touch with this question, fail to understand why this great loss of life and property should be continued, when it is due, as is suggested, to the indifference of the Congress.

A most extraordinary seacoast formation obtains in the inside passage to Alaska. And I wish here to read a communication received from the Seattle Commercial Club reciting facts relative to the necessity for some action:

Whereas the club has already gone on record as advocating the plan of immediately sweeping the rocky channel of the coast of Alaska to discover and locate uncharted obstructions to navigation; and

Whereas Congress is asked to appropriate money for a number of new survey boats needed to satisfactorily and completely chart the waters of the Alaska coast.

Five times Congress has been asked to make these appropriations. Four times the request has been ignored. Some action by Congress is expected this year. It would be well to consider the facts in the situation and have them properly placed before Congress, so that whatever action is taken it may be taken intelligently.

The rocky formation of the coast line and the great depth of water in most of the channels and approaches, together with numerous underwater peaks of hills projecting upward sometimes nearly to the surface without showing above, makes it necessary that the position of these underwater peaks be accurately determined and charted for safety to navigation.

The old-time and usual method of learning the depth of water has been to attach a sinker to a long line and by lowering the sinker to the bottom of the water determine the depth by measuring the distance from top of the water to bottom. This method only discloses the depth at the point where the measurement is taken, which may be within 50 feet of the perpendicular side of a rocky peak extending upward to within a few feet of the surface of the water and yet not be discernible, although it be a most dangerous menace to the safety of ships navigating the sea in that vicinity. All such underwater peaks can be discovered by drawing a long line at a graduated depth below the surface of the water along the channels and approaches frequented by shipping, say, 40 feet deep at low water.

The nature of this service is such that a small wire cable, probably one-half inch in diameter and one or more miles in length, suspended from buoys or small boats, with one or two occupants in each, would seem to be most suitable; drawn through the channels and along the routes frequented by shipping, all obstructions rising near enough to the surface of the water would be discovered and promptly marked by buoys placed in the boats for the purpose, and the continuation of the search would be kept up without delay, thus making it possible to cover a space 20 to 50 square miles daily in ordinary summer weather.

The class of shipping best adapted to this service is the 75 to 100 foot power fishing craft, because their power is not sufficient to break the cable if obstructions are met suddenly; they can proceed at a speed of 3 to 5 miles per hour, which is ample; they can carry all the boats and men required to perform the service efficiently under the supervision of officers of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey or naval officers.

They can easily cover 500 square miles of ocean service monthly, or 3,000 square miles per season of six months yearly; five outfits of two power craft to each could be working at once, making it possible to survey 15,000 square miles of surface waters of the coast yearly for less expense to the Nation than it would cost to build two specially designed crafts, which might, after all, be poorly adapted to the purpose.

The cost for charter of suitable boats and crews would be less than $3,000 per month for each craft, or $18,000 for six months' service of each vessel and crew; 10 vessels (5 outfits) would cost the Nation less than $180,000 for the 3,000 square miles of estimated area of survey.

When the survey for the location of all undiscovered projections into the path of navigation is completed and their position discovered and marked the hydrographic officer can complete the service by placing the positions on the charts accurately. Any appropriations for the purpose exceeding in amount the above-named estimates are excessive, since there is plenty of material, both vessels and men, at present available for the purpose: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a letter embodying the terms of this communication be forwarded to Members of Congress from this coast.

OTTE CASE, Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I want to insert an article, inspired by the wreck of the State of California, from the Railway and Marine News:

CONGRESS ALONE TO BLAME FOR LATEST ALASKA WRECK—INSUFFICIENT AIDS TO NAVIGATION AND LACK OF PROPER CHARTING RESPONSIBLE FOR LOSS OF 32 PEOPLE—VALUE OF TOTAL LOSSES IN ALASKA WATERS MORE THAN $7,000,000.

The loss of the steamship State of California in Gambier Bay on the early morning of August 17, in which 32 lives were lost, has again called the attention of the public to the deplorable condition of Alaska as regards aids to navigation and insufficient charting. At intervals during the past 10 years agitations have been started and the attention of Congress has been called to this very important matter. Congress has been petitioned for appropriations for more and better aids in the district of Alaska, extending from Portland Canal, where the British Columbia coast line terminates, to different ports of call to the eastward as far as Nome and St. Michael. This agitation, made at different times, has borne fruit in a small way, and while Alaskan waters are much better lighted and marked than they were 10 years ago, the increase in these much-needed aids to navigation has not by any means kept pace with the growth in commerce.

A short time ago a separate lighthouse district was established in Alaska, and a lighthouse tender detailed for that duty. This was a step in the right direction, and it was hoped at the time the change was made that Congress would appropriate sufficient money for the establishment of needed lighthouses and other aids. The Lighthouse Board appreciates the needs of Alaska, and the men in charge of the work would like nothing better than to have plenty of funds with which to make needed improvements. The same is true of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Considering the stretch of coast line in Alaska and the many routes of steamship travel, the equipment for this department of the Government service is woefully inadequate. Instead of operating two or three small survey steamers, the Government should supply a sufficient number to prosecute this work as the commerce of that district demands. If the Coast and Geodetic Survey is short of available talent to carry on this work, the Government could very well afford to send north each summer cadets out of the Naval Academy, who would thus be given some real work and who would gain some very valuable experience. During the summer season many naval vessels are in reserve at Mare Island and at Bremerton, and the young officers attached to these ships could very well be spared to serve in Alaska.

Gambier Bay, the scene of the recent deplorable wreck, was first charted in 1889, and the latest charts were compiled from figures obtained at that time. In the charts a long reef is shown, but not a single buoy marks the location of this dangerous line of rocks. In the case of the State of California, it can be stated that the vessel was on her regular course at 8.27 in the morning, and at 8.29 she struck the uncharted rock which ripped out her bottom plates, and at 8.32 the ship disappeared from sight. The oldest Indian living on Gambier Bay never heard of the rock which caused the State of California to sink, and snuffing out 32 precious lives.

In Canadian waters, whenever a new cannery is located or a new village grows to the importance of demanding steamship service, that Government's survey boats immediately repair to the scene and secure data for reliable charts. After the survey work is done, the lighthouse department gets busy and places wherever necessary aids to navigation. True, the coast line of Alaska is very much more extensive than that of British Columbia, but, nevertheless, the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Lighthouse Departments should be given sufficient funds to prosecute work wherever vessels are navigated in these waters.

In an examination of the list of vessels lost in Alaskan waters during a period of years extending from 1878 to date, it is found that the stupendous total of $7,340,000 has been paid out by underwriters for total losses, and a sum nearly as great has been paid out for vessels that have met with disaster, been salved, and restored to their owners.

Railway and Marine News is able to publish in this issue a practically complete list of vessels totally lost in Alaskan waters, the year, where lost, and the value of hull and cargo. This paper published the greater portion of this list in its issue of October 1, 1911, that being the first time such a list had ever been published. This list is republished in this issue and brought up to date, and a perusal of the same should satisfy Members of Congress of the urgent need of assistance and the establishment of lighthouses and other aids to navigation and in a systematic charting of the waters of Alaska.

Total losses				7,340,000

The above list of total losses contains the names of many vessels well known on the Pacific coast. If we were to publish a list of all the vessels that have met with disaster of different kinds in Alaskan waters—vessels that have been repaired and restored to their owners—it would include nearly all the vessels engaged in the Alaskan trade.

While many of the losses in Alaskan waters can be attributed to mistakes of mariners, and from other causes, by far the greater percentage can be charged against the United States Government for failing to provide sufficient aids to navigation. Not only is our Government responsible to a great degree for all this loss of property, and with the great losses of underwriters, but it is also responsible for the loss of many lives during the period mentioned in the above list.

Surely the people who travel to and from the great northland, which is occupying so important a place in the public prints at the present time, are entitled to the protection of their home Government. And the men who have invested their money in floating property that the great Alaskan country might be opened up and developed are surely entitled to all the assistance they can possibly get from the Government which gives them the right to engage in this coastwise traffic. Similar protection should be given the insurance people, who make it possible for the transportation men to operate their vessels. Insurance rates on Alaskan hulls would now appear to be as high as the traffic will bear, and yet, notwithstanding the insurance rates charged, it does not require very much figuring to show anyone that underwriters have lost money on Alaska business. The question is a serious one.

Mr. Chairman, the press generally of the West urges action on the Congress, and tends to place the responsibility for future safety upon Congress. I quote from the Morning Tribune, Everett, Wash.:

GOVERNMENT HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR WRECK OF STEAMER "CALIFORNIA"—UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT FAILED TO CHART CORRECTLY ROCK IN GAMBIER BAY—34 LIVES LOST WHEN ILL-FATED SHIP SINKS—DISASTER DECLARED TO HAVE BEEN UNAVOIDABLE UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES.

SEATTLE, September 6.

Finding that the failure of the Government to chart correctly a portion of Gambier Bay, Alaska, was the direct and only cause of the wreck of the steamship State of California in those waters Sunday, August 17; completely exonerating Capt. T. H. Cann, jr., and his associates from any blame in connection with the disaster, and highly complimenting the performance of the officers and the equipment of the ill-fated vessel, the official report of the board of inquiry which, in this city, investigated the wreck, was forwarded yesterday to the Department of Commerce at Washington, D. C.

DISASTER UNAVOIDABLE.

Included in the report was a transcript of all the testimony taken, as well as the findings of the board. Capt. Bion B. Whitney and Capt. Robert A. Turner, Federal marine inspectors, with headquarters in this city, who comprised the board of investigation, united in the final decision on the disaster.

The disaster, as well as the loss of 34 lives, was declared, in their opinion, to have been unavoidable under existing circumstances. Led by the chart to believe that there were 72 feet, or 12 fathoms, of water beneath his vessel, Capt. Cann was entirely justified in assuming that the course was safe, the inspectors decreed.

NEW SEATTLE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Seattle, Wash., April 7, 1914.

Hon. J. A. FALCONER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Appropriations have been asked in Congress by the Department of Commerce for the construction of vessels and for increase in the facilities for making a proper survey of the Alaska coast and for wire-drag operations to locate pinnacle rocks, which have in the past caused numerous accidents and the loss of many lives.

Unless the department is enabled to carry out the work proposed, the menace to life and property and to uninterrupted communication will be greater than has been the case in the past, owing to the increase in travel, in the number and size of the vessels employed, and in the quantity of freight coming with the era of railroad development and the opening up of the Territory.

This chamber respectfully appeals to you to use every available opportunity of urging the granting in full of the appropriations recommended. The attached copies of correspondence interchanged between the steamship companies operating in Alaskan waters and the Department of Commerce present details of the situation and its requirements.

Such accidents as that to the State of California in Gambier Bay last August, causing the loss of 32 lives, would have been avoided if thorough surveys had been made to locate pinnacle rocks in the main ship channels, where the charts showed great depth of water.

While improvement in the last two years has been made in the way of safeguarding navigation in Alaskan waters, much yet remains to be done. This can only be accomplished by providing the means called for by the Department of Commerce, including, among other things, appropriation of $525,000 for Coast and Geodetic Survey vessels, three of which are intended solely for Alaska and three for economical operation of the wire-drag expeditions in exposed regions.

As pointed out by Secretary Redfield on his recent visit, the Government is about to expend $35,000,000 in building an Alaskan railroad, to begin at tidewater at some port from 1,000 to 1,500 miles north of here. Properly marked navigation courses really constitute the initial link in this great transportation system for the northern Territory.

Furthermore, proper provision for the Geodetic Survey will make it possible to continue crews, which work in northern waters during the summer, at work on necessary surveys on the Sound and along the coast States during the winter, thus overcoming the present rather costly practice of disbanding them in the fall and recruiting new crews in the spring.

We realize that you recognize the vital importance of this subject, but we write this letter for the purpose of bringing it directly to your attention and of placing before you the information herewith transmitted.

Yours, very truly, C. B. YANDELL, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 20, 1913.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 26th of November, forwarded through Capt. J. F. Pratt, inspector in Seattle of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, transmitted to me by the superintendent of that bureau of this department.

The subject of the communication, which is signed not only by you but by four other steamship companies, is one of the deepest interest to me, and one which, I think you will agree, when the facts are before you, has already had active attention at our hands.

On November 17 I wrote the President thus:

"The need of safeguarding the Alaskan coast is enforced by the loss this season of two important vessels, the Curacao and the State of California, with serious loss of life. Our estimates call for vessels to finish promptly the survey of the coast and for funds to light it better. The Northwest is greatly concerned, and properly, about it."

To this the President replied, November 18:

"I also hope sincerely that the Congress may be able to afford us the means which we lack of safeguarding the Alaskan coast."

I am sending you separately a copy of my annual report, issued on the 16th instant. Your attention is especially invited to page 11, from which you will see that the matter has been formally placed before Congress.

I quote below so much of a communication dated December 16 from the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey as refers to Alaskan matters:

"This bureau is in full accord with the letter of the steamship companies interested in the Alaska trade, dated November 26, 1913, which was forwarded to you with my note of December 13, 1913, in regard to the necessity of examining by the wire drag the lanes of travel followed by the steamships in Alaska. The letter discloses, as was to be expected from such authorities, an appreciation of the difficulties in locating submerged pinnacles.

"For some time this survey had had in mind the urgency of such examinations and the need of accelerating the work in Alaska and increasing the means of rapid chart publication.

"The form of the appropriation for the survey is such that the sum total of the appropriations is divided among separate items. Increases have therefore been approved by you in various scattered items of the appropriation bill which bear directly on increased activity of the survey in Alaska.

"It is perhaps not necessary to mention the items for additional small buildings and extensions and for new lithographic charts.

"The other items involving increases directly or indirectly for the Alaska surveys are as follows:

"Under 'Party expenses, Pacific,' an increase of $60,000 has been submitted. Of this amount the following is intended for the Alaska field work:

For one wire-drag party	$18,000
Additional to increase the efficiency of the 6 Alaska vessels	7,000
Total	25,000

"Of the remaining $35,000, $32,000 is intended for surveys and resurveys on the coasts of California, Oregon, and Washington, including wire-drag work, three vessels in full commission during the winter months, extension of the coast triangulation and chart-revision parties, all of which are matters that should receive immediate attention and are closely related to the maritime commercial necessities of Alaska.

"Under 'Continuing researches in physical hydrography,' etc., an increase of $5,600 has been requested. This amount will be used in increasing the activities for securing better tidal and current information along the coasts. There is an urgent demand for information of this character from mariners on the Pacific coast of the United States and in Alaska.

"Under 'Offshore soundings,' etc., an increase of $5,000 has been submitted. This is about the amount that will be required for the field revision of the Alaska Coast Pilot, including the employment of the necessary experts.

"Under 'For continuing magnetic observations,' etc., an increase of $25,000 has been requested. This is intended to start the work of carrying the triangulation from the Bering Sea, across Alaska to the one hundred and forty-first meridian, and is work that should no longer be delayed. Its completion will be necessary before accurate maps of Alaska can be made, and it will be most valuable in the development of the resources of Alaska.

"Under 'Objects not named,' etc., an increase of $1,000 has been estimated. This is intended to provide funds for plans and specifications for the new vessels for Alaska surveys. Some new language has been inserted in this item making it available for emergency relief in cases of distress in remote regions, such as in the case of the Katmai volcano in 1912, the smallpox epidemic near Fort Yukon, and the more recent case of the shipwrecked passengers and crew of the steamship Curacao, sunk off the coast of Prince of Wales Island.

"Under 'Pay of necessary employees to man and equip the vessels,' an increase of $22,800 has been requested. This will provide the necessary additional employees for the wire-drag party on the Pacific coast and Alaska, and will enable this survey to keep three of the Alaska vessels at work during the winter on much-needed surveys and resurveys on the Pacific coast.

"Under 'Salaries,' an increase of six additional assistants at $2,400 has been submitted. These trained officers are urgently required, and will hardly meet the demands for the wire-drag work, the Yukon triangulation, and for the new vessels estimated for under another head.

"You have approved estimates for six new vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, $525,000, three of which are intended solely for the Alaska surveys and three smaller ones for the more efficient and economical operation of wire-drag operations in the more exposed regions."

In addition to the above the sum of $60,000 is included in our estimates now pending before Congress for additional aids to navigation to be established by the Bureau of Lighthouses, and you will notice on page 114 of the annual report that Congress has already made an appropriation for a light and fog signal at or near Cape St. Elias, Alaska, of $115,000. A bill is now pending in Congress authorizing a lighthouse tender for Alaska at $325,000. This vessel is already authorized at a cost of $250,000, but the service requires a larger ship and we are asking that this amount be increased by $75,000 to $325,000. No appropriation for this is yet made.

We are furthermore requesting of Congress funds sufficient to provide vessels for transporting our salmon agents along the Alaska coast, of which you will find a note at the bottom of page 17.

It is our intention also to strengthen the work of the Steamboat-Inspection Service and that of the Bureau of Navigation in Alaska.

The subject of giving assistance to Alaska commerce, so far as it lies within the power of this department to do it, is one which we regard as of high importance, and the department will be glad to take any proper steps to push the matter to a successful conclusion.

I shall take the liberty of placing your letter within the knowledge of the proper committee of Congress, and I have no doubt they will give same thoughtful consideration.

Yours, truly, WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary.

SEATTLE, November 26, 1913.

Hon WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

SIR: On July 14, 1909, the steamship Ohio, en route from Seattle to ports in Alaska, struck an uncharted rock in Tongass Narrows, just north of Ketchikan. The charts showed no soundings where she struck under 30 fathoms (180 feet).

On August 13, 1912, the steamship Mariposa, while en route from Alaska ports to Seattle, struck an uncharted rock off Point Baker, in Sumner Straits, just west of where the chart shows 111 fathoms (666 feet).

On August 17, 1913, the steamship State of California, while leaving Gambier Bay, Alaska, struck an uncharted rock where the chart showed 12½ fathoms (75 feet).

In the cases of both the Ohio and Mariposa there was no serious damage to the vessels, and they were able to proceed on their voyage, but in the case of the State of California the ship sank within a few moments after striking and 32 lives were lost.

These rocks are what are known as pinnacle formations, which are peculiar to the waters of southeastern Alaska, and lead where the usual method of survey is followed. Tongass Narrows and Sumner Straits are stretches of water which have been used by vessels since the inception of trade to Alaska. Gambier Bay has been used for the past two years, since a canning industry was started therein. The State of California had made 16 trips in and out of the harbor during that time, and there had been several other vessels employed in the trade as well.

These accidents show the prevalence of uncharted rocks in regular channels and the necessity for resurvey work in order to discover these hidden dangers and to better safeguard not only the value of property, but, what is more important, human life. Persons competent to judge, including the local officers of the Coast Survey, express the opinion that the only way in which the presence of pinnacle rocks in the main ship channels can be ascertained is to drag the channels, and this can only be done at a large expense. However, we believe that the large increase in the number of vessels employed and in the number of passengers traveling between the ports of Puget Sound, British Columbia, and southeastern Alaska justify the Government in incurring whatever expense may be necessary to locate these hidden pinnacles. It is the desire of the steamship companies operating to Alaska to urge in every way possible the granting of sufficient appropriation to give the Coast Survey sufficient equipment and funds with which to prosecute this work, and it has arranged, among other things, to send each Congressman a letter showing the larger number of vessels employed in the trade, the increase in their size, the increase in the number of passengers traveling, and setting forth the danger to which ships, their passengers and cargo are subjected, and urging the necessity of appropriations in such amounts as the department may consider necessary for the proper execution of this work.

The purpose of this letter is to explain to you what the steamship companies have in mind and to respectfully solicit from you suggestions as to what further action we can take toward bringing about the desired result.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. Chairman, the President urges an adequate appropriation for coast and geodetic surveys here.

The Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, has a fine appreciation of the benefits to be derived by a thorough submarine charting of Alaska waters, and he recommends the wire-drag device be used to locate the pinnacle peaks that characterize these waters.

While the point of order raised against the pending amendment may be insisted upon, it is to be hoped that this Congress may pass the bill reported out and favorably recommended by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, of which the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say this much in reference to this matter: There is a boat authorized, to cost, I think, $250,000. There is no authority for a boat to cost $325,000. Whatever may be the merits of the controversy as to whether a larger or a smaller boat should be built, I am obliged in my capacity as chairman and representing the committee to protect the bill from such amendments.

Mr. BRYAN. Will not the gentleman, when he is aware that there is the chairman of another committee before the House who explains the situation and waives the jurisdiction of his committee, and that every reason of economy and justice and fairness requires this boat to be built—will he not yield an ordinary technical point and permit this amendment to go in?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. If I did, somebody else is ready to make the point, and I think I had better exercise it myself.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the gentleman from Illinois would waive it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman persuades the gentleman from Illinois to waive it, I would not be surprised if it had some influence on me.

Mr. BRYAN. Then it is up to the gentleman from Illinois. Surely he will not object.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation ought not to be made on its merits. A few years ago we were building lighthouse tenders for $150,000 apiece. Then we increased the amount until we got up to $200,000. I made some investigations myself, and concluded that it would take $225,000; and we provided $225,000 for a lighthouse tender. Then we afterwards authorized a lighthouse tender for the Pacific coast for $250,000.

They can build all they need in the way of lighthouse tenders for the Pacific coast and for the Alaskan coast for $250,000, to attend to the lighthouse work and to take care of the aids to navigation on the Alaska coast. But some brilliant gentleman, connected somewhere with the Department of Commerce, concluded that they would like to have a little better boat to sail in—one where there would be less likelihood of turbulence and seasickness from the elements—and so they conceived the idea that they ought to add $75,000 to the $250,000 and build what they call a lighthouse tender for $325,000, under the excuse that they needed it to go to the Pribilof Islands to carry supplies there.

Anyone thoroughly familiar with the duties of a lighthouse tender, outside of the Department of Commerce, ought to know that the lighthouse tender attending to work regularly could not well be used for trips to the Pribilof Islands. Originally the excuse was given that they ought to have a tender to carry supplies from the western coast up to the Pribilof Islands, and also to carry coal down the Yukon River—if that is the name of the river—from the coal fields of Alaska to the Pribilof Islands. A more absurd proposition, as far as the practical use of the lighthouse tender is concerned, I never heard.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Does not the gentleman recognize that there might be a demand for a vessel to carry a certain amount of freight for the Government in Alaskan waters that would not be required of a lighthouse tender on the Atlantic coast? The Government has paid $83,000 during the past four years for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. The Government pays out large sums to carry supplies to the Philippine Islands. Perhaps the gentleman from Colorado thinks we ought to build a lighthouse tender to carry freight to the Philippines. There is no connection between a lighthouse tender for taking care of the aids to navigation on the Alaskan coast and carrying coal and other supplies to the Pribilof Islands.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. If by the addition of $75,000 to the cost of the vessel we could secure a vessel that would do this work, does not the gentleman think it would be advisable?

Mr. MANN. You can not secure a vessel to do that work. The result would be that you would have a vessel costing $325,000, and instead of doing lighthouse work it would be carrying officials and supplies, mostly officials, between here and the Pribilof Islands and back again. I might get a sail in it, and it might be that my friend from Colorado would get one. But for lighthouse service the $250,000 vessel engaged in attending to the aids of navigation would be worth two of these vessels used a part of their time in going to the Pribilof Islands.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who has looked into this matter, if his committee has not recommended the construction of this vessel?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I so stated two or three times a few moments ago on the floor. It appears to be a question of judgment entirely between the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the Secretary of Commerce. I could readily concede that up to two years ago the gentleman from Illinois knew more about it than the Secretary of Commerce, but for the past 18 months the Secretary of Commerce has been giving exclusive study to these subjects. If the gentleman from Illinois were the Secretary of Commerce, I believe I would lean to his judgment, rather than to another, if the other was a Member of Congress and the leader of the minority, charged with opposition to all measures that come before Congress, which must necessarily divide his attention.

As I understand the Secretary of Commerce, he thinks it would be economical in building a vessel to replace one that was lost a few years ago to build it a little larger, so he could dispense with the necessity for still another vessel; that it might be that one vessel for $325,000 would serve two purposes, instead of having two vessels, to cost in the aggregate $500,000. I have no doubt in the world of the absolute necessity—not only propriety, but necessity—for increasing this authorization to $325,000, but I do not intend to vote for it here.

I hope that gentlemen will not make the point of order, but will let us vote it down here, so far as that is concerned, because the Committee on Appropriations is charged with the fiscal responsibility for this House. That committee gives careful and painstaking consideration to all of these questions, and I do not believe it is the fault of that committee that we have failed to secure this increase in the authorization. But there is a place where it is in order to put this item in this bill. After a bill has been passed by the other body it is in order over there to place it as an amendment on an appropriation bill, and it will come up in an orderly and proper manner, and I hope the distinguished gentlemen who will be the conferees and managers on the part of the House will permit this item to remain in the bill, if the Senate, in its wisdom, sees proper to put it in.

Mr. RAUCH. Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances I feel that we are justified in making a point of order. Therefore, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUBEY). The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

General expenses: For supplies, repairs, maintenance, and incidental expenses of lighthouses and other lights, beacons, buoyage, fog signals, lighting of rivers heretofore authorized to be lighted, light vessels, other aids to navigation, and lighthouse tenders, including the establishment, repair, and improvement of beacons and day marks and purchase of land for same, the establishment of post lights, buoys, submarine signals, and fog signals, the establishment of oil or carbide houses, not to exceed $10,000: Provided, That no oil or carbide house erected hereunder shall exceed $550 in cost; construction of necessary outbuildings at a cost not exceeding $200 at any one light station in any fiscal year, the improvements of grounds and buildings connected with light stations and depots, wages of laborers attending post lights, pay of temporary employees and field force while engaged on works of general repair and maintenance, and pay of laborers and mechanics at lighthouse depots; rations and provisions or commutation thereof for keepers of lighthouses, officers and crews of light vessels and tenders, and officials and other authorized persons of the Lighthouse Service on duty on board of such tenders or vessels, and money accruing from commutation for rations and provisions for the above-named persons on board of tenders and light vessels may be paid on proper vouchers to the person having charge of the mess of such vessels, reimbursement under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce of keepers of light stations and masters of light vessels and of lighthouse tenders for rations and provisions and clothing furnished shipwrecked persons who may be temporarily provided for by them, not exceeding in all $5,000 in any fiscal year, fuel and rent of quarters where necessary for keepers of lighthouses, the purchase of land sites for fog signals, the rent of necessary ground for all such lights and beacons as are for temporary use or to mark changeable channels and which in consequence can not be made permanent, the rent of offices, depots, and wharves, traveling expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce not to exceed $4 per day, and mileage, library books for light stations and vessels, and technical books and periodicals not exceeding $1,000, and for all other contingent expenses of district offices and depots and for contingent expenses of the office of the Bureau of Lighthouses in Washington, $2,775,000.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Insert at the end of line 13, page 130, the following:

"Provided, That hereafter employees of the Lighthouse Service who are not now entitled to leave of absence with pay, and who have served 12 consecutive months, shall be given 15 days leave of absence with pay each year: Provided, That pro rata leave shall be allowed those serving fractional parts of a year: Provided further, That heads of divisions shall have discretion as to the time when the leave shall be granted."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BROWN of New York. Mr. Chairman, there are only about 300 men who would be affected—more or less—by this amendment. They are the mechanics in the employ of the Bureau of Lighthouses, and they do the mechanical work that may be necessary from time to time. I think they are the only mechanics in the employ of the United States Government who do general work of this kind for whom vacation allowance is not made. I think in ordinary justice they ought to be included with all of the other mechanics in the navy yards and elsewhere, and receive their pro rata of 15 days' vacation allowance with pay. The Senate has recently passed Senate bill 1262, which so provides. The Secretary of Commerce is strongly in favor of this legislation. I would urge the crowded condition of the calendar as being the chief reason for adopting this amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I insist upon the point of order. There is a legislative committee that attends to that, presided over by the able gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his compliment, but the infirmity of that distinguished chairman, which I admit, is that he can not get consideration for as many good bills as he would like.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveys and necessary resurveys of coasts on the Pacific Ocean under the jurisdiction of the United States, $165,000.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "$165,000," in line 5, page 132, and insert in lieu thereof "$225,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 132, line 5, strike out "$165,000" and insert "$225,000."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, Secretary Redfield, to whom the Pacific coast owes a very great obligation for the efficient way in which he has taken up the work of the Government on the Pacific coast and has taken up the matter of the proper development of these matters under his department, has especially attempted to impress upon the Appropriation Committee the necessity of an appropriation of $225,000 under this particular item for charting these Alaskan coasts and for wire-dragging these waters in the way suggested by my colleague [Mr. FALCONER], who proceded me a few moments ago, and affording some kind of an assurance to vessels that sail and steam along those coasts against rocks that are uncharted and are menaces to navigation that can not be seen or discovered except by such survey.

If you go on the Atlantic coast you have bells on your towers and bells on your shores and you have buoys on the top of the water and buoys underneath, aids in every direction of every conceivable kind sufficient, it would seem, to protect the ships from all the dangers that menace navigation; but over on the coast of Alaska, where the United States Government owns practically the whole domain, where we are now expending $35,000,000 to build a railroad in order to develop our own property, we have a great deal of trouble in obtaining the right kind of allowance for these necessary purposes. It is true enough that it is necessary to economize, but I believe here is a place where every cent that is put into this development is really retained by the Government in a more emphatic way than on other coasts, and I do not think it is right for Congress to allow these ships to go down continually and repeatedly, and when the Representatives from that section of the country come and tell you about it and tell you what the conditions are, still you hold back on the appropriations that are shown to be so necessary.

The Secretary of Commerce has shown great diligence and great care, and, as I said before, the Pacific coast owes to him a great obligation. When you go to the commercial bodies, the chambers of commerce, and among the people you find that Secretary of Commerce Redfield and his work have the confidence of the people who live out there, for they know that he is trying to do the right thing by the Government's interests in that section, and we think that the Committee on Appropriations ought to have granted the request that he made for the $225,000 allowance in this case. These vessels that make these charts or at least make these surveys are, of course, more or less expensive to keep up, and in the hearings the Secretary has shown that it is simply impossible for him to do the things that ought to be done without such an appropriation. I think that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations ought for one time to yield to the demands of the department in view of the fact that the Government is undertaking these extra lines of activity in Alaska. Under all the circumstances that section ought to have this necessary appropriation. We have already called the attention of the committee to the fact that vessels are wrecked out there simply because they do not know where it is safe to go; they do not know the rocks or the dangers or where the dangers to navigation exist, and all we want to do is to have the necessary provision and equipment to discover those points and have them charted so the mariner, as he looks at the chart, when he is going up or down that coast, can tell where it is safe to go and where it is not safe to go. Here is an excerpt from the hearings which shows how plainly and earnestly Secretary Redfield presented the matter to the committee:

Secretary REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a preliminary statement, and Mr. Tittmann will supplement it. The situation in which the Coast and Geodetic Survey finds itself in Alaska is a very unfortunate one. It is called upon to survey a coast which we have spoken of this morning as having 26,000 miles outlying, very dangerous, in which there have been serious disasters within the last five years, involving serious loss of life, with an equipment which is totally inadequate for the purpose and without the apparatus to do the work. I want to be very specific about that, in order that we may lay before you what we had in mind when this estimate was prepared and anticipate a number of questions which should appear here. If there had been provided for Alaska several years ago the wire-drag apparatus, which appears on page 478, and which is included in the $225,000 there appearing—if that apparatus had been used in Gambier Bay, Alaska, we should have saved the steamship State of California, with her 32 people. There is no way known of detecting what are known as pinnacle rocks except by the wire drag, and the coast of Alaska is full of them. It is a formation, I may say, which provides them particularly. The charts show, at the point where the State of California struck, ample depth of water. She had been in and out there many times, but this sharp pinnacle rock was entirely unknown and could not be found by any apparatus we then had or have now, and she finally hit it and went to the bottom in a few minutes with 32 people. So that we have not the physical apparatus to make useful there in the best sense the force of men we have.

Within a month I have personally been on board two of the vessels we have, and have examined them from end to end, and have seen a third vessel. Of the two vessels which we are using on that coast for this work one of them is 38 years old and the other 39 years old. Another one is 32 years old and another one is 27 years. They have earned an honorable rest.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they wooden or steel ships?

Secretary REDFIELD. Wooden ships One of them is a composite, wood over an iron hull. They are most badly equipped; that is to say, specifically, they have no electric-light apparatus of any kind. They are without steering engines and their power is a single-cylinder condensing engine of a type which has been discarded for over a quarter of a century. I personally examined the apparatus, went into the engine room, talked to the engineers, went into the officers' accommodations, and I will say to you that they are not such accommodations as you would yourself be willing to provide if you saw them. They are what was customary 38 years ago. Now, those vessels which are small, one of them 115 feet long and another one 140 feet long, are sent into the roughest seas that we have to survey and are engaged in a service where they must be kept at sea continuously. They are, of course, without wireless apparatus, because they have no electric power. They are very slow. The Gedney and the McArthur when they are driven hard only make 9 knots an hour.

There is a great waste of time and therefore a waste of money. In the mere going back and forth upon their duty they take a lot more time than they should. In short, the whole service, with one exception or with two exceptions, is equipped in a way which can only warrant the highest praise for the officers of that service who have made it last as long as it has, and I have rather reproved my friend and associate, Mr. Tittmann, for not having been a little more aggressive in respect of pushing for this longer. I want to say that before the new vessels and the added equipment we ask for can be provided I greatly fear that there may be serious accidents and loss of life on the coast from lack of apparatus, and, secondly, that these vessels will be out of repair before their successors can be built, so that they will be unsafe. If we assume that new ships could be had in two years, at that time the McArthur will be 40 years old and the Gedney 41 and out of all fitness for the work they are charged with doing. Therefore we have put in, at my request, equipment for wire drag apparatus for the Pacific coast such as we have on the Atlantic and which is far—I was going to say far worse needed there, although it is needed in both places—and I have put in a request for the vessels which we require to do this work which is of greater urgency than ever before.

I have received the following from the Seattle Commercial Club, which I commend to the consideration of Congress:

The English-speaking world has again been called upon to shudder at the recital of a disastrous wreck in Alaskan waters. For years petition after petition has been presented to the proper authorities requesting aids to navigation, better facilities, and more thorough survey of the inland waters of this the most valuable outside territory of the United States, but with little effect. Each passing year witnesses some disastrous wreck on this coast, which in almost every case is due to the absence of aids to navigation or the fact that the waters have been improperly charted.

Whereas on the morning of August 17 the steamship State of California struck a reef in Gambier Bay, southwestern Alaska, and in three minutes went to the bottom, but with the awful death toll of 32 souls as a relic of the direful event; and

Whereas this steamship was traveling over a route not usually covered by steamships, owing to the fact that it was engaged in aiding the industrial development of a frontier section of Alaska, specifically the development of fishing and other industries on Prince of Wales and other important islands of the western coast, whose waters are almost wholly uncharted and where practically no aids to navigation exist; and

Whereas for years past wrecks of all kinds, amounting to millions of dollars, have occurred in the Alaskan Archipelago, resulting in a tremendous financial loss as well as a large number of human lives: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the attention of the Congress of the United States be drawn to this condition and that Senators, Members of Congress representing the State of Washington, and the Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Alaska be requested to bring this matter directly before the House of Representatives, and that they be urged to introduce a bill in those bodies calling for a full investigation; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives and Delegate mentioned above be requested to procure, or have procured, for such investigation full facts regarding the uncharted waters of Alaska from the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Hydrographic Office of the United States Navy, as well as a report covering the need of further aids to navigation from the Bureau of Navigation and the United States Lighthouse Board; and be it further

Resolved, That the Commercial Club of the city of Seattle respectfully request immediate action on the part of the Representatives of the State of Washington in the matter of the above, owing to the urgency of the case and growing importance of Alaska and the steady increase in its shipping and commerce relations.
